Let us not forget that while our people are ready to support proper defense, yet those same people are not war minded. They want no more war. They do not want to exalt our Army and Navy beyond necessity. I am sure that all patriotic citizens want us to make sufficient appropriations to protect our citizens and our land. They want our flag at all times to demand the respect of all nations, and our people will be satisfied with nothing less.

In closing let me insist that it is our duty to eliminate all unnecessary items from this bill, reduce expenditures to the minimum in keeping with national security.

This bill carries approximately $555,000,000, which is a number of millions of dollars more than appropriated last year. It seems to me that there should be a reduction instead of an increase. The committee cites the fact that the committee has reduced the amount below the amount asked for by the President in his Budget. For this the committee is to be commended, but experimental drydocks at a cost of $10,000,000 each will entail endless upkeep and expense in the future. This is not warranted by necessity and this construction is not justified. As I stated in the beginning, I shall with regret vote against my first Army or Navy bill during my service in Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 1 additional minute to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I think the gentleman is clearly laboring under a misapprehension, because in the act of March 27, 1934, the Congress authorized the construction of two battleships and the replacement of further battleships as they reached their limit in accordance with the terms and provisions of the Washington-London Conference. It is not necessary to have any further hearings or any further authorization, because it is a part of a plan already authorized.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is rather amusing to listen to the remarks made by my distinguished friend from Minnesota, a former Governor of that great State [Mr. CHRISTIANSON], when he undertakes to claim credit for the Republican Party during the years from 1921 to 1933 in maintaining a proper national defense for our country.

I recognize that our political feeling sometimes prompts us to interpret things in a way most favorable to our own position. The fact remains, and the truth is, that the Washington Conference was held during the Harding administration, as a result of which we scrapped several hundred million dollars of naval vessels which were then under construction, and many of which were practically completed.

Mr. Chairman, coming forward to the present time, we find during the Republican administrations from 1921–33 a failure to engage in necessary building; a failure to make replacements; that the Navy was permitted and directed to use naval vessels that had gone beyond their normal life. In March 1933 our Navy, for all practical purposes, was hardly stronger than the French Navy, having in mind the defense of Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Great Britain had a navy stronger than ours. Japan had a navy stronger than ours, not only in vessels but in tonnage. Furthermore, both nations had made replacements with new, modern, up-to-date vessels.

This occurred during the 12 years of Republican administration. As the gentleman from Minnesota has injected this matter into the debate, I rise to show how negligent the past Republican administrations have been with reference to our national defense. Since the inauguration of President Roosevelt a different policy has existed. Our Navy has been strengthened, as it should have been before. President Roosevelt is giving our people a Navy for defense, and not for offense, that will assure protection of our people and our shores.

Now, my other Republican friend who spoke, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], talked about adequate national defense. What is adequate national defense? If I addressed that question to an audience of 1,000 persons, each one might well ask, "Just what do you mean?"

An adequate national defense, in my opinion, is the building up of our Navy to the limits allowed by our treaties with other nations. Such is not a general statement but is a specific statement as to what I consider as constituting adequate national defense. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL RESEARCH LABORATORY

For laboratory and research work and other necessary work of the Naval Research Laboratory for the benefit of the naval service, including operation and maintenance of a laboratory, additions to equipment necessary properly to carry on work in hand, maintenance of buildings and grounds, temporary employment of such scientific and technical civilian assistants as may become necessary, and subscriptions to technical periodicals, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, $300,000: Provided, That $50,000 of this appropriation shall be available for the temporary employment of civilian scientists and technicists required on special problems: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $120,000, in addition to the amount authorized by the preceding proviso.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I shall attempt not to use the entire 5 minutes, but I do want to make an observation with respect to what was said about scrapping $176,000,000 worth of ships during the Harding administration.

This may look like a sheer waste of energy and money and yet the strict fact is that we scrapped seven superdreadnaughts and four cruisers in 1922 for very specific purposes. The first specific purpose, as I conceive it, was that we assumed a position of moral leadership in the world for the purpose of bringing other nations into line so far as disarmament was concerned. The second reason was that Japan, Great Britain, and the United States were sitting around the table for the purpose of approving a treaty that bore the celebrated 5–5–3 ratio.

What was the condition at the time this conference was being held? Japan was holding out and continually insisting that she should have the right to build just as many ships as she liked and she did not care to subscribe to a 5–5–3 limitation. What could she do when the United States of America assumed leadership and said, "We will point the way, we will seek to make as impressive a contribution toward disarmament as we possibly can, and we are willing here and now to assume the responsibility of discontinuing and destroying $176,000,000 worth of naval handiwork that embrace the money of the taxpayers of the country"?

Under these circumstances there was nothing for that rising oriental power to do except to follow the United States, and I want to make it clear to this committee that while we may talk about scrapping $176,000,000 worth of ships involving the taxpayers' money and that it may look like a blot upon the escutcheon of the Harding administration, the fact is it was an excellent investment. The United States, for once at least in its history, assumed to give direction to the thinking of the world, assumed to take a position of leadership in the hope that the other nations would follow suit.

Mr. LUNDEEN and Mr. VINSON of Georgia rose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me first finish my statement.

Unfortunately, however, they did not follow suit. It was a very painful but worth while lesson, so far as the United States was concerned, and on the basis of what happened in 1922 we can feel reasonably safe in going along with the naval appropriation bill until such time as we eliminate suspicion and jealousy and commercial rivalry, which are the basis of all wars.

It is a grand, magnificent bit of futility to stand here and oppose a reasonable naval appropriation bill, thinking that armament and naval appropriations are the incentive for war. This is a lot of balderdash and poppycock. Nobody would say, for instance, that a police force of 1,600 men here in Washington is an incentive to crime. Nobody would contend with any degree of logic or reason that battleships and cruisers and destroyers are any incentive to get into war. There are other reasons for war, and we have been going along seeking to oppose appropriation bills for military and naval defense thinking we are making a contribution to peace when we are doing nothing of the kind.

Sometimes I think that in proportion, as we lay an aggravated burden upon the pocketbook of the Nation, we make the Nation conscious of our purpose. Strike the average citizen in his pocketbook and ultimately he will come to the conclusion that something ought to be done about it. All these years since the Civil War we have been going along supinely and indifferently thinking so little about a philosophy of peace or the development of peace consciousness. When this can be effected in all the nations of the world, that will be when we may stop pyramiding large armament in the Orient, in the United States, in Great Britain, and elsewhere. We simply have not got at the cause. We are confusing cause and effect, and let nobody hesitate about voting for adequate defense, or even for this naval appropriation bill, with the exception of possibly one or two items, thinking that by so doing he is saving his gracious position in behalf of those who are in favor of peace.

I yield to no one in this body so far as a desire for universal peace is concerned, but we must get at the real root of the matter. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 5, line 4, strike out "$300,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000,000."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment I do not in any way desire to increase the total appropriation under this bill; but I do desire to question the advisability of providing only $300,000 for scientific research work in a game of this kind.

The appropriation calls for an expenditure of a little more than a half a billion dollars. As I study the question of naval armament, we know that other countries are spending tens of millions of dollars in research, and that it is a game which requires the greatest attention to this particular phase of the work that can possibly be given.

If we hope to develop the latest scientific improvements, if we hope to be equal to foreign nations who have spent millions in such work and are spending millions in such work every year, we should make it possible for the Navy Department to develop a naval research laboratory equal to any in the world in order that we may keep pace with other nations in scientific research, so that we shall advance far beyond anything heretofore developed by our Nation in the matter of national defense, which includes communications, explosives, and other items. We must not fail in this.

While the public does not know of the important procedure other countries are pursuing in connection with scientific research work, there are men in this country who do know what is going on.

In my opinion as a layman and private citizen, this $300,000 is not at all sufficient for research to accompany an expenditure involving more than half a billion dollars.

I know that if we went out to spend $100,000,000 in any private field of achievement you would provide three or four hundred thousand dollars for scientific research work. I would like to ask the acting chairman if there are any provisions anywhere else in the bill which gives us more money for scientific research work than is provided in this item?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I shall undertake to answer the question in my time if the gentleman will permit me to do so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the development of the airplane and the dirigible is fast breaking down ocean barriers which have afforded us a natural protection. We now must be prepared to seek protection by science so that we can develop defensive and offensive means of protecting our fleet from modern mechanical warfare. The first step in this line of defense and offense lies in the development of suitable equipment, which must receive its initial development in our highly developed naval research laboratory. The naval research laboratory must become one of the strongest arms of our national defense, and I should like to inject this at this time in connection with what was said a moment ago. Had the doctrine and philosophy of Secretary Stimson been followed out, I should like to ask if Japan would have dared make the announcement which she handed to our Secretary of State on December 29, 1934, which, in my opinion, led to the cancelation of the Nine Power Treaty, and which today brings us under a set of circumstances wherein the United States, Great Britain, and France are traveling this road alone, with Italy and Japan out on the side. And it brings us down to this very bill where we have to say in the most unusual terms:

Not more than two capital ships, as replacements of over-age capital ships, to be undertaken only in the event that capital-ship-replacement construction is commenced by any of the other signatory powers to the Treaty for the Limitation and Reduction of Naval Armament signed at London, April 22, 1930, $115,300,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment; and in answer to a question propounded by the gentleman proposing the amendment, I advise him that at the present time the Navy has an experimental laboratory at Annapolis, it has one at the navy yard in New York, and also it is carrying on experimental work through the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics at Langley Field. The real reason that this amendment should not be agreed to is that the gentleman is evidently confusing the research work of the entire Navy Department with the research laboratory at Belvue. The research laboratory at Belvue deals only with radio and sound investigations. It is not the general laboratory of the Navy Department. The subcommittee went to that station at Belvue last year and made a careful survey. We increased that appropriation to met their needs; and in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, this station to which the gentleman proposes to give an additional $700,000 could not use it during the coming fiscal year. There is no purpose in making an additional allotment of $700,000 to just one part of the Navy research work throughout this country. I hope, therefore, that the Committee will vote down this amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The only point I desire to make here——

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yielded to the gentleman for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am going to ask a question. The only point I desire to make clear is this. I want to know if this $300,000 which is provided in the bill is the total amount which is being appropriated for scientific work in connection with the naval operations of this country, and if it is not, what other appropriations are being provided in this bill or in other bills?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, the gentleman was talking to someone when I made the statement a moment ago which covered the inquiry. I shall be very glad to repeat it, however. This is not the only appropriation carried in the naval appropriation bill for experimental work. The Navy now has experimental laboratories at Annapolis, at the navy yard in New York, and experiments are being carried on by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics at Langley Field, Va., and at other places, and in practically all departments of naval activity. The Bureau of Standards, of course, is a Government agency that serves all Government departments, including the Navy. I call attention to the fact that the gentleman's amendment reaches only one small branch of the naval experimental activities, located at Belvue, which does nothing but deal with radio and sound investigations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Where in this bill or any other bill are these things provided for?

Mr. UMSTEAD. They are provided for in the appropriations for the various units under the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: Page 5, line 5, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$160,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL PRISON FARMS AND PRISON PERSONNEL

For the operation, maintenance, and improvement of naval prison farms and for the welfare, recreation, and education of prison personnel, to be expended under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, $14,270: Provided, That expenditures hereunder shall not exceed the aggregate receipts covered into the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that my enforced attendance on another committee prevented me from accepting the allotment of time kindly made to me by the subcommittee chairman on general debate, as it had been my desire to occupy a little time on this bill in that way.

When one has held fixed views on matters of great national concern over a long period of time, under widely varying stresses and circumstances, he naturally attaches more or less weight to such views, and it is his duty to impart them to his fellows for whatever they may be worth at the risk of whatever criticism there may be to himself.

Over a long period of time I have accumulated some observations, perhaps cynical observations, regarding questions of international relationships, of peace treaties, neutrality laws, and preparedness. I do not have the time now to go into my views on this question, but I shall avail myself of the liberty of extending them in my remarks in the RECORD.

Briefly, it is my fixed conviction, based on a long life of observation, that international friendship is a diplomatic myth and that peace treaties and neutrality laws are only as strong as the will and the power to defend them, and just as weak.

There is another reason, perhaps personal and sentimental, why I should like to have availed myself of some time in general debate. In brief, it is this: Twenty-four years ago this month on a naval appropriation bill, as a young man, I stood back in that aisle and participated in the debate.

Some of you know that there is a hiatus of just exactly 20 years in my congressional record. It is a rather interesting thing, after a lapse of 24 years, to dig back into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and see what your views were then. I have done that, and it is a matter of some assurance and satisfaction for me to know that I may stand here today and read my remarks from that long-gone debate of 24 years ago to state my position on this naval appropriation bill. I was then, as I am now, a big-navy Democrat. I was then, as I am now, for a full measure of preparedness in every line of national defense.

They say that history repeats itself. Yesterday on this floor in the debate I heard the same question asked that I heard in that long-gone debate: "For what are you preparing?"

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I do not move fast enough. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. They asked, "What war do you want to prepare for?" Gentlemen asked that question 24 years ago. Gentlemen said on this floor, "Why do you want to build up a navy; there will never be another war." The man who afterward became minority leader on that side of the aisle, a very able man who served in this body for 26 years, said this country would not need to build another battleship or any other kind of warship for 25 years.

When was that? That was in May 1912. In that body there then the living survivors of two wars in this country, the Civil War and the Spanish-American War. Behind them there was a history of 5,000 years of war and almost nothing but war among the human race on earth, and yet they stood here and argued that we needed no navy because there would never be another war. I asked the gentleman from Iowa yesterday about the question asked of Gen. Leonard Wood in Boston when he was making a preparedness speech in 1916. A heckler wanted to know for what war General Wood wanted to prepare. I pointed out that that question was asked in 1916, and that in 1 year history had answered it by the precipitation of this country into the greatest war in human history. In my judgment, the thing is to be prepared. If you ask me what is adequate national defense, I would say, "It is defense measured by the power and responsibility of the Nation." When you want a navy you want it now. You want it at once. You do not have any time to build navies. You do not have any time to prepare after war breaks.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Might we not just as well ask a man when he buys a lock to put on the door, "For what thief are you guarding against?"

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. There is just as much sense to it.

I beg your indulgence to read a few lines from my remarks made 24 years ago. I quote from the RECORD of May 28, 1912, at page 7338:

> One day during this session our socialistic brother, the gentleman from Milwaukee [Mr. Berger]—

And, by the way, he was a lovable man and a very popular Member of this body—> made what I thought was a very pat and apt suggestion, and that was that neutrality is a good thing if only you are able to enforce it.

> Mr. Chairman, I subscribe most heartily to that proposition. I was one of the thirty-odd Members on this side of the House who voted for two battleships in each of the two naval appropriation bills in the Sixty-first Congress, and I regret very much that the pending naval appropriation bill does not make similar provision. [Applause.]

The applause I quote from the RECORD. The occasion of the applause was that the Democratic majority at that time had held a caucus in this Chamber to pledge its membership against the construction of even one battleship in that session of Congress, in which only thirty-odd of us opposed the resolution. Continuing my quotation:

> While I represent the State which above all others in the Union is secure from foreign attack or invasion, I take some pride in the fact that I am as much in favor of an adequate Navy as any Member of this body who represents a seaboard district.

Quoting further along from my remarks on that occasion, I said:

> I confess, perhaps it is because I am so dense, that I can no more distinguish between a defensive and an aggressive navy than I can between good trusts and bad trusts.

That was an issue in those days, good trusts and bad trusts.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The following is from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 28, 1912, pages 7338–7339.

> According to my way of reasoning, a navy is either adequate or inadequate, measured by the power and responsibility of the nation. I can conceive of no other practicable test. This is one case where, in my judgment, a half loaf is not better than no bread. A weak navy would provoke, not prevent, trouble. Either we should have and maintain a first-class navy or none. It takes 2 years to build a modern fighting ship and so long to build a modern navy that you must keep building. When you want a navy, you want it badly and at once. One naval battle decided the war between China and Japan. One naval battle decided the war between Russia and Japan. Two naval battles decided the war between the United States and Spain. In these four engagements, three navies were destroyed and their countries humbled and driven from power for decades; and unless the human race has suddenly lost its instinct of the ages, other powers will meet the same fate.
> Members of this House participated in the greatest Civil War in all history. Since then the world has witnessed the terrible Franco-Prussian war, the war between Turkey and Greece, the war between England and the Transvaal, the war between China and Japan, the war between Japan and Russia, the war between the United States and Spain, of which we also have survivors in this House; so that, within the memories of yet vigorous and active men, every great nation of the world—England, the United States, Germany, France, Spain, Italy, Turkey, China, Japan, all of them—have been involved in war. Shall we see no more terrible wars? To ask this question in the light of history and the racial instinct is to answer it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The answer, much as I deplore it, will probably be the same answer that was given to the question asked of Gen. Leonard Wood as Boston in 1916.

I am for preparedness and I am for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if I may, I want to expand briefly on those instrumentalities of peace on which some gentlemen appear to rely rather than on preparedness measures. I indicated them at the outset of my remarks.

I read recently an expression of regret by the representative here in Washington of a foreign power over statements made by a distinguished and authoritative Member of the other body, which statements this representative considered as in violation of the "traditional friendship", as he expressed it, between our two countries. The only fear I would have of pretenses of friendship from such a source would be that they might tend to lull our people into a false sense of security and encourage defenselessness.

How lacking in substance is international friendship is most strikingly shown by the fact that within 20 years after the Revolutionary War, France and the United States were in a state of incipient war over treaty differences, with American warships engaged in French waters, and again in 1866, when the United States compelled the withdrawal of France from Mexico. I mention these historical facts in no spirit of reproach to France. I believe if lasting friendship between nations were possible, it would be possible between the United States and France.

The United States fed Belgium during the Great War and paid for the dirt to rebuild it after the war, yet Belgium promptly repudiated her financial debt to this country. That was her requital of the finest display of generosity ever shown by one nation to another. Belgium, which owed us everything, has paid nothing; while Finland, which owed us nothing except the money she borrowed, has paid everything. Belgium also joined the little gold bloc which frustrated the efforts of this country at the London Economic Conference to stabilize international currencies and exchanges.

The United States by a virtual tour de force set up the Republic of Panama, transformed it from a region of death-laden swamps and jungles into one of the most healthful spots on the continent, and built across it the greatest engineering project in history, giving it a permanent and important place on the map of the world, yet Panama was the only nation that went into court and brought suit against the United States to exact payment of our canal leasehold obligations in gold at the predevaluation price. Her attitude toward us has always been one of truculence. It is a question if there is not a more friendly attitude toward this country in the Republic of Colombia, from which we virtually wrested Panama, and to whom at the last session of Congress we authorized the payment of $25,000,000 in liquidation of the alleged damage.

Even our "little brown brothers", who could not repay in centuries what we have done for them, a record of generosity and abnegation without precedent or parallel, are demanding payment in gold at the predevaluation price of a deposit of $23,000,000 in the United States Treasury, which deposit it is now claimed was in silver and certainly not in gold.

I do not mention these cases as singling out for disparagement the Panamanians or the Filipinos; I merely mention them as exhibits in making out my case against international friendship. There are doubtless others, or there would be others under like provocation. If friendship between nations has any place in the preservation of international peace, it is entirely too fragile a restraint to withstand any serious strain.

Nor is the writing of treaties any assurance of international peace. The treaty to protect the neutrality of Belgium and preserve it from invasion was a scrap of paper. The first military move of Germany, a party to the treaty, was to trample that helpless and inoffensive little power into the dust. Now Germany has not only completely scrapped the World War peace treaty, which she signed under duress, but also the Locarno Pact, to guarantee European frontiers against militarization, which she voluntarily signed long after the war.

The Nine Power Pact is a scrap of paper. That pact guaranteed the political sovereignty and territorial integrity of China, yet for 4 years now, Province by Province, China is being dismembered and taken over by a signatory to the pact.

The United States has 33 peace treaties, negotiated under the administration of Woodrow Wilson, slumbering in the archives of the State Department. They are forgotten.

The Member of the other body to whom I referred a moment ago called attention to the fact that while peace societies and movements pursue the procuring of these peace agreements with evangelistic zeal, yet when the agreements are flouted, when they are violated by the very signatories, nothing is done about it, nothing is said about it.

What is said of treaties of peace may be said of neutrality laws. I voted for the neutrality resolution in the last session of Congress and the amended resolution in this session. I would have voted for the original bill still further extending embargoes to materials which may be used for military purposes. But I would vote for such measures rather as a gesture in the direction of peace than as any insurance of peace. Germany found ways and means to involve this country in war, presuming that this country was powerless to retaliate, and ways and means may be found to involve it in future wars. Neutrality laws, like peace treaties, must depend for sanction upon the power behind them.

Mr. Chairman, the Monroe Doctrine is said to have preserved the Western Hemisphere inviolate from foreign conquest, but there is only one nation in the Western Hemisphere which could have promulgated and enforced the Monroe Doctrine. Even without the Monroe Doctrine, the certainty that any invading power would have to face this great Nation would be the restraining influence, and if it were not for this power the map of South America today would be like the map of Africa, a Joseph's coat of many colors to indicate the colonial possessions of a half dozen European powers.

A differentiation is being made between wars of invasion of American territory and wars not involving such invasion. May I ask the question, Within which category would fall the protection from foreign invasion of any nation on the American Continent? Supposing a foreign power were to invade Central or South America. This was more than a supposition at the time of the outbreak of the World War. Then a great European power envisioned just such an enterprise. Perhaps the contempt of Europe or of the world for the ability of the United States to defend itself is not now so great. If not, that is one of the benefits to be set up against the terrible cost to us of that war.

I favored adherence to the League of Nations and the World Court. The chief objection to the League of Nations is that its covenants provide sanctions. The trouble with sanctions is that they call for enforcement, which involves military measures. That is the trouble with all peace pacts and treaties. It is also the trouble with neutrality laws. They are not self-executing. Their violation calls for redress, and the circle is complete. The end of the circle is war.

The modus operandi of the League of Nations is that the aggressor nation shall be determined and all the sanctions of the League, one after another, invoked against it jointly by all the other members, the final sanction being military force. In the case of Manchuria, the aggressor nation was determined and condemned. There the procedure stopped. It is agreed that in the case of Manchuria the League of Nations failed. It is failing in Africa. Nothing short of the complete procedure of the League of Nations can stop war, and the world is not ready for any such procedure. If we want neutrality, we must be prepared to defend our neutrality. If we want peace, we must be prepared to defend our peace.

If I may write the defense laws of the country, I care not who writes its neutrality laws or its peace treaties. My formula for the national defense is simple. It is to be so ready that the other party will hesitate to start.

The term "adequate national defense" is not self-defining, but standards of comparison are available. It would embrace, if not what Woodrow Wilson called "incomparably the greatest navy in the world", at least a navy equal to the strongest, and an air force of equal rank. It would embrace the framework of a land force capable of prompt and great expansion. And what is equally important, it would embrace research and experimentation in every instrumentality entering into warfare. We should keep thoroughly abreast in point of knowledge as far as ascertainable with what other nations are doing and our own laboratories should be busy.

I abhor war and all its evils. I regard its coming, not with anticipation but with dread. But I cannot go along with the view that the way to avoid war is to stick your head in the sand and expose your rear elevation to the horizon. There are six great powers in the world besides the United States. Two of them are now at war, one in Asia and the other in Africa. A third has flung its gauntlet in the face of Europe. England has just voted one and a half billions for defense. For this country to neglect or slight its national defenses in the face of such a world would be living in a fool's paradise. The wisest counsel ever given this country was by a great progressive President, the first Roosevelt, who said: "Speak softly and carry a big stick; you will go far."

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the remarks of my distinguished friend from Colorado, particularly that part in which he referred to statements he made upon this floor 24 years ago. It appears that even then Members of Congress and people generally throughout the country were speaking of an "adequate" or "inadequate" navy. Even then the expression "adequate navy" was paramount in the minds of those discussing the question of national defense; but apparently—and with all deference to my good friend the gentleman from Colorado, for whom I have such a high regard—it seems that even 24 years ago people were omitting to define what they meant by "adequate." In other words, they said "adequate", but they did not say adequate for what. It seems to me this question cannot be properly discussed unless we decide first of all for what purpose we want an adequate navy. Do we want a navy adequate to protect us from invasion, or do we want a navy adequate to enable us to carry on a war of aggression? I submit that if we are to have a navy adequate for the purpose of carrying on a war of aggression, then this bill is perfectly justified; then I do not believe we are appropriating too much money. But if we are to content ourselves with a navy adequate to protect us against invasion, adequate for the purpose of protecting ourselves against any probable enemy, then we are spending far too much money today on a navy.

In my humble judgment a large navy today under conditions of modern warfare can be used successfully for only one purpose—that of aggression, of foreign war. Today, when we speak of national defense, there is no place in the picture for a large navy. Admiral Bristol in 1932 made the statement that a navy would not be used for the purpose of protecting our harbors or our coast lines; that we would have land fortifications, mines, submarines, and the Air Corps for this purpose. Secretary of the Navy Swanson recently stated that a large navy was needed primarily for the purpose of protecting our foreign trade and foreign policy. I submit that the question of national defense does not include the protection of our foreign trade [applause]; and if we are going to consider this proposition solely from the standpoint of national defense, if we are going to listen to the demands of the American people who are against our preparations for a foreign war, we will kick this bill out of the window; we will recommit it to the Committee on Appropriations and have the committee bring back a bill that will eliminate from the Navy all such activities and agencies as are designed and are primarily useful only for foreign and aggressive war. We are going crazy in this country on the subject of building a huge navy, something that under no possible circumstances can give us any real defense. True, it might make us more powerful; it might throw the fear of our Navy into the hearts of some small countries; but a large navy is not needed for the purpose of protecting our people, protecting our own country.

We are spending a lot of money for a huge navy that can be used only for aggressive or foreign warfare, and doing this at a time when millions of our people are crying for bread. In my judgment it is ridiculous; in my judgment it is a waste of money to pass this huge appropriation. In my judgment we ought to reorganize the Army and Navy into one department of national defense, for defense only, and forget about building a navy second to none. We do not need a large navy in this country to protect our own people and our own property. In my judgment a large navy is merely a threat to the peace of the world. [Applause.]

Newport, R. I., $125,000.

Mr. RISK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. RISK: Page 7, line 18, after the words "Rhode Island", strike out "$125,000" and insert "$198,000."

Mr. RISK. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment to increase the appropriation for the naval training station at Newport, R. I., by $73,000 is to rehabilitate in some measure the physical condition of the buildings at that training station. The training station at Newport was established as a permanent station in 1883, and since that time has been administered efficiently and has done remarkable work. With the exception of 2 years, from 1933 to 1935, it has been open. It was closed completely from July 15, 1933, to July 15, 1935, at which time it was reopened. For 3 years there have been no appropriations for repairs. It is obvious to anyone that after being closed continuously for 2 solid years, deterioration must have set in to a great extent in those buildings.

Mr. Chairman, at this station there are over 100 buildings, 50 of which are permanent brick buildings. When the station reopened in July of last year I saw with my own eyes the state of repair of those buildings. I went over every inch of ground and I was in every one of the buildings. I saw not only the enlisted personnel, but some of the trainees, actually engaged in cleaning up debris and patching up the walls and roofs of those buildings.

The committee proposes, and the proposal is included in this bill, to include for alteration and repairs the sum of $7,700. This amount is ridiculously low. Anyone knows that $7,700 is too small an amount to take care of necessary repairs and alterations of buildings which are valued by the Navy Department at four and three-quarters million dollars, but which we feel are worth between ten and twelve million dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I speak for the thousand trainees there, for the 212 men who make up the enlisted personnel at the station, and for the civilian employees who have been precluded from employment by reason of the fact there has been no appropriation made to take care of this station. The sailors have been forced to do the work themselves and the civilian tradesmen and skilled mechanics have been excluded by virtue of this situation.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to make just a very brief statement.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation bill carries an increase of $10,000 over the appropriation made for this station last year. The Budget estimate was $135,000, but due largely to savings we hope may be effected in the purchase of oil we reduced the amount by $10,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to believe we have provided for all essential needs, and I therefore trust the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. RISK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. RISK. Was not certain information given to the subcommittee in connection with an item of $66,000 which was asked to cover repairs and alterations for the training-station buildings at Newport, R. I.?

Mr. UMSTEAD. As I recall, there was no such estimate, and I am informed by the clerk of the committee that no such estimate was received by the committee.

Mr. RISK. Did the gentleman or the subcommittee receive any correspondence from the citizens of Newport and myself on this point?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I did not receive it.

Mr. RISK. Mr. Chairman, I may say there is considerable correspondence in the files of the subcommittee on this point.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RISK) there were—yeas 24, noes 43.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Norfolk, Va., $235,000, of which sum $10,000 shall be available immediately.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

Amendment offered by Mr. COLDEN: On page 7, between lines 21 and 22, insert:

"Naval athletic and training field, San Pedro, Calif., acquisition by the Secretary of the Navy, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, at a cost not to exceed $225,000, the premises known as the Navy Athletic Field, San Pedro, Calif., and adjacent lots now occupied as a Navy athletic field. Upon acquisition such property shall be maintained as a naval athletic and training field, to be known as the Mississippi Memorial Athletic Field, in memory of the 48 officers and sailors who lost their lives in the U. S. S. Mississippi disaster in 1924."

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to remind the Members of Congress of a very unhappy day, June 12, 1924, when one of the greatest peacetime tragedies occurred in the United States Navy by an explosion that occurred on the battleship Mississippi during practice maneuvers off the shores of San Pedro, Calif. The Pacific Fleet was engaged in maneuvers and practice firing when an explosion caused the instantaneous death of 48 men, officers and seamen. The crew in a turret of the Mississippi had touched off an electric firing signal, which failed to explode. The crew was confined in the turret, during which time gas was generated in the gun and then ignited. In addition to the 48 men killed, a number were injured.

The naval funeral services of these 48 officers and men were conducted on the athletic field of the Pacific Fleet at San Pedro, Calif., provided by the San Pedro Chamber of Commerce. These men who lost their lives in this great tragedy came from many States of the Union. It was not only a tragedy for the Navy but it brought sorrow and tears to a number of patriotic American homes. It was one of the most unhappy tragedies that has occurred in peacetime history of the American Navy.

The Mississippi was known as the "happy ship" and the commander was Capt. W. D. Brougherton. The Mississippi was proud of its 14 star athletes and held the Navy athletic championship for 4 years. Many were the victories and many were the athletic battles fought on the famous Navy athletic field at San Pedro.

It is to be regretted that the dependents of these naval officers and men have been meagerly provided for by the United States Government. The families that sustained loss and who have suffered bereavement because of this catastrophe are scattered throughout the Nation. The obligation due the dependents of these officers and men has been limited because of the general laws prescribing the benefits allowed to the dependents.

Mr. Chairman, it seems most fitting that the rich and generous and patriotic Government of the United States should take some steps at least to preserve the memory of these heroes who died in their country's service. Those who die on the battlefield or in a naval combat are warned of the dangers that confront them. They have an opportunity to fortify themselves against the dangers which they must face. When they are in such an engagement they recognize the impending doom of death. Not so with the noble and courageous men who lost their lives in the turret of the Mississippi. They entertained the idea that theirs was a harmless exercise. When the day's work was done they looked forward to a return to the base at San Pedro and were happy in the anticipation of the events of tomorrow. Without a second of warning a mysterious flash and their lives were snuffed out. Trapped by walls of steel, with no hope of escape, their lives and their destinies were ended instantly. And these officers and men gave their lives in the service of their country as patriotically and as nobly as those who die in the heat and terror of battle.

Mr. Chairman, it seems most appropriate that a memorial should be dedicated to the memory of these heroes who met an untimely death while at the post of duty. It also appears that the athletic field where the final obsequies of these departed heroes were held would be a most fitting site for memorial purposes. It was upon this field that the men of the Mississippi had won some of their most brilliant athletic victories. It was upon this field that for a period of 15 years the men of the Pacific Fleet have enjoyed many happy recreational hours. It was upon this Navy athletic field that many athletic contests have been won and lost. It is a field that has attracted the attendance not only of the major naval officials, but also of thousands of the civil population. It is a field that is deeply steeped in the athletic traditions of the United States Navy, the arena of the living, the funeral concourse of the dead.

This athletic field has been furnished by the San Pedro Chamber of Commerce for 15 years without cost to the Navy. The San Pedro Chamber of Commerce has not only paid the rent of this land, but upon numerous occasions has made other contributions to aid and to provide proper facilities.

Unfortunately, the owners of this land now propose to subdivide and offer it for sale. The tract consists of about 23 acres. It is located about 90 feet above the water front and adjacent to the tidewater of Los Angeles Harbor. It is the most accessible point for the major part of the Pacific Fleet. It is but a few minutes away from the battleships within Los Angeles Harbor. There is no other tract so available, so well drained, so accessible to transportation as is this athletic field.

A number of the officials of the Pacific Fleet, including several admirals, who are fully acquainted with the situation, have heartily endorsed the purchase of this area for a permanent Navy athletic field. The purchase of this field would serve a double purpose. It would be a most suitable and fitting memorial for the death of the officers and men who lost their lives on June 12, 1924, but it would serve as a permanent arena for future athletic activities. It would provide a valuable contribution to the welfare and happiness of the men of our fleet.

The Pacific Fleet is based at Los Angeles Harbor—right at the door of San Pedro, Calif. Because of the easy access to open waters, because of the continual sunshine and absence of fog, the unusual visibility makes this location the natural headquarters for the Pacific Fleet. Furthermore, the geographical location, being the nearest suitable base in California to the Panama Canal, and an advantageous point relative to the Hawaiian Islands and to the northerly shores of California, Oregon, and Washington, make this the logical base for the Pacific Fleet. Already keen observers and those who are concerned about national defense believe that the construction of a Navy base at San Pedro is inevitable. The purchase of this athletic field, which I have designated as "the Mississippi Memorial Athletic Field", is timely and opportune. This purchase should be made before this land is subdivided and sold. I am informed it will cost approximately $225,000 if purchased as a unit. If subdivided into lots, it would bring a much larger amount.

I introduced a bill on July 8, 1935, designated as H. R. 8761, which provides for the establishment of the Mississippi Memorial Athletic Field as before described. I desire to not only interest the Members of Congress but to enlist their aid in the establishment of this fitting memorial athletic field in memory of the 48 officers and men of the invincible United States Navy whose tragic death shocked the entire country on that fatal day, June 12, 1924.

The following is a list of the names of the officers and enlisted men, United States Navy, who lost their lives in the explosion aboard the U. S. S. Mississippi on June 12, 1924, together with names and addresses of nearest relatives, furnished by the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department:

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the names of the 48 officers and men who lost their lives in this accident, together with their rank, next of kin, and address.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN] that it is legislation on an appropriation bill in that the project mentioned in the amendment is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard?

Mr. COLDEN. No. I recognize the point of order. I just desired to get this information before the Members of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment on its face contains language which is legislation in contravention of the rule which provides that legislation shall not be in order on an appropriation bill, and, therefore, the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Instruction: For postgraduate instruction of officers in other than civil government and literature, and for special instruction, education, and individual training of officers and enlisted men at home and abroad, including maintenance of students abroad, except aviation training and submarine training otherwise appropriated for, $187,000: Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for or on account of any expense incident to giving special educational courses or postgraduate instruction to officers with view to qualifying them or better qualifying them for the performance of duties required to be performed by or in pursuance of law by officers of the Supply Corps, Construction Corps, or Corps of Civil Engineers, except present students and except such officers who are commissioned in such corps or who have not been commissioned in the line of the Navy more than 3 years prior to the commencement of such educational courses or postgraduate instruction.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Page 8, line 24, strike out "three" and insert "five."

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to correct what I believe to be a mistake and an injustice. The language I seek to correct provides that no graduate of the Naval Academy shall be eligible for admission to any of the postgraduate schools of the Navy which are maintained by the Supply Corps, the Construction Corps, and the Corps of Civil Engineers unless his course of postgraduate instruction shall actually commence within 3 years of the date of his commission.

A year ago there was similar language in the naval appropriation bill. A number of young men in the Naval Academy class of 1932 had been designated to attend these postgraduate schools. When Congress passed an appropriation act with a provision similar to this the orders to these young men had to be rescinded because the date of their commission was in June of 1932, when they graduated from the academy, while the course of instruction in the postgraduate schools did not begin until September. Therefore their orders were countermanded and these men were returned to duty and the door of opportunity in the direction of their ambitions has been permanently closed to these young men.

I do not believe it was the intention of Congress to do this and I offer the amendment to make them eligible. My amendment does not enlarge the appropriation in any way. It simply enlarges the eligible list to include the young men of the class of 1932 who were designated to postgraduate schools a year ago and were denied the opportunity of entering those schools by a provision similar to this.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call to the attention of the members of the Committee the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman involves the same question which was fought out during the consideration of the appropriation bill for the present fiscal year. The 3-year limitation which now appears in this bill was placed in the appropriation bill last year.

I think most members of the Committee will recall the debate at that time between the distinguished chairman of the legislative committee and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY]. The House decided last year it would stand by the recommendation of the subcommittee on appropriations and inserted this provision in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this is very important. I should like very much to be able to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman, but I cannot do so and I urge the Committee to vote it down.

Before this provision was put in the bill the Navy Department could wait for 10, 12, or more years after a man had been graduated from the Naval Academy, send him to a special training school, then give him some position in keeping with the special training which he had had or take him out of the specialization for which he had been equipped and send him back into the line. Your committee felt this was not a proper procedure. The Navy itself was somewhat divided on it, but it is our present information that the Navy is now convinced that this provision is sound and from now on they will apply it as strictly as they can, and as we have requested them to do in the legislation passed by the Congress. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Gladly.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I fully agree with the soundness of the position taken by the gentleman and by the committee. I do not wish to remove the limitation and make people who are 15 or 20 years out of the Naval Academy eligible for these schools. I fully agree they should be young men, and I simply wish to correct an injustice which was done to a small group of men last year who were denied entrance to the schools through what I believe was a mistake and make them eligible.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield any further, but I desire to ask if the purpose of the amendment is not really to provide for one man.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. No; there are half a dozen, I understand.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman would not be willing to change the policy of the Navy in this regard just to take care of or correct an inconvenience to six men?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This provision would only be in effect 1 year. It is a temporary provision and would have to be reenacted each year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK of New York) there were—ayes 19, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE MARINE SCHOOLS, ACT OF MARCH 4, 1911

To reimburse the State of California, $25,000; the State of Massachusetts, $25,000; the State of New York, $25,000; and the State of Pennsylvania, $25,000, for expenses incurred in the maintenance and support of marine schools in such States as provided in the act authorizing the establishment of marine schools, etc., approved March 4, 1911 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 1121), and for the maintenance and repair of the particular vessels loaned by the United States to the said States on the date of the approval of this act for use in connection with such State marine schools, $90,000, and no other vessels shall be furnished by or through the Navy Department; in all, $190,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that our State nautical schools have set up qualifications for entry in such a manner that candidates for school-ship training from any State other than that in which the school ship is located are compelled to pay a higher tuition on account of their out-of-State residence.

I see no reason why such tuition penalties should be applied against any American boy who seeks to train himself for a career at sea.

Mr. UMSTEAD. That policy is determined by the State in which the school is located.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I cannot see any reason why a young man from Colorado, say, should be discriminated against if he desires to enter a California school to which the Federal Government is contributing $25,000. If Federal funds are to be appropriated for such nautical school ships, whether it be all or any part of the expense involved, then let us reestablish these schools as Federal merchant marine academies, with equal tuition for all regardless of what States of the Union any applicant may come from, and, instead of continuing under the present policy of appropriating Federal funds for a State nautical school, that these schools be reestablished as Federal merchant marine academies, so that there shall be one each, as follows: One on the Atlantic coast, one on the Gulf coast, one on the Pacific coast, and one on the Great Lakes.

Furthermore, instead of requiring the applicant to pay a tuition fee for attending such merchant marine academies. I recommend that the Federal Government assume all cost of education in such merchant marine academy. Many of our best potential merchant-marine officers who constitute our Naval Reserve officers are unable to enjoy the benefits of higher training for the merchant marine under our present system of maintaining State nautical-school ships due to the heavy financial obligations involved. Our merchant marine officers must be trained in their profession in the same manner that we train our Navy, Army, and Coast Guard officers. Give them all a thorough education before they are given officers' responsibilities, and in this manner help cut down the great loss of life at sea.

Landlocked States are discriminated against. Such States have no water outlet and boys from these States are barred from participating in low tuition rates. This is unfair.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the legislative act which provides for this activity. It was passed in 1911. These are not Government schools. Any State can take advantage of this offer, and if it does it will be supplied by the Government up to $25,000 toward meeting the expense, and also with a ship for the purpose of instruction. Thereafter the State can put up any amount it pleases. They are not schools of the Federal Government.

The Federal Government will match State funds only to the extent of $25,000 per year. If the gentleman's State of Michigan wants to secure aid from the Federal Government, it has the right to do so under provisions of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. Without objection, the pro-forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE

ORDNANCE AND ORDNANCE STORES, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE

For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material, for the armament of ships; for the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances; for the purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder; for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work under the cognizance of the Bureau of Ordnance; for furniture at naval ammunition depots, torpedo stations, naval ordnance plants, and proving grounds; for technical books; plant appliances as now defined by the "Navy Classification of Accounts"; for machinery and machine tools; for accident prevention; for experimental work in connection with the development of ordnance material for the Navy; for maintenance of proving grounds, powder factory, torpedo stations, gun factory, ammunition depots, and naval ordnance plants, and for target practice; not to exceed $15,000 for minor improvements to buildings, grounds, and appurtenances of a character which can be performed by regular station labor; for payment of part time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed; for the maintenance, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled freight and passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes at naval ammunition depots, naval proving grounds, naval ordnance plants, and naval torpedo stations; for the pay of chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, naval ordnance plants, and naval ammunition depots, and for care and operation of schools at ordnance stations at Indianhead, Md.; Dahlgren, Va.; and South Charleston, W. Va., $21,700,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $1,300,000.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] has pretty well stated the issue involved in this bill as I look at it. I think everyone agrees that we ought to have national defense, but the question involved in the vote on this bill is whether or not this bill is for national defense. If we assume that we are going to be involved in a war on foreign shores, this appropriation is proper, probably it ought to be increased, but I take it that the Members of this House and the American people pretty generally want this Republic in the future to confine her war activities to the North American Continent, and if we confine our war activities to our home shores, this amount of money is too much. I asked in the beginning of this debate, and I have asked a number of times since, that somebody bring into this House a statement by any Army officer or Navy officer of any kind of plan under which the United States could be successfully invaded, and no one has offered that plan, and no one will, because it cannot be done, and the Army and the Navy people agree that it cannot be done. I asked also that some proponent of this bill name a single time in a hundred years when a belligerent from the water had successfully made a landing on a defended hostile shore. Of course, nobody can bring in such a statement, because such a thing has not happened. The idea of building $51,000,000 battleships to defend our shores is just ridiculous. It does not make sense at all, and nobody can successfully defend that sort of thing on the ground of defense. Of course, the upshot of it is that if we vote this kind of appropriation we are going to take from the taxpayers' pockets money they can ill afford to pay at this time and add to the international irritation that is the excuse for this appeal for armament. A year or so ago when we passed the stupendous authorization for shipbuilding, the newspapers within a week or two contained the information that in Japan our action had been used as an excuse for voting more appropriations in Japan, and now if Japan or some other foreign country increases her appropriations, it is an excuse for us to increase ours, and so the thing piles up. This country can afford to set an example.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Did I understand the gentleman from Iowa to state that he is not in favor of building these new battleships to protect the coasts of our country? I call attention to the fact that in southern California we have numerous oil-storage tanks, that our cities are dependent on an aqueduct 240 miles long, that we have Boulder Dam about the same distance from the city that supplies the cities and farms, and that a foreign war vessel could send airplanes over and wipe out the whole business within a few hours if we did not have battleships to forestall them and thwart them.

Mr. BIERMANN. That is a novel theory; but I think you would have a hard time getting any naval officer to say it is practicable for Japan to send a navy 5,000 miles from Yokohama to San Francisco and successfully attack the people in California.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not also true that Japan does not have auxiliary ships with which to support a capital ship moving from Japan to the United States?

Mr. BIERMANN. I cannot say for certain as to that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the gentleman will find that they are absolutely completely nonsupplied with such auxiliary ships.

Mr. BLAND. But does not the merchant marine furnish adequate support as an auxiliary?

Mr. BIERMANN. I have no information in regard to the Japanese merchant marine.

I direct the attention of the Committee to what could be done with this money that we propose to appropriate for the Navy. There is before this House a bill to continue 3½-percent interest on the Federal land-bank mortgages for a term of 2 years, and the obstacle it has run against is the statement by the Farm Credit Administration that it would cost the Government $10,000,000 a year to do that. That may be the reason why we do not get 3½-percent interest on Federal land-bank loans in the next 2 years. With all the money appropriated in this bill we could give that relief to the farmers, not for 2 years but for 53 years. For the year 1935 the total tariff receipts collected by our Government amounted to $343,000,000. This bill appropriates for the Navy alone nearly $190,000,000 more than all our tariff receipts for last year. All the public buildings in Washington could be replaced—and some of them are said to have been extravagantly built—for half the money that it is proposed to vote for the Navy this year.

Out in Iowa we try to have hospitals in the county seats. We have one in my town. I do not think it cost $100,000, but suppose it cost so much and suppose we had an endowment of $50,000 for it; we could do the same thing for 3,000 counties in the United States for $450,000,000. We could build a paved highway 18 feet wide, such as we have in Iowa, at a cost of $25,000 a mile the entire 3,173 miles from New York to San Francisco, which would cost $79,325,000, and we would have left, after building and endowing 3,000 hospitals and after building the paved highway from New York to San Francisco, enough money to refund all the property taxes paid in four average Iowa counties, out of this one appropriation of $532,000,000 that we propose to vote for the Navy.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin has said that we have gone crazy on these preparedness appropriations. It is an easy matter to appeal in the name of patriotism and preparedness and ring the changes on the best sentiments in the hearts of the members of this Committee, but it will not wash out in the cold light of reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee one question.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not have the floor. I have the floor solely for the purpose of making a unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS

PAY, SUBSISTENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION OF NAVAL PERSONNEL

Pay of naval personnel: For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders, pay—$34,212,380, including not to exceed $1,698,034 for increased pay for making aerial flights, no part of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by more than three officers above the rank of captain and below the rank of vice admiral nor by nonflying officers or observers at a rate in excess of $1,440 per annum, which shall be the legal maximum rate as to such nonflying officers or observers; rental allowance, $7,271,430; subsistence allowance, $4,285,103; in all, $45,768,913; officers on the retired list, $8,297,701; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $3,000; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $6,891,254; interest on deposits by men, $3,000; pay of petty officers (not to exceed an average of 7,720 chief petty officers, of which number those with a permanent appointment as chief petty officer shall not exceed an average of 6,744), seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men detailed for duty with the Bureau of Fisheries, enlisted men, men in trade schools, pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, extra pay for men for diving, and cash prizes (not to exceed $100,000) for men for excellence in gunnery, target practice, communication, and engineering competitions, $82,293,763; outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment, civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharges for bad conduct or undesirability or inaptitude, reimbursement in kind of clothing to persons in the Navy for losses in cases of marine or aircraft disasters or in the operation of water- or air-borne craft, and the authorized issue of clothing and equipment to the members of the Nurse Corps, $1,801,426; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court martial, $64,400, and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; pay and allowances of the Nurse Corps, including assistant superintendents, directors, and assistant directors—pay, $550,120; rental allowance, $23,040; subsistence allowance, $21,900; pay retired list, $215,710; in all, $810,770; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps; pay and allowances of transferred and assigned men of the Fleet Naval Reserve, $13,790,890; reimbursement for losses of property as provided in the act approved October 6, 1917 (U. S. C., title 34, secs. 981, 982), as amended by the act of March 3, 1927 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 983), $10,000; payment of 6 months' death gratuity, $150,000; in all, $159,885,117; and no part of such sum shall be available to pay active-duty pay and allowances to officers in excess of nine on the retired list, except retired officers temporarily ordered to active duty as members of retiring and selection boards as authorized by law: Provided, That, except for the public quarters occupied by the Chief of Office of Naval Operations, the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, and the Commandant of the Marine Corps and messes temporarily set up on shore for officers attached to seagoing vessels, to aviation units based on seagoing vessel including officers' messes at the fleet air bases, and to landing forces and expeditions, and in addition not to exceed 40 in number at such places as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the pay, allowances, or other expenses of any enlisted man or civil employee performing service in the residence or quarters of an officer or officers on shore as a cook, waiter, or other work of a character performed by a household servant, but nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the voluntary employment in any such capacity of a retired enlisted man or a transferred member of the Fleet Naval Reserve without additional expense to the Government, nor the sale of meals to officers by general messes on shore as regulated by detailed instructions from the Navy Department.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLEOD: On page 24, line 17, strike out "$82,293,763" and insert in lieu thereof "$72,293,763, and for like purposes, in addition, the $10,000,000 appropriated in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, under Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Yard, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, for 'floating drydock, type B, including mooring facilities and accessories', such sum being hereby reappropriated."

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment at this time basing the need for the amendment on economy and using as authority former Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt, and several other witnesses' testimony relative to the building of the proposed floating, movable drydock.

It has been contended that there has never been contemplated a floating drydock of this size, or even ever proposed up to this time by any nation of the world. There are some small floating drydocks, but this proposed experimental work is large enough to house the largest of the battleships, according to the testimony we have. The Navy Department did not come to the Appropriations Committee on Naval Affairs for the proposed $10,000,000; they got it from the deficiency committee.

I want to state some of the facts at this time and some of the information that our subcommittee had relative to this vast experiment. This proposed drydock is 1,016 feet long. It is 165 feet wide. It is 75 feet from top to keel. The only way in this bill we can stop construction is to reappropriate the $10,000,000. Mr. Chairman, $10,000,000 will not build this drydock. The testimony before our committee was that it would require another $5,000,000 or thereabouts.

Second. This floating drydock will have to be towed back to the United States every 3 or 4 years for renovation and repairs. According to the testimony received by our committee, it will take several vessels to tow this so-called floating drydock across the ocean. The testimony given before our committee stated that a concrete-constructed or permanent graving dock is more substantial and more lasting than steel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Does not the gentleman, as a member of the committee, believe it would be much better and more economical to build a graving dock on the shore of southern California, which is the nearest point not only to Honolulu but to the Panama Canal, the most vulnerable spot in defense on the Pacific coast?

Mr. McLEOD. Unquestionably it would at least be more economical.

Now, I should like to read to the Committee some of the important questions that were asked of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and his answers. I appreciate that this bill was approved by the legislative committee of the House.

I quote from the hearings:

Mr. CARY. * * * I was wondering if this amount of money that you contemplate spending on it in the future, in view of the fact that it is in the nature of an experiment, could not be used to better advantage in some other way in connection with naval activities.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. To be perfectly frank, I questioned that same thing myself.

A little further down this colloquy occurs:

Mr. McLEOD. Does any nation of the world have a similar drydock?

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Yes; I think so—floating docks. England, France, Germany, and I believe Italy have floating docks. They are common in those countries. I think England has a battleship floating drydock at Singapore, but these are all of the old type, more or less like the Dewey. No nation, so far as I know, except the United States, has a dock of this new type.

Mr. McLEOD. Admiral, it is really contemplated only to use this floating drydock at Honolulu, is it not?

Admiral TAUSSIG. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, if that is the case, then this drydock is to be used only at Pearl Harbor, Honolulu. The cost of a permanent drydock is $4,000,000, compared with approximately $15,000,000 for this experiment. The argument in favor of the so-called floating drydock, of course, is that it could be moved from place to place within certain areas in case of emergency.

A few moments ago the gentleman from California asked if it would not be preferable to build a graving dock on the west coast. Certainly it is feasible; it is equally feasible to build a permanent drydock at Pearl Harbor and save perhaps $10,000,000 required for a floating drydock. Up to the present time no plan s have been completed for the construction of this floating drydock, there has been little expense on the part of the Navy so far for this proposal.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment will carry.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make it quite clear to the members of this Committee that there is no item carried in the bill for the construction or maintenance of the drydock. It should be well understood that this item has not been investigated as such by our committee. The testimony from which the gentleman from Michigan just quoted certain questions and answers was given to our committee in response to an inquiry on the part of the chairman with reference to some facts about the matter. There was no detailed presentation of the matter before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, and I frankly say to the members of this committee that I cannot stand here this afternoon and tell you whether this drydock ought to be constructed or not, because the subcommittee of which I am a member has not heard sufficient evidence to determine that question.

What is the situation? A bill was passed by this Congress and sent to the President which authorized the construction of a drydock. Last year, subsequent to the passage of that legislation, the Navy Department, or the proponents of that measure, appeared before the subcommittee on deficiencies of the Appropriations Committee, of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], chairman of the whole committee, is the chairman, and submitted to the subcommittee on deficiencies the evidence about this drydock. The subcommittee on deficiencies recommended it to the Congress and the Congress appropriated $10,000,000. It now develops, Mr. Chairman, that this amount of money is not sufficient to complete this drydock, but the Navy Department did not appear before us asking for additional funds with which to construct it. I do not believe, in view of the discussion on this floor and the questions asked in our committee, that the Navy Department will undertake to proceed with the construction of this drydock until it presents the matter again before the legislative committee supported by sufficient evidence to show that the authorized cost is inadequate.

Mr. Chairman, in the name of orderly procedure, I submit that a committee that has not heard the evidence is not prepared on the evidence presented and from what we have heard to pass judgment on this project which the Navy considers important. It may or may not be that it ought to be constructed; I do not know. I think, in the name of orderly procedure, this amendment ought to be defeated, and then, if necessary, our committee can at the proper time hear sufficient testimony to enable us to act sensibly and intelligently in submitting a recommendation to the House with reference to this item.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Yes; gladly.

Mr. DITTER. Can the gentleman suggest what would be jeopardized by deferring this matter until the members of the subcommittee can investigate and inquire into it and bring a recommendation to the House?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I just said in my remarks, Mr. Chairman, that I was confident the Navy Department would not proceed in the absence of the presentation of further evidence as to the necessary increase in cost.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina has very clearly stated the correct situation with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD]. As a matter of fact, there is no item in the appropriation bill dealing with a drydock.

Bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman seeks to take away from the appropriation bill $10,000,000 and revert it back into the Treasury for the reason that last year the Congress appropriated $10,000,000 to carry out an authorization. On April 15, 1935, the Congress passed an authorization bill, and one of the items was:

> Navy Yard, Pearl Harbor, floating drydock, type B, including mooring mast and accessories, $10,000,000.

What happened? Immediately thereafter the President of the United States wrote a letter to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and asked that $10,000,000 be appropriated to meet certain things for the Army and certain things for the Navy. One of those items for the Navy was $10,000,000 for a drydock, to be a floating drydock, at Pearl Harbor.

Mr. Chairman, what was the reason? This was due to the fact that the fleet is in the Pacific and there are on the Pacific coast only two places at which a battleship can be docked or at which an airplane carrier can be docked. The Navy only owns one place from Seattle to San Diego where a capital ship may be docked, and that is at the Bremerton Navy Yard. Think of it! With our fleet in the Pacific we have only one place that belongs to the Government in which a capital ship, if wounded in action, could be drydocked. It is true that the Government leases and rents in San Francisco Bay a place known as the Hunters Dry Dock, which belongs to the Bethlehem Steel Co.

With 18 capital ships, with 2 airplane carriers, with an increase of 4 more airplane carriers, making approximately 22 capital ships, there is on the Pacific coast but one place belonging to the Government that a capital ship can be put in drydock. There is not a drydock large enough at Mare Island. The drydock at Mare Island, referred to in this bill, is for cruisers. Therefore it was of national importance and an urgent matter that the President should request Congress to make available $10,000,000 for the construction of a drydock.

It is true the Government has never heretofore built a floating drydock of this character and size. We have a floating drydock at Manila that is somewhat smaller. Great Britain has a large floating dock not quite as large as this one will be. When it was ascertained that we were going to build a drydock the British Government sought to sell to the United States Government the old dilapidated drydock which they have.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be voted down, because it is in the interest of national defense that this floating drydock be built.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the statements made by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD] is an acknowledgement on his part that we should take the action suggested by the pending amendment. The gentleman declared that the subcommittee had received no information on this matter. He acknowledged the fact he was not prepared, nor was any other member of the subcommittee prepared, to defend this item.

The gentleman from Georgia comes here and bases his plea entirely on the fact that the President requested this item. The gentleman from Georgia has made no statement with respect to the practicability of this floating drydock. He admits the fact that it is an experiment. He admits that he can produce nothing in the way of assurance to the House that this $10,000,000 venture will prove successful. He admits, however, that in addition to the $10,000,000 already requested and provided for through the deficiency bill, it will cost at least $5,000,000 more.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to the reasonable judgment of the Members of the House that if this were a matter of hazard, if this were a matter of urgency, if the gentleman from Georgia had stated that we were in a position of jeopardy by which a reasonable deferring of this item might create difficulty, we on this side might be persuaded to go along with him. But there is no need for the rush. There is certainly no need at the present time to go into this $15,000,000 experiment and have on our hands the same thing that we have had in the case of a great many of the other experimental programs which have been carried on.

I want to say on behalf of the minority that we will join in supporting the measure if after due deliberation, if after careful examination and inquiry the proof is established that this drydock is feasible, that it is practical, that it will work, and when we know what the cost will be. There is not only involved the cost of the drydock but there is also involved the cost of the necessary dredging facilities that must of necessity be brought about in order for the drydock to be effective.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Democratic Members of the House to join with us in deferring for the time being the expenditure of this $10,000,000 plus the additional $5,000,000 which is required as a result of the authorization. Let us wait until next year, and if it is then proved that a drydock is worth while, that it is practicable, and that it will do what the gentleman says it will do, we will join with you. A graving dock can be provided at much less expense. We can go into Pearl Harbor and make extensive preparations there which will carry out the same ultimate objects as this floating drydock.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the membership of the House to support the worth-while amendment now pending before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McLEOD) there were—ayes 22, noes 47.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for pay, subsistence, and transportation of naval personnel, $183,492,981, of which sum $1,000,000 shall be immediately available, and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Pay, subsistence, and transportation of naval personnel" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That additional commissioned, warranted, appointed, enlisted, and civilian personnel of the Medical Department of the Navy, required for the care of patients of the United States Veterans' Administration in naval hospitals, may be employed in addition to the numbers appropriated for in this act: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the pay of any midshipmen whose admission subsequent to January 30, 1936, would result in exceeding at any time an allowance of four midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress; of one midshipman for Puerto Rico, a native of the island, appointed on nomination of the Governor, and of four midshipmen from Puerto Rico, appointed on nomination of the Resident Commissioner; and of four midshipmen from the District of Columbia: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify in any way existing laws relative to the appointment of midshipmen at large, from the enlisted personnel of the naval service, from the Naval Reserve, from honor graduates of military schools or Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the pay of any midshipman appointed from enlisted men of the Navy for admission to the Naval Academy in the class entering in the calendar year 1937 who has not served aboard a vessel of the Navy in full commission for at least 9 months prior to such admission.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do this for the purpose of correcting what I believe to be a wrong impression created by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] a little while ago.

If I understood the gentleman's remarks correctly, he left the impression, at least upon me, that during the years intervening between 1921 and 1933 there was no naval construction started or authorized. Not wanting this impression to be left as a correct one, I would call the attention of the Committee to the facts as I understand them.

In 1924 Congress authorized the construction of eight cruisers of the large type, with 8-inch guns.

In 1929 Congress authorized the construction of nine cruisers of the same type, with 8-inch guns.

These have been practically completed during this period. It is true there were ten 6-inch cruisers authorized in the program of 1916, but most of them were built after the close of the war, and six additional ones were authorized in 1929.

There was one aircraft carrier, the Langley, authorized in 1929, which has been completed.

Eight submarines have been built during this period, and five of them, I believe, were authorized in 1923.

Eight destroyers have been built during this period of time.

While this may not have brought our Navy up to treaty strength, nevertheless it did show some increase in the strength of the Navy during this period.

I do not like to have the impression go out that nothing was done during these years to bring our Navy up to what I consider to be proper treaty strength. I am in favor of a Navy of this type and want to do my part to bring this about and I do not want any wrong impression to go out to the country. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this naval appropriation bill, insofar as the amount of $530,000,000 is concerned, is transcended by something which is even of far more importance.

It must be appreciated that there is no integrated defense policy in this country. The War Department through its officials, the Navy Department through its officers, and other departments through their various groups and bureaus attempt to settle the question insofar as they, themselves, are concerned, and all the time, as is evidenced in the debates to which I have listened here, the question uppermost with those Departments, and in the minds of most of those who have spoken here, is how can we beat the foreign nations with our program?

It seems to me before we go ahead with these tremendous expenditures—expenditures that, to my mind, are out of reason—we ought to have a national-defense program that is definite.

I remember conditions back in 1917 and 1918. I do not believe the people of America want to go to foreign lands any more than I do to engage in war. It is sufficient that we defend ourselves. It seems to me that an impartial body of men in this country could study and prepare a program that would be understood first by our own people, and by the nations of the world, and would have a tendency to cut down these continually increasing appropriations for destructive purposes.

I can see no country in the world today looking upon the United States with any intention of invading us. Only yesterday we passed a tax bill against which there was a great cry throughout the country. Every newspaper published our names because of the tremendous interest in it. We were taxing somebody, and here today we have a bill that takes back all of the money you taxed the people and appropriates it for one department of this Government. You are now adding another tax bill; yet I fail to hear the protests of the people, I fail to hear the protests of those who were against the tax bill yesterday. [Applause.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy Yard, Mare Island, Calif.: For preparation of site, preliminary test pits, cofferdam, and other incidental preliminary work toward the construction of graving dock, services and auxiliary construction, $150,000.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 38, after line 14, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"Navy yard, including graving drydock for capital ships, auxiliaries, and accessories, San Pedro, Los Angeles Harbor, Calif., $7,000,000."

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order and not authorized by law.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I will reserve it.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to the Navy appropriation bill for the purpose of calling the attention of the Members of Congress to the need of dock and yard equipment for the capital ships of the Pacific Fleet. Because of the unusual facilities and the weather conditions the Pacific Fleet, with 15 capital ships, has its headquarters in the San Pedro and Long Beach area. Natural causes dictate this to be the most satisfactory point on the Pacific coast for headquarters for maneuvers and for practice. Climatic conditions and superior visibility play an important part in these naval operations. This area is freer from fog, and Los Angeles Harbor affords much easier ingress and egress than any other port on the Pacific. In a few moments the entire fleet can come into the harbor and pass out into the open sea. Consequently, because of these facilities, the practice of gunfiring and maneuvering seeks this area as most favorable to the fleet.

There is but one navy yard equipped to repair and recondition the capital ships on the Pacific coast. This navy yard is located at Bremerton, in the State of Washington, on Puget Sound, and is 1,160 miles distant from the headquarters of the fleet. Each time a capital ship is sent from San Pedro to Bremerton it costs the Government $8,800 for the round trip for a single item—fuel oil.

In his testimony before the Naval Affairs Committee Admiral Norman M. Smith, Chief of Civil Engineers of the Navy, and Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, emphasizes the needs of further docking facilities on the Pacific coast. Admiral Smith points out that because of the congestion at the dock in Bremerton the intersections of battleships cannot be thoroughly dried before the protective painting is proceeded with. Admiral Smith further points out that the private facilities at Hunters Point, San Fransico Bay, which have sometimes been used, are also unsatisfactory for naval requirements, due to the lack of proper equipment, the owners of the private dock failing to provide the facilities needed.

It is generally conceded that to keep the capital ships of the Pacific Fleet in an efficient condition further docking facilities are imperative. Inside the breakwater at San Pedro there is an area of land owned by the city of Los Angeles of more than 100 acres that is available for a site for a navy yard and a graving dock such as is required by the capital ships. I have reason to believe that if the Federal Government provided an appropriation for an efficient navy yard that the city of Los Angeles would contribute this site or perhaps any other selected by the Navy Department on city-owned land. Los Angeles owns a total of more than 2,500 acres of tidelands at the harbor. The tract already referred to inside the breakwater is but a short distance from 40 feet of water, and but a few hundred feet beyond there is a depth of 45, making this site easy of access by the minimum amount of dredging.

This site lies under the protecting guns of Fort MacArthur, located on an elevation of about 300 feet and less than one-half mile away. Outside of the harbor and 20 miles away is Catalina Island, which stretches for 35 miles, affording sites for forts and torpedo and mining stations that would furnish a strong line of outside protection. Other islands farther out in the Pacific could also be utilized for the protection of this port.

Southern California is peculiarly vulnerable to an attack from a foreign foe. The city of Los Angeles, with its 1,250,000 people, is supplied with water by an aqueduct 250 miles long. This aqueduct and its storage basins would invite foreign attack, and if destroyed, would bring immeasurable loss of life and property and suffering in its wake. Boulder Dam is another mark that would be sought by foreign foe. The destruction of this great reservoir would not only deprive farms and cities of southern California of a water supply but would bring wrack and ruin to the population and the farms below this dam.

In southern California, in the vicinity of Los Angeles Harbor and about the city itself, are numerous oil fields and oil storage. The destruction of these tanks and storage would loosen a flood of oil that would threaten a considerable portion of the city and the harbor with a disastrous deluge of oil and fire that would sweep everything before it to death and destruction. Los Angeles and the surrounding area are so susceptible of attack that it becomes one of the most important points for national defense to be found anywhere within the boundaries of our country.

I have mentioned that the headquarters of the Pacific fleet at San Pedro are 1,160 miles removed from the only available dock for the repair and reconditioning of capital ships on the Pacific coast. No fleet of the Navy, no warship or battleship of the Navy, can be kept in a state of efficiency without proper and available repair facilities. The navy yard is as essential to the ship as the garage and the mechanic to the continued operation of the automobile and the truck.

The Pacific Fleet located at San Pedro, as I have stated, is 1,160 miles from Bremerton, and it is even farther from the western terminus of the Panama Canal, which is 2,888 nautical miles to the southeast; consequently from the Panama Canal to Bremerton is 4,048 nautical miles, not statute miles. Undoubtedly the Panama Canal, as well as Los Angeles and the southern California area, would be points of attack by foreign invaders. If the Pacific Fleet were engaged in a battle to protect the Panama Canal, wisdom would dictate that a navy yard with facilities for repair and reconditioning should be located on the southern California coast. The Panama Canal situation emphasizes the need of these facilities at San Pedro. These facilities are needed in time of peace; they would be of great necessity in time of war.

Honolulu is the outpost of Pacific defense. Honolulu is located 4,685 nautical miles from Panama. Undoubtedly the easiest point of attack on the Pacific coast is the unprotected and practically defenseless condition of southern California and the Panama Canal. By the very nature of the Pacific coast, this area would invite attack. The long distance from the Panama Canal to Bremerton, 4,048 nautical miles, makes it quite evident of the grave necessity of a navy yard as far south as feasible on the California coast. San Pedro is 2,228 miles from Pearl Harbor at Honolulu; San Francisco 2,091 miles, and Bremerton about 2,400 miles. Consequently the location of San Pedro, about the same distance from Honolulu as other Pacific coast ports, and much nearer to the Panama Canal, gives it a strategic position not obtained by any other port of the Pacific coast.

Because of the lack of national defense on the Pacific coast, and the fact that southern California and the Panama Canal are the most vulnerable points in the Pacific area, I feel impelled to offer this amendment, and to call the attention of the House to the facilities that are vitally necessary for this Pacific coast line of national defense. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from North Carolina on the point of order.

Mr. UMSTEAD. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposes a project for which there is no legislative authority.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from California say as to that?

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment not from the standpoint of parliamentary technique, but from the standpoint of a proper defense of the Pacific coast and proper facilities for the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California concede that there is no legislative authority for the appropriation?

Mr. COLDEN. I recognize the point of order is well taken, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS

AVIATION, NAVY

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1936, $700,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, air stations, fleet air bases, fleet and all other aviation activities, accident prevention, testing laboratories, for overhauling of planes, and for the purchase for aviation purposes only of special clothing, wearing apparel, and special equipment, $14,408,270, including $221,000 for the equipment of vessels with catapults and including not to exceed $50,000 for the procurement of helium, which sum of $50,000 shall be transferred to and made available to the Bureau of Mines on July 1, 1936, in addition to which sum the Bureau of Mines may use for helium-plant operation in the fiscal year 1937 the unexpended balance of funds transferred to it for such operation in the fiscal year 1936, and the Bureau may lease, after competition, surplus metal cylinders acquired for use as helium containers; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, including the payment of part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed, $2,500,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, spare parts and accessories, $20,980,000, of which amount not to exceed $6,590,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization carried in the Navy Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1936; in all, $38,588,270, and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $1,582,340: Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated, the Secretary of the Navy may, prior to July 1, 1937, enter into contracts for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts and accessories, to an amount not in excess of $13,000,000: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to transfer not to exceed in the aggregate $24,000 from this appropriation to the appropriations "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy" and "Pay, Marine Corps" to cover authorized traveling expenses of officers and enlisted men in connection with flying new airplanes from contractor's works to assigned station or ship, including travel to contractor's works and return of personnel to stations of duty, and the amount so transferred shall be in addition to any limitations contained in the appropriations "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy" and "Pay, Marine Corps": Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coast of the continental United States: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes or for the construction or manufacture in a Government-owned factory or plant of airplane engines, other than experimental engines, or airplanes, other than airplanes for primary training purposes: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft where such claim does not exceed the sum of $500.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$500." I rise at this point to say that the Portsmouth Navy Yard is situated in my district, and while for years it had nothing whatsoever to do with the manufacture and equipment of aircraft, it is, thank God, one of the leading yards in the country, designed and equipped for the manufacture of the finest and most modern type of submarines for use in the defense of the Nation, and further as a Member of this House who has the honor to be chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation of the Committee on Military Affairs, I congratulate the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Congress on the spirit manifested in respect to the provisions in this bill under the title of "Bureau of Aeronautics." I know that every Member of this House who has studied this matter must realize that legislation of this kind is designed not only to consider the building of great battleships, aircraft, cruisers, destroyers, and submarines, but that its primary purpose is for national defense and national defense only. To secure adequate national defense we must build up an air corps which will be second to none in the world, because that is the one method by which we may be assured, and by which generations yet unborn may be assured, that in the future they will not be called upon to give up their lives because of attacks against us by any foreign nation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not a fact that our greatest danger now comes from the air, due to the fact that several other countries, at least three of them, have a greater air force than we have at the present time?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes, indeed. As a matter of fact, four of them have far greater air forces than we have; and in order to meet that situation, we must build up a larger air force both in the Army and the Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman seeks to convey the thought to the committee that other countries have a superior naval air force than we have, he is clearly in error.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. I am not confining my remarks to the Navy. I am speaking of our combined air forces. I mean by that, airplanes designed to attack, whether in the Navy or the Army. I hope and pray that the Congress will see to it that the Army will soon be in a position where it need not be ashamed of the adequacy and efficiency of its air force.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does the gentleman contend that an airplane can come across 3,500 miles of water and attack us?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. I contend, sir, that German seaplanes of existing types have alighted on the South Atlantic Ocean between Africa and South America to moor astern of a station ship—steamship Westphalian. This vessel is an ordinary merchant type, supplied with aviation fuel and other servicing facilities. Fuel and oil are transferred to the seaplane on the water. Meager reports mention experiments with a canvas ramp astern on which the seaplane may be hauled; also trials of canvas shelters for protection during refueling operations. The military significance of this commercial "mother ship" for seaplanes appears to have been ignored. As seaplanes become larger their ability to alight safely on the ocean increases. Acknowledging only the existing sizes of seaplanes, it is rather startling to contemplate that small inexpensive merchant ships are capable of serving as ocean supply bases for transoceanic bombing planes.

Mr. Igor Sikorsky, the eminent builder of large seaplanes, informed the Federal Aviation Commission, October 10, 1934, that seaplanes are now in course of design that can transport 10 tons for a nonstop flight of 2,000 miles. A single seaplane of that type—which is a prospect for the immediate future—then could drop 10 tons of bombs on any American coastal city simply by prearranging a rendezvous with a small servicing vessel at sea a thousand miles from the coast line.

These facts strongly emphasize that our Nation is no longer protected from air attacks because of the wide extent of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and we must govern ourselves accordingly.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does the gentleman think that is a serious menace?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. It is indeed a most serious danger, and a danger which must be met in the interest of national defense for the protection of our homes, our States, and our Nation.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPLACEMENT OF NAVAL VESSELS

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels, including the re-engining and completion of submarines 170 and 171 (39 Stat. 616), heretofore authorized and appropriated for in part under "Increase of the Navy, Construction and Machinery", including (1) the expenses in connection with continuing the construction of 2 aircraft carriers, 1 heavy cruiser, 3 light cruisers, 20 destroyers, 4 submarines, and 2 gunboats which were commenced in the fiscal year 1934 under funds made available from the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, and (2) for the commencement of the following vessels authorized by the act approved March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 503–505): (a) 12 destroyers and 6 submarines, and (b) not more than 2 capital ships as replacements of over-age capital ships, to be undertaken only in the event that capital-ship-replacement construction is commenced by any of the other signatory powers to the Treaty for the Limitation and Reduction of Naval Armament, signed at London, April 22, 1930, $115,300,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of the amount available for expenditure under the head of "Construction and Machinery" for the fiscal year 1937 for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $3,870,000: Provided further, That, of the appropriations made available by this act under the head of "Replacement of Naval Vessels" there shall be available such sums as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time determine to be necessary for the engagement of technical services and the employment of personnel in the Navy Department and in the field, the purchase of plans, drafting and other supplies, and the expenses of printing and travel, in addition to those otherwise provided for, owing to the construction of vessels which have been or may hereafter be authorized.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the language contained after the word "submarines", in line 23, page 49, down to and including the figures "$115,300,000", line 4, page 50. My point of order is based on the following: While there may be legislation authorizing an appropriation for capital ships, the language in the appropriaion bill is not only a negative limitation but it also sets up a contingency. In other words, this language states that these capital ships are to be built only in the event of a certain happening. That in and of itself is legislation. The provision to the effect that this money may be spent only in the event that something happens constitutes a transfer of the power to build these ships, when to build them, and under what conditions over to the Exeutive. The transfer of such power is not found in the authorization, and consequently in this bill it is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not, unless the Chair desires to hear from me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And may I say this in addition? It also requires additional duties upon the part of the Executive by the language:

> Only in the event that capital ship replacements construction is commenced.

That requires additional duties on the part of the Executime and is clearly legislation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. VINSON of Kentucky). The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the language following the word "submarine", on line 23, page 49, down to the figures "1930" on line 4, page 50, includes legislation on an appropriation bill; and further submits that the limitation therein contained is not a proper limitation to be included in an appropriation bill.

If the Chair understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], he concedes the legislative authorization for the construction of the two battleships involved.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. My concession is only for the sake of argument. I said that if there was any authorization or any legislation authorizing the construction of these ships under the Vinson Act; but even on that point I say it is contrary to the treaty, which is the law of the land, and that these ships, according to that treaty, cannot be built until after December 31, 1936.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York conceded the legislative authority.

The Chair will read from the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 503):

> The President of the United States is hereby authorized to replace, by vessels of modern design and construction, vessels in the Navy in the categories limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, when their replacement is permitted by the said treaties.

Undoubtedly there is legislative authorization for the construction of the two capital ships involved.

In respect to the point of order to which the gentleman referred relative to the condition upon which the capital ships will be constructed, the Chair will read from chapter 227 of Cannon's Precedents, section 1579, which is directly in point:

> The House may, by limitation on a general appropriation bill, provide that an appropriation shall be available contingent on a future event.

There are any number of precedents upholding the position of the present occupant of the chair, that where appropriations are made to be spent contingent upon the happening of some event or upon the performance of some condition, that they are in order.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. MARCANTONIO: On page 49, line 23, after the word "submarines", strike out all the remainder of line 23, all of line 24, and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 on page 50 and insert "$111,300,000."

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I believe that this amendment raises one of the most important issues found in this bill. My amendment reduces this appropriation by the sum of $4,000,000. These $4,000,000 are to be used for laying the keels or beginning the construction of two battleships. I submit to the Members of this Committee, first, that there is not a single iota of testimony in the hearings justifying the construction of these battleships. Second, we have not learned as yet who has asked, and on what ground the request has been made, for the construction of these battleships. No hearings at all were held on this point. I think it is most unusual, even if there are precedents for such procedure, to come before this House with an appropriation bill carrying such an important item of appropriation without a single word in the hearings and without a single iota of testimony to justify this particular item of appropriation.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In just a moment, when I have concluded my statement.

Furthermore, it is not only a question of the $4,000,000 involved. Once these keels are laid, once these $4,000,000 are spent, it means that we must complete the construction of the ships or we have thrown away the $4,000,000. If we are to complete the construction of these ships, it means $100,000,000. I know the argument may be advanced that perhaps some other country which was signatory to the naval treaty is about to construct its own ships.

I say, first of all, we have no direct evidence or no conclusive evidence to the effect that any signatory to that pact is at this time entering into a naval armament race. The whole world is looking at the United States. While this may seem insignificant to us sitting here, let us bear in mind that if we adopt this appropriation of $4,000,000, and if we launch on the policy of building these two additional capital ships, it means that we are shooting off the pistol which will be a signal for a general world-wide armament race. We are telling the people of the world that we only talk peace but that we mean war. What justification is there for these two additional battleships? Promises have been made repeatedly that there would not be any additional battleships, and then on last Tuesday this committee goes on record for these two additional battleships, without a hearing, without testimony, and without justification. We are arming for an imperialistic war. That is what we are doing. We are arming to get into trouble. We are setting an example to the entire world. By appropriating money for two additional battleships we are giving the signal for a mighty armament race, the cost of which will be placed on the shoulders of the workers of this country and the workers of the entire world.

I appeal to every peace-loving citizen, to every advocate of national defense, why do you need these two ships for national defense? I challenge you to give us the answer. Furthermore, I challenge you to explain why there is not a single word in these hearings to justify these two battleships.

I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments to this paragraph close in 15 minutes.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to this paragraph close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York stated that there was no hearing before the committee to justify this item in the bill. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is no particular discussion of the authorization of the 12 destroyers and 6 submarines referred to in the bill for the reason that Congress debated that and passed a bill authorizing it on March 27, 1934. This committee is merely doing what Congress has authorized them to do—that is, to bring the Navy up to treaty strength.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield for a question only.

Mr. BOILEAU. At the time we passed that bill was it not understood that we were merely making the authorization and that the Appropriations Committee later would consider each additional request for appropriation?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is exactly what the Appropriations Committee has done in this instance and what the Committee is doing today—it is considering each ship as it comes in.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is it not necessary for the Committee on Appropriations to hold hearings on those very items that have been authorized?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all; because Congress has already authorized it and it is not necessary unless the committee desires to do so.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The hearings speak for themselves.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Further, it is not mandatory on the part of the committee. The committee may refuse to appropriate any money for building up a treaty navy. The authorization merely makes it in order for any Member to offer an amendment to accomplish this purpose.

Let me say before I proceed further that no one in this House is more interested in seeing that some agreement is reached between maritime nations to limit armaments than I am, but we have been taught conclusively that disarmament by example is a complete failure. This great Nation of ours for 8 or 10 years stood quietly by and refused to build a ship, hoping other nations would follow our example. What happened? Other nations were rapidly building up their navies to the treaty strength. In the treaty of 1922 in Washington and the treaty of 1924 in London it was determined that this country required 15 battleships for its national defense, the same number allotted to Great Britain. We are merely asking Congress to live up to our treaty, to do what the treaty authorized to be done, to maintain the Navy at sufficient strength to afford adequate defense to the country; that is all, no more, and no less.

The authorization for these two ships is no addition to the naval budget. They are going to cost some $40,000,000 before they are completed, of course; but what happens if Congress today refuses to continue a replacement program? By that action we would lose the advantage we retained at the conference when we refused to accede to the desire of other nations to have a navy equal to ours. It is incumbent upon us, therefore, at all times to maintain the ratio of 5–5–3. [Applause.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, stated that it is not customary for the Appropriations Committee to hear testimony on appropriations after the legislative committee has already authorized the particular items. If this be so, I ask the gentleman the purpose of this big book we have here. This is the hearings on the Navy Department appropriaion bill for 1937. Every word of testimony in this book relates to appropriations for items that are already authorized by the Congress of the United States. In other words, the Appropriations Committee does not consider any appropriation that has not already been authorized by the Congress; and it seems to me this big volume of hearings is conclusive evidence of the fact the gentleman from Georgia is in error.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, it is wholly within the prerogative of the Appropriations Committee to inquire into these things.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is true.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. But the committee was so satisfied that the policy of the Government was sound in advocating a treaty navy that it made no inquiry.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is just the point I have been trying to make in this House for several years. The Appropriations Committee, the Military Affairs Committee, and the Naval Affairs Committee are all satisfied that we need a big army and a big navy without limit, without having any hearings whatsoever.

They are satisfied because these committees are packed, and I say they are packed with men of honor, men of integrity, but men who are sold on the idea that adequate national defense means the biggest conceivable Army and Navy we can get. They are willing to authorize these two capital ships without offering the testimony of any experts. This Congress today, Mr. Chairman, has gone wild on the question of national defense and are preparing for some imaginary enemy. We are preparing for some war in the future with some foreign power, not a war of defense.

Mr. Chairman, I submit this is just one more piece of evidence of the fact that these committees which handle appropriations and the national defense of this country are stacked. I do not make that statement with any feeling against the House or those who are members of these particular committees. I do make the statement, however, that the committees charged with the national defense, both the legislative committees and the appropriation committees, are composed of ultra 100-percent big-army and big-navy men. Those of us in the House who have views contrary to them do not have any chance whatever to express our views. We cannot have that chance because it is impossible for Members who do not believe in a big navy to get their views before such a committee. You do not find in such committees very many people fighting these big appropriations. Mr. Chairman, I do not make that statement because I want to criticize any man for his views. He is entitled to his view the same as I am. I submit, however, that the viewpoint of those who do not believe in a big army and a big navy are not adequately expressed.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to speak at length on this question, but I want to call attention to the fact that when you appropriate $50,000,000 for a battleship you are really appropriating $100,000,000. According to the best naval authorities you have to build one cruiser that costs twenty to thirty million dollars, you have to build four more auxiliary cruisers, you must build submarines, you have to put a fleet of aircraft around this monster of the deep to protect it from being sunk, all of which will cost more than $100,000,000. You are not voting for $104,000,000 for these two ships. You are really voting for $208,000,000. That is what you are voting for.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. These are mere replacement ships. We already have the auxiliaries to defend these ships.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Oh, yes; I have heard all about those replacements. You build navies and call them by all sorts of fair names, replacements and what not, but you are always building. You have men here—and they are fine gentlemen, of course—who think they have to save the world. They think we must be the policeman of the earth. They think we must go out and swagger around this globe telling other nations how to govern themselves. I am tired of that sort of thing, and I know the American people are tired of it. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not true, if these two new capital ships are built, we have not the auxiliary equipment with a sufficient speed to support those ships anywhere on the ocean?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I think that is probably correct, and this means that we have to build, not only the auxiliary vessels for these two ships but a lot more auxiliary vessels. So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of the drydock for the Hawaiian Islands. I would vote for the construction of a drydock at San Diego. I would vote for the construction of a drydock at the Panama Canal. If you are going to build vessels, you have to have facilities to take care of them. What I am arguing against is building of these ships which will compel us to engage in more expenditures than are involved in the proposed appropriation. I stand for a navy for defense of our coasts and our islands and possessions. I oppose any navy which contemplates aggression—a navy which means that we are to spill good American blood to make good the investments of un-American international bankers who know no country, who have no patriotism, and whose only god is the god of gold.

I am a veteran of one war. I served in Congress throughout another war. It is time to care for our veterans' widows and orphans of these wars before we engage in another war. If you want to chart a correct course, if you want a North Star to follow, read the Farewell Address of George Washington and remember his words, "Why stand on foreign soil?" Why embroil ourselves in the quarrels and intrigues of Europe?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this is nothing in the world but the carrying out and continuation of a definite fixed policy of the Government to maintain and have a navy which will be up to treaty strength. Under the provisions of the treaty it was impossible to replace a battleship until it reached 26 years of age. This is merely a replacement.

Mr. Chairman, are the Members of this House willing to have the sailors of this country forced to serve upon old antiquated ships that are over age? Are the Members willing to send their sons to defend this country in ships that may be classified like some of the aviation was classified during the World War, "flying coffins"?

We are simply asking that these ships be replaced that the treaty authorizes us to replace after attaining 26 years of age.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Are there not 40 or 50 pages of testimony on destroyers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; they have all the information on destroyers.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But not a word on the battleships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I want to say now this Appropriation Committee has rendered a distinct service to this country in the kind and character of bill they have brought in here. As an evidence of that, not a single amendment has been adopted nor has a single amendment been offered to the bill, except as offered by the gentleman from New York, in which he seeks to destroy the treaty navy of this country and force us to rely upon inadequate defense, upon the mercy, the pity, and love of other nations.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And that is just why, I suppose, the committee did not adopt this particular item until 2 days ago. They did not adopt the item until last Tuesday.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The committee adopted the item just as soon as the London Conference broke up. This Government went as far as any nation ever has in history to bring about a limitation of armament.

I stand here today and say that no Member on this floor is more determined to see armament reduced than I am, but I am unwilling for this country to be unprepared. I am unwilling for our treaty Navy to fall below that which this Government feels is necessary to afford adequate defense, and I certainly trust that this Committee will vote to maintain a treaty navy by authorizing these two ships, which are replacements of ships that are 26 years of age, and vote down the amendment of the gentleman from New York. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 25, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KOPPLEMANN: Page 49, line 23, after "(b)", strike out the balance of the page, and on page 50, strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 and insert "destroyers, submarines, and airplanes divided equally in number to the amount of $115,300,000."

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes to explain the amendment.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Is it not true that the time has previously been limited and that all debate has expired on this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is correct. The debate was limited and the time has expired, but the gentleman from Connecticut submits the unanimous-consent request to proceed for 3 minutes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I shall not object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, the vote just taken emphasized the fact that the House is determined to appropriate $115,300,000 for two battleships. My amendment would strike out the two battleships and in lieu thereof insert destroyers, submarines, and airplanes which, according to my understanding of defense armament, are the instruments that will accomplish what we are all trying to bring about, namely, an adequate defense. If battleships come here from foreign lands we will have these destroyers and airplanes ready to meet them, and it will be unnecessary for us to send our ships out on the seas to meet ships that may come to attack or invade our country.

I wish to emphasize that this country has adopted the policy of a good neighbor. Battleships emphasize bad neighbors. Implements of defense, such as planes and submarines and destroyers, as provided for in the amendment, will evidence to the people of America and the people of the world that our only purpose in arming ourselves is for defense. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12527) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes.

The Clerk read the motion to recommit, as follows:

Motion to recommit offered by Mr. MARCANTONIO: "I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with the instruction to report back forthwith with the following amendment: 'On page 49, line 23, after the word "submarine", strike out all of the language up to and including the figures "$115,300,000", on page 50, line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$111,300,000."'"

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were 28 ayes and 100 noes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 73, nays 212, not voting 142, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, Mr. ANDREW and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, are unavoidably absent on account of illness. If they were present, they would have voted "no" on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Iowa, Mr. UTTERBACK, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would have voted "aye" on the motion to recommit.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. KEE, is unavoidably absent. Had he been present, he would have voted "no" on the motion to recommit.

NEW LABELS FOR OLD POISONS

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous consent accorded me to extend by remarks, I include the stenographic report of a radio address delivered by me in Washington on Wednesday, April 29, 1936, over the stations of the Columbia Broadcasting System, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, in his first inaugural address to the American people, George Washington issued a significant warning that may well serve as the text of the remarks I am called upon to make tonight when he said: "The preservation of the sacred fire of liberty and the destiny of the republican model of government are justly considered, perhaps, as deeply, as finally staked on the experiment entrusted to the hands of the American people." For, to his comprehensive and prophetic vision, liberty and the republican model of government were kindred virtues, whose preservation was consigned to our Nation and our people in trust for a fortunate posterity.

That freedom and republican government have been justified of their children in America is evidenced by the fact that under our system America in less than a century had grown to preeminence in world affairs, bestowing upon her people such peace, happiness, and prosperity as had theretofore been unknown among nations and men. Our commerce whitened the seas. Our pioneers marched onward across mountain and river and plain toward the setting sun, to form the skirmish line of the new and mighty American civilization. Our land was gridironed with railroads, honeycombed with mines, tasseled with harvests, humming with industry, and America, producing more human wealth than had been created by all other nations and individuals since Omnipotence laid the foundations of the world, set her feet upon the oceans and her head among the stars, the fairest daughter of democracy, the queen of the family of nations.

There are today men in our midst who declare that such progress must now end. The chapter of liberty, they tell us, is now concluded. There are those who, like Mr. Rexford Tugwell, assert that we have a century and more of development to undo, and arrogantly claim that they will remake America according to plans radically foreign to the old liberalism under which our country became the envy and the admiration of the world.

During the last 3 years we have heard rumors of ominous forebodings and been witness to strange events. For the first time in American history, there has been a unified, cohesive effort to divide and destroy American regard for our traditional liberties and opportunities by the ruthless arraying of class against class, and the imputation of motives of dishonesty and selfishness and greed to all of those who differ with either the purposes or the methods of the inexperienced young men now mismanaging your Government here at Washington. During these months, millions of our people for the first time have been taught to hate other Americans. Other millions have been systematically urged to bear false witness and to covet the possessions of their more successful neighbors. Millions more—and I refer not to the deserving needy but to the many who are well able to care for themselves—have been sedulously educated to believe that the Federal Government owes them a living and that they owe their fellow citizens and the Government nothing—not even the formal tribute of a salute to the flag.

Into the political tranquillity that, with few disturbances, has for generations characterized American life, there have been suddenly injected the restless teachings of alien-minded theorists whose ideas are so foreign to accustomed American thought that they require a strange and not yet completely familiar terminology to import them into American political speech.

In other campaign years, ladies and gentlemen, you heard the familiar names of Democrat and Republican, the tariff, the full dinner pail, 16 to 1, and the like. Today, we are urged to think in terms of the classes and the masses, of regimentation, of planned economy, of the totalitarian state, of experimental habits of mind, of what Under Secretary of Agriculture Tugwell calls the third economy (and I make no allusion to its similarity to the Third Internationale), of the farmer-labor warfare, of entrenched greed, of liberal parties, and other terms born in the chancelleries of foreign lands. And while in normal times we might ignore these words as in themselves innocent and innocuous (though many a well-turned phrase has changed the destiny of an empire), we have today in our National Government men who are temperamentally disposed toward the dramatic solely because of its drama, who are allured by what they call "bold experimentation", who admire the new simply because of its novelty, men of what Gov. Alfred E. Smith would call the "Knickerbocker" type—who hug to their hearts the flattering illusion that the Almighty has ordained them alone to supervise and to dominate the lives of all other men. You can catch a glimpse of this attitude of mind in President Roosevelt's amazing declaration that the mechanics of civilization came to a dead stop the day before he was inaugurated—only, presumably, to have started again as soon as he took the oath to defend and preserve the Constitution.

While it is not my purpose to issue a blanket indictment of the Democratic administration, realizing that we must obliterate the evil, while conserving the good, yet after 3 years of New Deal vivisection on the helpless American body politic, we find the victim dangerously worse than when the national experimenters began to juggle the wrong surgical instruments and to confuse the political test tubes. It affords little consolation to the patient to know that the operation was a "scientistic" success, if he must die to prove its scientific value.

So, under the "brain trust" policy of promoting scarcity in a hungry land, our bread lines have lengthened, our relief rolls have expanded, and the unemployed wearily walking our city streets have increased to the terrifying total of over 12,600,000.

Is it any wonder that you are today so heavily burdened with taxes, is it surprising that the prices for the necessities of life are so high, when, for instance, millions of your American dollars are spent to provide seed for farmers, and then you are taxed to provide funds to pay the farmer for not sowing all of it? Next you are taxed to pay the farmer for plowing under his planted crops, thus wasting whatever money was used for seed, and then you are compelled to pay extravagant prices for food because your money helped the farmer to create a shortage. Finally you are taxed to buy imported foodstuffs—simply because our own farmers have not been permitted to produce sufficient for our needs.

That is what is known as "brain trust" intelligence. That is planned economy substituted by the Democratic administration at Washington for the economy of nature and the plan of Nature's God. It somehow never seems to occur to the New Dealers that the attempt to alleviate hunger by the destruction of crops is tantamount to the folly of seeking to fatten a calf by reducing its food supply.

Now, add to this the morally and politically indefensible policy which, on the one hand, takes millions from you in taxes to pay for making land less fruitful, and, on the other, squanders additional millions for irrigation projects intended to make the land more productive, and you have a fairly vivid panorama of the antics of the Democratic New Dealers in their endeavor to arrogate to themselves the functions of divinity.

Under the Democratic delusion that we were producing a surplus of farm products, you American farmers were compelled to take approximately 30,000,000 acres out of production, thus producing less and increasing our food prices. The result is that you are creating a more abundant market for cheaply produced foreign farm products of a type similar to those you restricted. As a consequence of this New Deal policy of sabotage, this land of ours that has been the granary of the world is, for the first time in our history, compelled to purchase food from foreign nations as a substitute for that which the administration has destroyed.

Though we can produce sufficient wool for our needs, under the New Deal last year we imported over 200,000,000 pounds of foreign wool. Though we are able to supply our own bread, the New Deal last year forced us to import over 27,000,000 bushels of wheat—an increase over 1934 of 255 percent. Though, if unmolested, our farmers can grow sufficient corn, under the New Deal we imported in 1935 over 43,000,000 bushels—an increase in 12 months of over 1,300 percent. Our dairies are now filled with butter churned in Denmark and Holland, twenty-two and one-half million pounds—an increase in a year of nearly 2,000 percent. Similar and varying increases are found in the imports of beef, cattle, rye, flax, barley, poultry, bacon, lard, eggs, and other products. While you American farmers are wondering what may happen to your farms, foreign farmers jubilantly acclaim the New Deal which is thus building up their markets here—and the moneys that are collected from the American worker are being wantonly siphoned off to enrich the farmers of Rumania and Brazil, of Egypt and Argentina, of Japan and the British Empire, and other foreign lands.

No one will blame the needy American farmer for accepting the checks which the "brain trust" professors have sent him for curtailing his crops—but our farmers are beginning to wonder who it was that received the huge benefit payments under the A. A. A. Is it not curious that Secretary Wallace is so reluctant to make public the names of those beneficiaries who have each received benefit payments of $10,000 or more in a single year? Why must these facts be hidden from the people? Is it because the Democratic theorists of Washington are fearful lest the people, who are paying 53 New Deal taxes on a loaf of bread, discover that the administration paid one farmer $219,000 for not raising 14,587 hogs—and one cotton planter $168,000 for not planting 7,000 acres of cotton? Are the Greek letter collegians afraid we may ascertain that one New York bank financially interested in a Puerto Rican sugar property received a generous check for $705,488 from the people's money, while another Puerto Rican sugar company was generously granted a million dollars of your funds for restricting its planting of sugarcane? Money from your pockets to pay for crops not planted, for improvements not needed, for projects uncontemplated even by the most visionary, for goods not made, for pigs not born, for land not cultivated, for mortgages not paid—millions for reform of our Government, millions of dollars a year for printing New Deal propaganda, news sheets, press agents, for New Deal theaters for the production of plays by Communist authors—while our hungry cry for bread and our unemployed increase to a total that is greater than that of all Europe!

Thus, with ever-quickening pace, the New Deal gleefully rushes the American people toward national bankruptcy and individual ruin at the rate of $20,000,000 a day—half of it a deficit—over $13,000 a minute, day and night.

Even during the time I am speaking to you tonight, the New Deal will spend over $400,000 of money taken from you in taxes. You will not be surprised that such an administration has refused to make restitution to the people of the billion dollars illegally collected from the processors under the unconstitutional A. A. A.—and, as if to revenge itself upon the people for enjoying somewhat lower prices because of the Supreme Court's protection of our constitutional rights in the A. A. A. decision—the administration now has a bill to authorize the Department of Agriculture to retain the employees of the defunct A. A. A. to carry out the new soil-conservation policy, and Secretary Wallace advises that the distribution of the new $440,000,000 appropriation among those who cooperate will start next September, which, by a curious coincidence, happens to be exactly 2 months before election.

It must have been such an idea as this that New Dealer Harry Hopkins had in mind when, with that contempt for the ordinary citizen that has characterized the "brain trust", he said that the American people are "too dumb" to understand what is going on. Perhaps the wish is father to the thought, for it is upon the assumption that we are too stupid to realize what is being done to us—that the Roosevelt administration builds its hopes for 4 more years of unprecedented corruption, unblushing political coercion in public works, unparalleled intellectual dishonesty, and unashamed, un-American policies.

Of course, it would be bad enough if all this experimentation were done free of charge. But the Democrats are sending you such a tidy little bill for their professorial services that, by the end of the year, the national debt shall have reached the staggering sum of thirty-five thousand millions of dollars.

It is difficult to imagine so gigantic a sum as this, but perhaps you will realize how much $35,000,000,000 are when I tell you that it is equal to almost 24 times the combined endowments of all colleges and universities in this country that so prides itself on the liberality of its expenditures for higher education. If you were to attempt to pay $35,000,000,000, each American family would be forced to pay $21 a week, almost $1,100 a year. Such a sum is equal to $35 a minute from the time of the birth of Christ. If your salary be $2,000 a year, you would need to work 17,500,000 years to earn so much. A city of 100,000 people would require five and a quarter centuries of work to amass such a total. If you were to start counting 35,000,000,000 silver dollars at the rate of 90 a minute, 10 hours a day, you would have counted your first billion in 62 years, and your thirty-fifth billion 2,100 years later.

Take from your pocket a $1 bill. It is 6 inches long. If you could weave a ribbon of dollar bills to the number of 35,000,000,000 and extend it around the earth, it would girdle our globe 140 times. Such a sum, ladies and gentlemen, is not merely money. It is the result of years of labor by millions of toiling, striving, suffering human souls.

Do you realize that if you work 6 days a week at the average American income, you are obliged to toil Monday and Tuesday for the Government before you begin to earn anything for your family? All January, February, and March of each year you work without pay—since your income for 3 months is paid out in taxes. Every baby born after June 1937 will inherit a tax of $338—not to mention the additional family tax of $1,800 to be paid as the Government bonds fall due.

It is not the wealthy who bear the burden of these taxes. The so-called "soak the thrifty" taxes yielded only enough income to pay the Government's upkeep for 10 days. If you were to take 100 percent of all incomes over $5,000 a year (leaving the wage earner nothing for himself), this levy would meet the national expenditures for only 6½ months. To finance the Government under New Deal waste for last year alone would have taken two-thirds of all the wages and all the salaries of all the citizens of the United States except those on the Government pay rolls. Indeed, if all the money now in circulation in the United States were tonight seized by the Government, it would not pay one-eighth of the public debt, which, after the demise of this administration, will rest as a mortgage upon you and your children.

No human being objects to the payment of any amount to relieve those in want or distress or hunger; but what must we think of the fact that 3,000,000 people during the last fiscal year received money from the Roosevelt administration as a reward for pledging themselves not to work?

Americans are the most generous people in the world. Sometimes (as with the war debts), we are stupidly munificent. But even the most reckless of Americans has a right to be perturbed when he sees the money wrung from him in taxes on the articles of everyday use squandered for silly projects of no abiding value.

And as an example of this policy at its best—or worst—the county of Westchester, N. Y., was recently sent several tons of chloride of lime from the Works Progress Administration "for disinfecting flood areas." It made no difference to the New Deal that Westchester has had no flood to disinfect, for last year the amiable New Dealers gave $600,000 of your money to the same county, although no one there requested it. It was to be used for "malaria-control projects." So Westchester put on its spectacles and searched all over the place for a good case of malaria, only to discover that no one had had malaria in all of Westchester's history.

While Jersey City received $1,733 of your money to build bird houses, Jamesburg, N. J., was allotted $40,000 for improving a football field and erecting a grandstand for almost 3,000 persons, although there are only 2,000 inhabitants of the town and the local school has never had a football team.

Then, New England hastens to compete with an allotment of $51,000 for three new Civilian Conservation camps, only to find after they were built that there were no recruits. And so the camps were joyfully dismantled and moved all the way to Portland for storage.

Not to be outdone, Placerville, Calif., receives $14,762 to build a lily pond. The fact that the people had no desire for a lily pond made no difference whatever. You people of Placerville are going to have a W. P. A. lily pond whether you like it or not. And while some of you California people may have difficulty in keeping your roof from leaking, President Roosevelt has seen to it that the horses at the State Fair in Kern County could experience no such trouble, for he allocates $4,200 for this purpose.

I sometimes wonder what the grateful citizen of Waltham, Mass., must have thought when the New Deal allotted him nearly $10,000 of your money to drain his piggery, when the local board of health could have made him do it for about a hundred.

It might be unkind to say to the New Dealers that there are more efficacious ways to spend the people's money than in teaching tap dancing to Chesapeake Bay lobstermen and clam diggers or counting caterpillars in thousands of towns, or even in providing a $25,000 haven for homeless dogs at Memphis, where the animals are to have shower baths and be served their food in "all-aluminum pans." Yet, following the publication at your expense of the Department of Agriculture's dissertation on the love life of the bullfrog, there has been issued, at an appreciable cost to you, a study of the love life of the cow. That, of course, will be interesting to the bovine intelligence of the 25,000,000 cows in the United States. I do not blame you for smiling, ladies and gentlemen; but it is your money that is being wasted in this ridiculous and inane fashion.

But, wait—Chicago must be heard from. Out there 100 P. W. A. workers were paid to dig an 800-foot trench for a storm sewer. It took each man 4 days to dig 8 feet, and when the trench was completed it was found that the sewer had already been installed by a previous group. So a third group was paid with your money to fill the trench, and a good time was had by all.

No doubt you shall cease to wonder when I tell you that up in Burlington, Vt., an item of $24,000 was allotted for repairing the reservoir, only to find that no repairs were needed. So the enterprising and undaunted New Dealers allotted $62,000 to repair the community center—and there is no such building.

Then in New Castle, in Pennsylvania, at a cost of $10,000 to you taxpayers, 32 able-bodied men were to spend 4½ months inspecting the spouting from all buildings to determine just where the rain and surface water go. A red fluid is placed in the surface water—and the New Dealers just follow the red line as it "goes 'round and 'round and comes right out" somewhere at your expense.

Millions of dollars of your money have been wasted upon such New Deal projects as paying men and women to teach grand opera to Ozark mountaineers, to make dolls out of old inner tubes, to write poems within a vocabulary of 900 words. Hundred of thousands have been allotted to pay men to make maps of the geographic distribution of ancient Greek dialects, to trace a genealogy of the Julian-Claudian line, to study the Roman coinage of the Alexandrian mint, to count two and one-half million words and determine the frequency of their use, to have artists fresco the walls of prisons, to count trees in city streets, to compute the variations of Russian rainfall, to measure the cubic contents of buildings, as in Allegheny County, Pa., at a cost of nearly half a million dollars; another half million to make New York bridle paths more attractive for horsemen; and other projects even less worthy, ranging from the $18,000 plan to grow mushrooms in abandoned West Virginia mines to the great $90,000,000 resettlement project of Secretary Tugwell which, with a staff that costs you one and three-quarter million dollars a month, hired 12,000 office seekers to provide work for 5,000 men. Every man has two bosses—a real embarrassment of riches, while the staff is spread over some 27 buildings and agencies.

Such, ladies and gentlemen, is the government of planned economy for which you are paying $650,000,000 a year more than for your food, clothing, and rent. With repudiation of its promises, with a 70-percent expansion of governmental expenditures, with three-quarters of a million employees on its pay roll, with its increasing taxes and unemployed, with its warfare against freedom of speech, with its ridicule of the Supreme Court and our ancient liberties, the New Deal, the only willfully subversive Government in our history, this year demands that you give it a vote of confidence.

Such is the manner of all despotisms. And the New Deal is not new in this. Indeed there is no important phase of it that is less than 300 years old. The policies of the A. A. A. were tried when the Pharaohs of Egypt seized control of the grain and cattle of the land, just as those of N. R. A. were attempted in the price fixing of the China of Confucius. Lacking a supreme court such as ours, planned economy spelled ruin for the Roman Empire when the Provinces (like our own States) became dependent on the central government, and the Emperor Domitian ordered half the vineyards "plowed under" to promote scarcity. A thousand years later Henry the Eighth, of England, and his daughter Elizabeth anticipated the New Deal in the granting of endless monopolies, and when Henry the Eighth devalued the English coinage, he became an exemplary model for the Rooseveltian debasement of our own currency. Thus down the stormy road of history the policies which the professors call new have led ancient peoples to destruction, desolation, and despair.

It was the clear-sighted founders of America who first threw down the gauntlet to the theory of government by dictatorship, by government planning. They knew better than we that the specific temptation of Government in all ages is to seek additional power or misuse that which it has. They foresaw the possible rise of glamorous personal leadership, the displacement of law by current emotion, the danger of unwise action under temporary stress, and to avert these evils they devised certain safeguards. The President, the Congress, the courts were all made subordinate to the voice of the people as annunciated in their Constitution.

These three branches of government, with officers who conscientiously swear to preserve the constitutional charter of our liberty, were rendered completely independent of one another in the patriotic belief that never would all three unite against the people or their Constitution. When one branch, such as the Executive, seeks to undermine the Constitution, or when perhaps he might, by favor or coercion, win the support of a complacent, supine Congress—there still remains another, the Supreme Court—to speak for the people and with the people's tongue to express their veto of any attempt at dictatorial power.

George Washington foresaw the danger of usurpation by an ambitious Executive when he wrote: "It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those entrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. * * * If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed."

There are those who, in a spirit of timid vacillation and unreasoning emotionalism, will cry, "You cannot eat the Constitution!" Well, my friends, you cannot eat the Ten Commandments or the Bible, but in their absence, man, made only a little less than the angels, would become little more than the brute. You could not eat the 22,000 regulations of the N. R. A. or the forgotten and violated promises of the Democratic platform. You cannot eat democracy, but "man does not live by bread alone", and without your Constitution guaranteeing your right to freedom of speech, of the press, of education, of religion, of equal opportunity before the law—without such liberty, all bread would be bitter, all drink would be as gall.

Of recent months some in high places have eaten away vital portions of the Constitution by direct attack and by subtle usurpation, and if it do not trouble their digestion, we hope it may disturb their consciences. For it is the Constitution which protects our human right to life and our human right to property. At times unphilosophical men confuse these rights, forgetting that the right to property is itself a human right—for if I have a right to life, none the less have I a right to the food which will sustain it. Property itself has no rights, but human beings have rights in property and duties as to its stewardship, and it was the realization by our fathers that property rights are natural rights which impelled them to declare that no person shall "be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law", just as the Ten Commandments given to Moses on Mount Sinai declared our duty to respect our neighbor's human right to life in the command, "Thou shalt not kill", and his human right to property in the injunctions, "Thou shalt not steal", "Thou shalt not covet they neighbor's goods."

So beware of the sycophants who seek to convert their ambitions into emergencies by their own self-serving declarations and beguile us into a thoughtless sacrifice of principles by insidious promises or bold misrepresentation of actual facts. Let us not as Americans subscribe to the European delusion that the need of the hour is strong government. We need not strong government, but wise government, invested with the virtues of insight, dignity, moderation, tolerance, and an acute sense of social justice to all. For, while a strong government may drive men into artificial loyalty to its slogans and catch phrases and build itself into a brief interlude of power on the clever strategies of a clique, it is only wise government that, by deserving men's faith and trust, can draw them into authentic and abiding loyalty to its purposes. The true purpose of government, as a wise old Pythagorean declared twenty-five hundred years ago, is to secure that freedom which, without unity, is a delusion, and that unity which, without freedom, is a snare. The true statesman, mindful that he has a covenant with the dead and with the unborn, unwilling to sell the future into slavery or set the stage for chaos, even though he thereby reap temporary advantage, will seek to lead rather than to follow the moods of his time; he will realize, if he be faithful to himself, that the future of America must be entrusted only to those who, knowing her history, her traditions, and her ideals, cannot choose but love her.

It is in this spirit that the party of Lincoln, of McKinley, and Theodore Roosevelt faces the future. The new Republicanism is not in the making, ladies and gentlemen; it is already here! And in clinging to the ideals of Washington and Jefferson and Lincoln, the Republican Party adheres to American principles, which, being ageless, are too old to be old-fashioned. Yes, the youngest, most liberal and vigorous force in the "new freedom" is the old Republican Americanism, for, being based upon the timeless and unchanging principles of human freedom and social values, the old ideals grow younger as the New Deal grows old. And it is because it is truly the party of the expansive, creative forces in American life that the voice of Republicanism is today raised on behalf of the really forgotten—the American taxpayer, the hungry, the increasing unemployed. It sends forth a tremendous challenge to the fallacies of the reactionary Rooseveltian collectivists, the Democratic money changers, whose crowning infamy it is that they have not hesitated to poison the well springs of democracy in order to win for themselves a purchased and fading popularity. Under the glittering pretensions of New Deal sophistry are the cruel policies of economic sterility, the Tory policies so alien to American ideals that they have won for President Roosevelt the enthusiastic support of communism, whose spokesman, George Dimitroff, advised his American comrades to work for the reelection of the President on the ground that he best represents the purposes with which they hope to subdue a free American people. Yes, my fellow citizens, these are perilous days, that call for clear thinking, comprehensive judgment, intelligent leadership, high accomplishment. Into our hands is given the future of a nation. So together we move forward to the restoration of American constitutional ideals, the rebirth of that soul-stirring, intangible, nontaxable, sacred thing called "freedom." As opportunism and self-aggrandizement winnow out the waverers, all true Americans will hasten forth to greet the dawn—in the realization that as long as American hearts shall fearlessly beat, as long as Republican tongues shall be chrismed with the love of liberty—so long shall the Constitution be the living soul of the Nation; so long shall the immortal spirits of our fathers stand on guard at the portals of the Republic, sentinel of deathless Republican devotion, custodian of America's imperishable destiny!

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the bill be given 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Whom is the letter from?

Mr. SCOTT. It is from the Oakland branch of the League Against War and Fascism, from Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—SOCIAL SECURITY—CONSERVATION—PEACE—ALL ESSENTIAL TO OUR NATIONAL PRESERVATION

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of the RECORD, I desire to make a short résumé of subjects in which I am interested and in which I have taken an active part:

I

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

Conservative newspapers approve fight

Freedom of speech and press, liberty of conscience, religious liberty, and academic freedom are essential to a democracy, and long before I came to Congress I fought for these rights. In Congress I have continued that fight. The RECORD will show that. And reference to the editorial columns of the various newspapers of America show their approbation by practically all groups in the journalistic world, including the most conservative and reactionary newspapers.

For many years I have made a study of the consequences of the loss of freedom.

Democracy must preserve civil liberties

I believe in the democratic form of government. I do not believe that democracy should use the methods of communism or fascism, or we cease to be a democracy. If we adopt a policy of persecution and do not allow the utmost liberality in civil liberties, we may go the route of certain foreign countries.

II

SOCIAL SECURITY

Have advocated since returning from France

I advocated unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, social security in general, ever since my return from France in 1919. I received a great deal of harsh criticism when I did, even from officials of the American Federation of Labor, who then opposed unemployment insurance.

I have made an especial study of old-age pensions and advocated them in my campaign. When I was a candidate, I stated that I was against the Townsend plan and that it was impossible. Since that time research has convinced me that this viewpoint is correct.

Townsend plan impractical

At the same time I realize that many of the people over the age of 60 have been imposed upon so much and have had the idea expressed to them in such fine phrases that many of them conscientiously believe in the Townsend plan. And it is true the United States of America is far behind many other countries in social security legislation.

Present act inadequate; must build up

The present act is by no means adequate to meet the situation of old-age security. Neither are the other features. But you must know this: I have received bitter opposition by certain reactionary elements because I even favored the Social Security Act.

This group that opposes me are really bitter about having any social-security legislation at all—they do not care to understand that social-security legislation will benefit them, their business, or their banking institutions, and themselves.

Conservative middle course best

Being opposed to the "Townsend plan", but in favor of social security, I have attempted to follow a conservative middle course. In that way we can really build up social security gradually and have a plan which will not break down. To suddenly issue as the Townsend plan requires what amounts to $28,000,000,000 extra money each year, would wreck the country to such an extent that in the beginning a loaf of bread would cost such a large amount of money—as it did in Germany during the weird period of printing money in hundreds of billions—that the $200 a month would mean about $30 a month or less. This would surely be followed by national bankruptcy and in a short time it would break the country.

So I proceed upon the assumption that to build up a social security plan in a reasonable, careful, conservative way is the best method.

III

CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES

Conservation and housing must be encouraged

I consider the conservation of natural resources quite the most important problem before the American people. This is true not only of agriculture, but of city life as well. At the outset, I favor two things exactly in line with conservation:

First. Attention to the matter of prevention of soil erosion, reforestation, flood control, and preservation of our lands and waters in this country—and this will take the time of 3,000,000 men, who can be put to work.

Second. A Nation-wide housing campaign, which would put the building trades back to work, along with dozens of other allied trades and industries, to the extent of at least another two or three million men.

In these two matters I feel sure that, intelligently conceived, there ought to put back into the real permanent economic activity of the country some five or six million American citizens.

Preservation of historic sites

Now, conservation has many aspects. I might mention that when I first came to Congress I introduced the "preservation of historic sites" bill, and the result is that an intelligent conservation of our historic sites has been begun for the United States of America. This is under the able direction of the Department of the Interior, of which Hon. Harold L. Ickes is the Secretary. This, however, is one of the minor phases of conservation.

Government programs

I have fought for the T. V. A., the building of Government dams, irrigation and reclamation, H. O. L. C., F. H. A., building, and the general development of the whole United States of America. I am convinced this is a proper course.

National Resources Board bill

Also I have introduced the National Resources Board bill which has been approved by the State planning boards of practically every State in the Union and by many engineering and technical societies and various units which have to do with planning and conservation—city, county, State, and National. This bill was approved in a letter to me by the President, who is strongly in favor of the National Resources Board being formed, and the purpose is to coordinate all information of any nature concerning resources. There already exists, by Executive order, a National Resources Committee and it is my purpose to have this made permanent.

As I said in the beginning, I consider this subject considerably more important than any of the others, because if we let our country blow and wash away we will have no use for such things as houses to live in, nor liberty, nor anything else.

IV

NEUTRALITY AND PEACE

Taking the profits out of war

In my first session in Congress I took an active part in the legislation to "take the profits out of war." This is the work which had been started by Congressman MCSWAIN, of South Carolina, in the House, and by Senators NYE, CLARK, BONE, and others in the Senate. Several of us got the bill out of the House into the Senate. Final legislation has not been enacted.

However, I am frank to say that the thing we must do is to stay out of war, rather than take the profits out of it. When we assume that we are merely going to take the "profits" out of war we more or less assume that there is going to be one. So it is more important to stay out of war altogether, and I have cooperated to that end.

Let us attend to our own business

I hold unalterably to the view that we must maintain neutrality and stay out of any wars or conflicts. Therefore, with Senators NYE and CLARK, I introduced the Nye-Clark-Maverick neutrality bill, the main features of which I have described in other speeches, and which was to keep this country completely out of foreign entanglements. I am told by some that this is a selfish policy, that civilization is likely to be destroyed unless in some way our country intervenes. However, I feel that we should attempt to save our own civilization first.

As for the League of Nations, the World Court, and the various other international organizations, I do not favor our entrance. Unfortunately, the League of Nations has been a failure, and we who live in this country have no reason to join it at this time when the membership has many secret aims of which we know nothing.

I think that what we should do, insofar as the international situation is concerned, is to stay home and to attend to our own business, get into no more wars, have an Army and Navy for defense only, make up our minds not to send our boys off to get killed anywhere else, and try to build up our own country and get our unemployed back to work. Eventually this Nation may join some world group of nations but not now.

V

CONCLUSIONS

I have merely mentioned a few of the things in which I have taken an active part. And I repeat the four things which I have mentioned today:

First. Freedom of speech.

Second. Social security.

Third. Conservation.

Fourth. Neutrality and peace.

Mr. Speaker, these four things are essential to the preservation of our country.

P. W. A. PROVIDES AID TO HOSPITALS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, when 512 hospitals, costing $129,749,077, are completed as a part of the Public Works Administration's construction program, another 40,000 beds in addition to many other facilities will be made available to the general public throughout the United States and its possessions.

Of this total $15,881,149 was allotted to the Federal hospital projects. The $113,749,077 non-Federal hospital program was made possible by P. W. A. grants of $38,802,801—the communities, counties, and States furnishing the remaining $75,065,127.

For that reason it may be said that P. W. A. is enabling the medical world to keep step not only with scientific progress but with the demands of an increasingly hospital-conscious public by the total expenditure of $54,683,950. It encouraged communities which volunteered to furnish the largest portion of the project costs; it footed the entire Federal hospital construction bill.

As it does so, these communities now find it possible to modernize their surgical and obstetrical departments, to install more efficient X-ray and other necessary laboratories, and to augment their facilities for stamping out tuberculosis and other contagious diseases. Public institutions, such as schools, have found it possible to set up complete clinics. Old hospitals, their working capital limited by the pinch of the depression, have taken advantage of the opportunities P. W. A. offered by displacing their ancient furniture and instruments with new equipment.

Such building and replacement has created widespread work not only at the sites, but in the mines, forests, and mills where materials originate, and in the factories and laboratories which fabricate the raw materials into building products, furniture, and medical equipment.

There is something of a paradox in the P. W. A.'s hospital program. It started at a time when the number of institutions had been steadily dwindling. Since 1923 the total number of private, city, State, and Federal hospitals has fallen from 6,009 to 5,404 in 1935. This steady decrease, according to the American Medical Association's Journal, has resulted largely from intracity consolidations.

P. W. A., however, refused assistance to any overhospitalized city, county, or State. Projects were approved only where it could be proven that additional facilities or new hospitals were of vital necessity.

Although the number of hospitals has been decreasing since 1923, the number of beds available in the "surviving" units increased at a fairly steady rate until 1928. From that year on the number of beds, while continuing to increase, did so at a much slower rate. Only 12,692 beds had been added to American hospitals in 1932, a distinct drop from the 40,239 added during the preceding year. With the inception of the Public Works Administration, however, 21,055 beds were added between 1933 and 1934, and 28,249 between 1934 and 1935. P. W. A. officials have expressed the belief that by the time the construction program has been completed the normal rate of increase will have been resumed. During the last 26 years this "normal" rate has been 25,203 beds per year.

Medical authorities have expressed great interest in the P. W. A. program. There has always been considerable need for better obstetrical facilities. Expectant mothers are now arranging far in advance for hospitalization. The annual hospital census for 1935 shows that the total number of patients admitted was 7,709,942, a gain of 562,526 over the preceding year.

To date 109 hospitals are being either repaired or constructed under P. W. A.'s Federal program, involving the expenditures of $15,881,149, and adding about 8,000 beds to Federal hospitals. These are situated in practically every State and possession of the United States.

The Eskimos of Alaska have benefited from the Federal program as well as those stricken with leprosy at the Virgin Islands. Many hospitals are being constructed on Indian reservations in Arizona, California, Iowa, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Oregon, Washington, Wyoming, and Utah.

The War and Navy Departments are constructing hospitals and dispensaries in connection with their various military posts. The largest of these are the Marine Hospital at New York City, costing $2,347,051, and the Naval Hospital at Philadelphia, costing $2,350,000.

Of the non-Federal P. W. A. program there are 332 projects covering work upon approximately 400 hospitals. Dividing the non-Federal list into two classifications, those involving institutions which will add beds for hospital use and those which do not include beds, P. W. A. granted the $38,802,801 to make possible this construction. P. W. A. loaned $29,121,940 to applicants, while the applicants themselves furnished the balance of $45,080,492, making the total of $113,005,233.

Of this number, 202 projects made room for 32,178 beds. These institutions called for grants totaling $28,386,695 for construction estimated to cost $82,867,928.

Those projects not involving the additional beds numbered 130, and for them was allotted the total of $10,416,106, making possible institutions estimated to cost $30,137,205. Some of these projects involve repairs on several hospitals in the same city.

The Inspection Division informed the Administrator that hospitals actually completed and now occupied total 72 with construction of an additional 246 hospitals under way. Only 39 are yet to be started.

Under the classifications of hospitals also come institutions which specialize in mental diseases or similar afflictions, of which 14 have been completed, 30 started, and only 2 yet to get under way.

An example of the manner in which P. W. A. came to the assistance of communities is that of the Allegheny General Hospital at Pittsburgh. When first planned this institution was to cost $8,000,000. Work was started in 1929. In 1931 the funds were exhausted and it was necessary to suspend work until P. W. A. came to its assistance shortly after its inception in 1933. This building is now nearing completion. The nurses' home is already occupied.

FEDERAL LAND BANKS BECOME REAL-ESTATE SHARKS

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks, and include therein an advertisement showing the foreclosure of lands by the joint-stock bank in the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a newspaper advertisement?

Mr. LEMKE. No. It is an auction advertisement showing the number of sales in one day.

Mr. RICH. Who made this auction notice?

Mr. LEMKE. The joint-stock land bank. It is a sale. I am trying to show the number of sales made in connection with foreclosures of farm mortgages.

Mr. RICH. It is made by some authentic Government agency?

Mr. LEMKE. I do not know whether that is a Government agency or not. I think it is.

Mr. RICH. If it is a Government agency I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot say whether it is a Government agency or not.

Mr. RICH. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says it is a Government agency, and therefore I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I wish to thank each and every one of the 218 signers on petition no 7, which petition discharges the Rules Committee and brings the Frazier-Lemke refinance bill up for a vote and disposition on its merits on the floor. I can assure these 218 signers that the farmers of this Nation feel grateful to them for signing the petition and for their cooperation.

May I also say to those who have not signed that now that the bill is coming up on its merits, to lay aside all prejudice and meet the issue squarely and keep an open mind on the bill until the last argument is heard and the final vote recorded. If this is done, we feel confident of an overwhelming victory for the 2,000,000 farm families, consisting of 10,000,000 men, women, and children, whose homes are endangered by mortgage foreclosures. The Frazier-Lemke refinance bill is their only relief. Let us not be misled, the Federal land banks are not helping these farmers.

We have been led to believe by those defending the Farm Credit Administration and those defending the Home Owners' Loan Corporation that the mortgage foreclosure situation had been materially changed. Such are not the facts. According to figures prepared by the Division of Research and Statistics, Federal Home Loan Board, of Washington, D. C., the following facts are given:

In 1934 there were approximately 370,772 real-estate foreclosures. This includes both agricultural and urban foreclosures. In 1935 there were 366,802 such foreclosures, making a decrease of only 3,900 foreclosures in the year 1935 as compared with the year 1934.

If the total number and amount of mortgages on farms and homes had been taken into consideration, the percentage of foreclosures in 1935 would be considerably larger than in 1934. The reason for this is that the mortgaged indebtedness was considerably reduced by the foreclosures in 1934.

The Federal land bank is averaging more than 2,000 foreclosures per month, a picture quite in contrast with the one given here on the floor telling of the wonderful help the bank is giving to farmers. If to relieve them of their homes at the rate of over 2,000 per month is helping the farmers, the Federal land banks are succeeding wonderfully.

In addition to these foreclosures of the Federal land bank we have the foreclosures of the joint-stock land banks, an insolvent twin brother of the Federal land bank that is now in the process of liquidation.

I submit below an advertisement selling 82 farms in the State of Ohio by one of these twin brothers of the Federal land bank, the Virginian Joint Stock Land Bank. You will note that this real-estate shark, the despoiler of homes, gives free lunches and a free automobile so that it may get bidders to buy the homes taken away from the unfortunate.

In addition to these 82 farms sold by that institution, there are 9 city homes and 1 greenhouse, all, I presume, part of the property of the farmers who were foolish enough to believe that the joint-stock land bank would protect them in the hour of need at the time that they gave it the mortgage. The advertisement is as follows:

Own your farm—own your home—at your own price.

Our orders are to sell. Each property offered will positively be sold to the highest legitimate bidder, regardless of price. Your bids will make the price. This fact is assured by the following certified extract from our contract:

"The party of the first part (the Virginian Joint Stock Land Bank) does hereby authorize and empower said party of the second part (S. Franklyn Woodcock, Inc.) actually and in good faith to sell said properties to the highest bidders therefor at said sale, and does further covenant and agree not to bid upon said property or to authorize anyone else to bid for it or in its behalf for the purpose of increasing any other bid or bids on said properties or for establishing a minimum price at which said properties shall be sold."

This is to certify that the above is a true copy of the original agreement, and that I have compared the same.

THEODORE E. WARREN,
Notary Public, Ashtabula County, State of Ohio.

Remember the dates—April—Wednesday, 22d; Thursday, 23d; Friday, 24th; and Saturday, 25th, 1936.

Free! Free! Free! Plymouth sedan will be given away during this sale. Whether buyer or spectator, you have an equal chance to win this car. The winner must be on the property when the car is given away in order to participate.

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a radio address I delivered this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include my address over National Broadcasting Co., May 1, 1936, as follows:

Much has happened the past 3 years in Washington that is repulsive to every sense of honesty and decency. We have been told by many high officials that everything that has happened in this country the past 150 years is all wrong. That we cannot go back to the "horse and buggy" days. That those things that have made us the greatest Nation on earth, those things that have given our farmers, our laboring men, our businessmen, our people in general, the highest standard of living of any nation must be cast aside, and in place of those things we must substitute certain experimentations, we must socialize our entire economic system. We are advised that the opinions of such distinguished Democrats as John W. Davis, ex-Governor Ritchie, of Maryland, of Alfred E. Smith, ex-Senator Reed, of Missouri, and many other prominent Democrats are all wrong. That in order to have a more abundant life we must be regimented under the plans and theories of Mordecai Ezekiel, Rexford G. Tugwell, Felix Frankfurter, and others. The American people will be called upon to decide within a few months whether they want to continue with the present program of alien tendencies or whether they want to be led by the soundness of a Lowden, a Knox, a Landon, a Dickinson, a Vandenberg. With the Federal Treasury as a campaign fund, with over 20,000,000 people receiving direct or indirect subsidies from a Tammanyized government, we are confronted with the proposition: Can a government, through vote-buying manipulation, buy an election and indefinitely remain in power? If it can be done in 1936, it can and will be done in 1940 and 1944.

With a supine and supercilious Congress under the domination of the Executive, with the realization that during the years 1936 to 1940 the Chief Executive will be called upon in all probability to appoint several members of the Supreme Court, we as Americans should pause and consider the consequences of returning the present administration to power. Of course, we know in advance of the Republican convention, whoever the Republicans nominate the Democratic leaders in a demagogic manner will immediately pull that old stuff, "He is a Wall Street man." But I don't believe the American people will be disillusioned.

We have seen under the guise of keeping people from starving the squandering of billions of dollars by this administration. Today we have a national debt of over $33,000,000,000, and we have obligated ourselves for an additional five billions that will have to be paid. Mr. Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, stated yesterday before the Senate Finance Committee that there would be a Treasury deficit of $6,000,000,000 for the current fiscal year. According to him it will be an all-time high. How far can we go with this sort of thing?

Not paid by the rich, as the administration would lead us to believe, but by you and me, your children and my children. No one wants to see anyone starve; but the fact remains, as evidenced in all our communities, that while the unfortunate are receiving a meager allowance, the Democratic spoilsmen who are administering the relief are obtaining by far the lion's share. Perhaps the fullest demagoguery is practiced by the administration when they use such terms as "soaking the rich" and "driving the money changers from the temple." It is interesting to know that if the Government had confiscated all the wealth of all the millionaires in this country they would not have had enough money to run the Government the past 3 years. You and I are paying for the squandering—we are going to continue to pay. Every time a tax bill is passed putting additional burdens on companies, corporations, they naturally pass it on to the consumers. They add it to the cost of the manufactured article we buy.

We all readily admit that rich industries should pay—and pay well. Liberal taxes are necessary. But when we burden them with taxes that keep them from employing labor, building additions to their factories, or opening up new enterprises, we can't possibly return to a normal condition. The present 12,000,000 men and women out of work will continue to walk the streets. We had better turn an unhearing ear to all the poppycock of "soaking the thrifty." It would be well for us to insist that all these long-haired professors leave industry alone. Labor and so-called capitalism would soon get together, as they have done and are doing in England. While we have as many unemployed as there were in 1933, the depression in England is practically over.

As a result of not interfering with business in England, the industries in England have absorbed the unemployed; it has balanced its budget. Under the present reciprocal agreements millions of dollars' worth of goods from Japan and other countries are flooding our markets while our own factories remain closed, while the United States has been fiddling her time away with experimentations that have stifled trade. Without confidence capital cannot be invested. Without capital industry cannot go ahead. Without industry there cannot be jobs. Some members of the Democratic Party seem to be terribly put out that anyone should dare to find fault with the administration now in power. They fly into rage if anyone dares to question the soundness of any of Mr. Roosevelt's schemes. Have they forgotten that for more than 2 years the Republicans in Congress and out have been good soldiers? They gave the President his way, giving him every opportunity to put his views in operation. They were not obstructionists. While the Republicans remembered the "smear Hoover" tactics of the opposition party, they returned good for evil and for an unbelievably long time, even though they were not convinced of the soundness of many of the ideas, they allowed the President to pursue the course chosen by him with the voicing of scarcely any criticism. But the time has come when silent acquiescence in every proposal of Mr. Roosevelt and his "brain trust" has ceased to be a virtue. He is running past every danger signal and warning sign. It is time to call a spade a spade and to put the blame for halting recovery where it belongs. The first aggressive and violent attacks on the New Deal have come from the best brains of the Democratic Party.

If their last three candidates for President, two of their recent national chairmen, Governors and ex-Governors, Senators and ex-Senators, see fit to break from the New Deal and attack its principles and policies, is there any valid reason why we should longer remain silent when we are convinced that the New Deal is delaying economic recovery instead of promoting it? What about these prominent and outstanding Democrats? Surely their conviction as to the correctness of their views must be overwhelming when they desert their administration leaders and speak out openly against them. Suffice it to say that they are Americans first and Democrats second. Their party allegiance is not sufficient to lead them to follow the present socialistic administration. Mr. Roosevelt should remember that the millions of Democrats that have left him have done so because in 1932 they voted for Roosevelt because they believed him. They felt sure that when he accepted the Democratic platform he meant to follow it. They did not believe that it would be discarded for the Socialist platform.

New Dealers continually ask, What would you do? What is your program? What are your plans? I would say, "My program is covered by the very platform on which Mr. Roosevelt was elected." In taking care of the poor, the unemployed, "cut out the frills", as Governor Landon has aptly stated. Do away with the hundreds of thousands Farleyized and Tammanyized spoilsmen. Then there could be a reduction in expenses as promised by Mr. Roosevelt. Reduce all these alphabetical agencies and let the people run their own affairs as was promised. Help the "real forgotten man"—the small businessman—the man in the small store. While our daily newspapers record that large stores are paying large dividends, the small businessman, the storekeepers, are not receiving wages for their work. There are no profits for them.

Ask the small businessman what he thinks of the New Deal and the chances for his future. Ask the millions of young men and women that have worked their way through college what they think of the New Deal. What has this administration done for them? What is in future store for them? For 3 years these young graduates have walked the streets or worked with a pick and shovel. They have had about enough of that. This administration has failed them. They know that their individual initiative has been taken from them. They haven't much to look forward to, except to pay the huge debt that has been saddled upon them. They laugh when they hear about the $20,000 dog pound that has been built in Memphis. They smile when they read about aristocrats being taught to play checkers at governmental expense, the teaching of tap dancing by governmental employees. They look with scorn on the present spoils system, false expressions about planned economy, more abundant life, driving the money changers from the temple, and soaking the thrifty.

In conclusion let me say that if our institutions are to be preserved we must accept as our doctrines thrift, individualism, initiative; we must give employers that long-waited-for breathing spell. We must insist that there be no class hatred; there is room enough in this country for capital as well as labor. If we do this, we will not have anything to worry about. Our Nation will continue, not as would Stalin, Hitler, Mussolini have it, but as planned by Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, and others over 150 years ago.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HENNINGS, is unavoidably detained. If present, he would have voted "no" on the motion to recommit the Navy appropriation bill.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. DUNN, is unavoidably detained on account of the illness of his son. Had he been present, he would have voted "no" on the motion to recommit the Navy appropriation bill.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 315 OF THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and leave out the letter. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of the last session I introduced H. R. 9229, H. R. 9230, and H. R. 9231, bills which were designed to amend section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 and to bring about justice to speakers, civic organizations, and so forth, in the discussion of political, social, and economic problems. The bills were designed to eliminate such practices as one that has just been called to my attention by the Utility Consumers League, 686 Lexington Avenue, New York City.

Mr. John A. Trinchere, chairman of the Utility Consumers League, had been scheduled by station WNEW, of Newark, N. J., to deliver an address on the subject, Abusing Telephone Subscribers. On March 9, 1936, by telephone, and again on March 9, 1936, by letter, the station confirmed the address for Thursday, March 19, 1936, from 8:15 to 8:30 p. m. The speaker sent five copies of his address to the station 3 days in advance. These five copies were required by the station for press and Commission purposes. The copies were delivered in person on Saturday, March 14.

On March 18 Mr. Trinchere was notified by the special feature department of the station that the scheduled talk for March 19 had been postponed for a few days because the Federal Communications Commission was conducting a wide investigation of the American Telephone & Telegraph system.

On March 19 and 26 the league wrote demanding a showdown, and were informed that the postponed radio talk had been postponed for 3 weeks or longer pending the termination and outcome of the F. C. C.'s probe of the A. T. & T. The league failed to obtain from the station a written and official explanation for sudden postponement and subsequent cancelation. It was discovered on March 24 that the radio talk had been canceled and not postponed.

The purpose of the radio address was to expose the New York Telephone Co.'s gross abuses, evil practices, and so forth, found by the league's free complaint bureau and investigations carried on for a number of years. The radio talk was also designed to announce a State-wide drive for lower telephone rates, rental, and service charges, and appealing to the public to back Assemblyman Meyer Alterman's two telephone bills, nos. 661 and 662.

This is one specific case. Many others could be mentioned showing censorship by the stations at the instigation of large and powerful organizations. It is easy to see why A. T. & T. did not want a speech of this kind broadcast. The three bills I introduced would make such censorship impossible.

The Utility Consumers League charges—

First. That radio station WNEW is not operating in the public interest.

Second. That the station is violating the Federal Communications Commission's and the Federal Trade Commission's rulings as laid down on commercial continuities.

Third. That the station is misleading the public by announcing a series of news broadcasts as originating at the editorial offices of the New York Evening Journal, as in reality they took place at the station's studios.

Fourth. That after a radio address, topic, Abusing Telephone Subscribers, by John A. Trinchere, chairman of the Utility Consumers' League, had been scheduled by the station, the talk was suddenly canceled after all arrangements had been made; copies of speech passed and approved by the station.

Fifth. That the station, after two requests were made in letters of March 19 and 26, it persistently refused to furnish us with a written and official statement for canceling scheduled radio talk by John A. Trinchere.

Sixth. That the station deliberately deceived the Utility Consumers' League in making oral statements that the scheduled talk was postponed twice for reason of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. system investigation by the Federal Communications Commission at Washington, D. C., when the radio talk had been canceled all the while, and prior to March 19, night of radio address.

Undoubtedly other Members have received like protests or have been treated in the same manner. I therefore ask the Members of the House to get copies of H. R. 9229, H. R. 9230, and H. R. 9231, study them, and then if still interested to ask the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for a hearing on these bills.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tonight it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to call the attention of the majority leader to the fact that these appropriation bills are all coming in here from the Senate for more than they were a year ago. I warn you as a Democratic Party that you must cut these appropriations down. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE BOOK AND THE PAGE—PROOF REFUTING MENDACIOUS MISINFORMATION AND MISREPRESENTATION REGARDING LAW PREVENTING COMMUNISM FROM BEING INDOCTRINATED IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

[From RECORD, Mar. 3, 1936]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to incorporate some excerpts and data.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[From RECORD, Mar. 16, 1936]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on March 3 I received permission to extend my remarks and to incorporate some excerpts and data. I am waiting on some data from the Department, and I will not have it until Friday. I ask unanimous consent that instead of dating it on the 3d it may be dated next Friday the 20th.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[From RECORD, Mar. 23, 1936]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on the 16th I secured permission to date my remarks on March 20, which on March 3, I got permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include some excerpts from hearings and data which I am securing from the departments here in Washington. I find I will not be able to get all this data before Friday, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend the time for the extension of my remarks until next Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

[From RECORD, Apr. 28, 1936]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the permission I had to extend my remarks on the District of Columbia appropriation bill expires today. On March 23, 1936, I obtained permission of the House to date such remarks on Friday, March 27, 1936. I have been delayed in getting some necessary data from different bureaus of the District government which I wanted to use, and it will be next Friday before I get some of it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the permission granted me be renewed so that my extension of remarks may be dated next Friday, May 1, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Texas extending his remarks on the District bill as indicated?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the time has come when it is due the people of the United States that there shall be corrected the wholesale misinformation and wanton misrepresentation which has been broadcasted over the Nation about the law, which on June 6, 1935, Congress passed, by the unanimous vote of both House and Senate, to stop communism from being indoctrinated in the public schools of the District of Columbia.

THE "REDS" CALL IT THE "RED RIDER"

This law was not misnamed, Mr. Speaker, because it does ride the "reds." It was not passed for them; it was passed against them. It was not to help the "reds"; it was to unhorse them. It was not to further their schemes; it was to stop them.

FALSEHOODS GALORE BROADCASTED

More deliberate, spiteful, malicious falsehoods have been broadcasted over the United States about this "red rider" than about any other law ever passed by Congress. It has been falsely asserted:

First. That it "was slipped into a conference report", when it was never in a conference report at all.

Second. That it "was slipped through the House without Members on the floor having a chance to know about it", when such was not the fact, and both the House Journal and the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD prove just the contrary.

Third. That "BLANTON slipped it through", when the RECORDS show and the incontrovertible facts are that it was an amendment offered in the House by Mr. CANNON of Missouri, the Cannon amendment being read to the House by the Clerk from the Speaker's desk and voted upon by Members and passed the House by a unanimous vote; and that this "red rider" amendment was offered from the floor of the Senate by Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma, was read by the Senate clerk from the Vice President's desk to the Senate, and was voted upon by the Senate and the Senate passed same by a unanimous vote.

Fourth. That "there was no occasion for its passage", when proof that is indisputable shows the contrary.

Fifth. That "it prevents proper factual instruction", when just the contrary is true, the facts being that Corporation Counsel Prettyman rendered to the Board of Education a decisive, clear-cut opinion holding just the opposite, advising the Board of Education that this law does not prevent proper factual instruction and does not prevent any teacher in any way from teaching the truth about communism, but all it does is that it prevents teachers from indoctrinating communism in the public schools.

Sixth. That "Comptroller General McCarl has interfered with the 'academic freedom' of teachers and required affidavits from them that prevents expounding proper 'factual instructions' to their pupils", when McCarl has made no such ruling whatsoever.

Seventh. That "teachers are insulted by having to make affidavit they have not taught communism", when the facts are that such affidavit was required only after Superintendent Ballou stubbornly contended that his teachers had the right to teach what they pleased, and that Congress could not restrict them, and refused to instruct his teachers that they must follow the ruling of Corporation Counsel Prettyman and not attempt to indoctrinate communism, and it was proposed to Superintendent Ballou that if he would instruct his teachers to follow said Prettyman opinion, then Comptroller General McCarl would no longer require the affidavits, but Ballou stated emphatically that "he did not care to so advise his teachers."

Eighth. That "the House subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations handling the District appropriation bill had no authority to allow witnesses to testify about communism in schools at their hearings", when said subcommittee did have full authority, and in no way exceeded its authority, Superintendent Ballou having requested said subcommittee to grant him $78,660 for him to spend on his so-called "character education", concerning which the question of indoctrinating communism in the public schools was vitally and inseparably connected, and after hearing convincing evidence the subcommittee voted unanimously not to allow the $78,660, and did not allow it, and thus saved $78,660 from being subversively misapplied and wasted.

Ninth. That the said "House subcommittee of the Committee on Appropirations conducted an inquisition, abused witnesses, did not give them time needed, and conducted an improper star-chamber proceeding", when all of such accusations were maliciously and mendaciously false in their entirety.

Tenth. That "the people of the District of Columbia want the 'Sissy bill' enacted and the 'red rider' repealed", when just the opposite is true.

Eleventh. That "the House of Representatives is practically unanimous in wanting the 'Sissy bill' enacted and the 'red rider' repealed", when both statements are untrue.

Twelfth. That "the hearings before the Subcommittee on Education of the Committee on the District of Columbia accorded all witnesses fair treatment and warranted the passage of the 'sissy bill' and the repeal of the 'red rider' by the House", when none of such assertions are true and the falsity of same will be clearly shown hereafter by quotations from said hearings.

IGNORANCE PLUS MENDACITY

It is bad enough, Mr. Speaker, for anyone to be ignorant of the real facts, to be wholly unfamiliar with the rules and precedents of Congress, to be wholly unacquainted with what goes on in the House of Representatives, and not know how its leaders transact business, and not know what it is all about, but where such ignorance is coupled with an absolute indifference to and disregard of the truth, and a spiteful, malicious mendacity, it eventuates in an intolerable situation, for people and newspapers all over the country thus get a perverted view, and repeat ad infinitum such misrepresentations.

THE BOOK AND THE PAGE

I intend now, Mr. Speaker, to take up one by one, and disprove by incontrovertible evidence, each and every one of the spiteful, malicious, and mendacious misrepresentations made about the "red rider." I will give the book and page on every one of them, so that no one ever again will dare repeat them or deny the probative force and effect of my proof.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NUMBER ONE

That the "red rider" was slipped into a conference report.

Not one word of the "red rider" was ever in the conference report, which is signed by ELMER THOMAS, CARTER GLASS, ROYAL S. COPELAND, WILLIAM H. KING, GERALD P. NYE, and HENRY W. KEYES, as managers on the part of the Senate, and by CLARENCE CANNON, THOMAS L. BLANTON, and J. W. DITTER, as managers on the part of the House, and is printed in full on page 8796 and also on page 8802 of the permanent CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 6, 1935.

Anyone knowing the rules of the House would know that if the "red rider" had been placed in the conference report it would have vitiated the entire report, and made it subject to a point of order, for the reason that Senate amendment no. 48, being legislation, could not be agreed to by the House conferees, but they were compelled to bring said Senate amendment no. 48 back to the House and allow the House to vote on same, and the "red rider" likewise being legislation which was added as a proviso to said Senate amendment no. 48 by vote of both House and Senate, it could not be put in a conference report, but had to be presented to the House for vote thereon. In the conference the House managers verbally agreed with the Senate managers that said Senate amendment no. 48 would be returned to both Houses, for both House and Senate to take action thereon, and that if the Senate managers, through Senator THOMAS, would propose to the Senate that it would add the "red rider" as a proviso to Senate amendment 48, the House managers, through Chairman CANNON, would propose to the House that it concur in said Senate amendment no. 48 with an amendment, adding said "red rider" as a proviso to said Senate amendment 48, both House and Senate conferees having a copy of said "red rider" in writing, and the above action was taken in the Senate by Senator THOMAS, and was taken in the House by Chairman CANNON, and "BLANTON" did not have one thing to do with said proceedings in either the House or Senate, as same were handled by Chairman CANNON and Senator THOMAS, they being the ones in charge of it, and who proposed to the House and Senate that Senate amendment no. 48 be amended by adding the "red rider" as a proviso to it. Hence, it is mendaciously false, and wholly without basis, to state that the "red rider" was "slipped into the conference report", when not one word of the "red rider" was ever in the conference report.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 2

That the red rider was slipped through the House without Members on the floor having a chance to know about it.

The above assertion is absolutely false. There is not one word of truth in it. The following House proceedings are quoted verbatim from page 8808 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, permanent, of June 6, 1935:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Before the period at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ': Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payments of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.' "

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which the foregoing amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

You will note that the "red rider", or the law that prevents communism in the public schools, is the proviso to said Senate amendment no. 48, following the word "Provided." You will note that it was read by the Clerk in the House. You will note that the motion to adopt it was made by Mr. CANNON of Missouri. You will note that the motion was agreed to.

ANY MEMBER PRESENT COULD HAVE OPPOSED IT

All Members of the House who watch its proceedings and know what is going on knew that said conference report was before the House for final action. They knew that the Senate had inserted 114 amendments in said bill. They knew that some of these amendments were legislation, and had to be voted upon by the House. They knew, when they heard the Clerk read this proviso, which Mr. CANNON of Missouri offered as an amendment to Senate amendment no. 48, that it would prevent communism from being indoctrinated in the public schools. Any Member present could have opposed the motion made by Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Any Member present, who desired to do so, could have gotten time and spoken against Mr. CANNON's motion. They could have offered a preferential motion to concur in Senate amendment no. 48, which would have taken precedence over Mr. CANNON's motion to concur with the red-rider amendment. No one objected to Mr. CANNON's motion. No one asked to speak against it. No one offered any preferential motion. No one tried to stop it. No one voted against it. No one asked for a division on the vote. No one asked for the yeas and nays. It passed unanimously. No one objected when Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table, which made the said action of the House final. Anyone could have objected if they had desired.

WOULD PLEAD GUILTY TO NEGLECT OF DUTY

Where is the Member who will say he was asleep when Mr. CANNON made his motion to adopt the "red rider"? Where is the Member who will say that he was not attending to his duties on the floor and was absent from the House? Where is the Member who will say that he did not know what was going on in the House? Where is the Member who will say that he did not avail himself of his privileges to stop a measure he did not like, when he did not object to it, when he did not ask for time to speak against it, when he did not raise his voice against it, when he did not vote against it, and when he did not demand a roll call against it? It would simply be a plea of guilty to neglect of duty.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 3

That BLANTON slipped it through.

It was not "slipped" through by anybody. The assertion that it was "slipped" through is false. The malicious assertion that "BLANTON slipped it through" is mendaciously false. When the House managers in conference were trying to adjust the 114 Senate amendments with the Senate managers, in June 1935, and the Senate managers asserted there would be no bill unless the House agreed to the Senate amendment making the appropriation for so-called character education, I proposed that if the Senate managers would recommend to the Senate the adoption of a proviso preventing communism from being taught and advocated in the schools we would recommend to the House that it adopt the Senate proposal thus amended, and then in said conference I dictated said proviso to our clerk, Mr. Duvall, to wit:

That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.

And said proviso was drawn up in writing by Mr. Duvall, and copies of same were furnished to the House and Senate managers, and all agreed that recommendation would be made both to the House and Senate that said proviso be adopted as an amendment to said Senate amendment no. 48, but said conferees could make no agreement about same other than they would submit the matter to the House and Senate for adoption or rejection, as both the Senate amendment no. 48 and said amendment thereto were legislation, and the conferees could not put any legislation in the conference report, as agreeing to legislation in a conference report would under the rules vitiate the entire report.

CHAIRMAN CANNON MADE THE MOTION

I have already quoted the proceedings in the House, page 8002, on June 6, 1935, showing the motion made by Chairman CANNON of Missouri, to concur in the Senate amendment no. 48, as amended by adding the "red rider" as a proviso, and that said "red rider" was read to the House by the Clerk from the Speaker's desk, and the House adopted the motion made by Mr. CANNON of Missouri, and by an unanimous vote adopted said "red rider." The unfounded report "that BLANTON slipped it through" was made by irresponsibles, based upon an assertion made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK], who is against the "red rider" and wants it repealed, in a colloquy on the floor which from page 1814 of the RECORD for February 11, 1936, I now quote:

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I was on the floor of this House all the time. About 40 or 50 Members were here, and never before did I hear TOM BLANTON speak in a muffled tone so that no one could know what it was. The Clerk was not understood, because I was here and I would have objected. I know what a point of order is. I know what legislation in an appropriation bill is; that it is improper and subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, Mr. Speaker, that is all nonsense. TOM BLANTON was not even speaking. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] made the motion to adopt the rider, and it was read by the Clerk from the desk in front of the Speaker.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes. You and Mr. CANNON were right there [pointing].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, is there any way to stop this obstreperousness? [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, that motion to adopt the rider I had the conferees to agree to, stopping communism in the Washington schools, was made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], who moved to recede from the amendment of the Senate and concur with this anticommunism amendment, which amendment he had the Clerk read aloud to the House. That was Mr. CANNON talking and our Clerk reading. It was Mr. CANNON's motion, not mine.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. When I made the statement, I did not say the gentleman from Texas made the motion, but the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] were there [pointing] and you stood right alongside him, and in muffled tones told him what to do. Mr. CANNON made that motion. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman knows all that, he must have known about the motion to adopt the rider to stop communism.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, does anybody think for a minute he is going to tell the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] what to do or how to do it? He is the greatest parliamentarian in the United States. He is the author of one of the greatest works on parliamentary precedents that has ever been produced, about a dozen large volumes of which are on the press now.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. We know about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course; the statement is ridiculous.

And, Mr. Speaker, I repeat again, that on page 8808 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and on page 796 of the daily Journal, of the House of Representatives for June 6, 1935, it is shown clearly and distinctly that Mr. CANNON of Missouri made the motion that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 48 with an amendment, which was the "red rider", which he, Mr. CANNON, sent to the Clerk's desk and which the Clerk read as follows, to wit:

Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.

And that the Speaker then put the motion of Mr. CANNON of Missouri before the House, and the House agreed to it; and the motion was adopted with not a vote against it; and that then Mr. CANNON of Missouri then moved to reconsider and lay that on the table, which motion carried; and that made the action of the House final on the matter.

THE HOUSE JOURNAL ALSO SHOWS WHAT HAPPENED

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moved that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 48 and concur therein with the following amendment:

Before the period at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism."

The motion was agreed to.

A motion by Mr. CANNON of Missouri to reconsider the vote whereby the foregoing motion was agreed to was, on his motion, and by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

Ordered, That the Clerk notify the Senate.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, it is shown by the Journal of the House that BLANTON did not have anything whatever to do with said motion in the House to adopt said "red rider", as the whole matter was handled in the House by Chairman CANNON of Missouri, and his conclusion of the matter was done by the unanimous consent of the House without the voice of a single Member being raised against it.

It is too late now for any disgruntled to squeal. If some Member was not on the floor attending to his official duties while the House was transacting important business it was his own fault, and he has nobody but himself to blame; and he ought not to cry now about spilt milk. He will learn sometime, if he does not know it now, that the leaders of the House who transact the business do not have to go around looking up any indifferent Member to tell him that they are going to transact business in the House. If anyone expects that he never will know what is going on in the House of Representatives.

PRACTICALLY THE IDENTICAL ACTION TAKEN BY SENATE

It will be noted, Mr. Speaker, from what I quoted from page 8002 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and from page 796 of the House Journal, that after the House had adopted the motion of Mr. CANNON of Missouri, and had passed the red rider, preventing the indoctrination of communism in the public schools, the House ordered "that the Clerk notify the Senate" of such action.

Pages 8796 and 8797 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, permanent, shows the following:

The Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

"Before the period at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert ': Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.'"

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 48.

The motion was agreed to.

Then, Mr. Speaker, and not until then, was the red rider made a part of said bill. It had been voted unanimously into the Senate amendment no. 48 by the House. It was then approved, and became a part of the bill, when the Senate voted for it unanimously. And it will be noted that it is stated in the Senate proceedings that the so-called red rider was read to the Senate before the Senate passed it. It was not "BLANTON" handling it in the Senate. It was Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma who moved that the red rider be adopted. "BLANTON" was not even there. "BLANTON" had nothing whatever to do with the action taken in the Senate when it passed it.

Hence, Mr. Speaker, it was maliciously and mendaciously false to assert that "BLANTON slipped it through", when after the House Clerk had read it to the House, the House passed it on the motion of Chairman CANNON of Missouri, and after the Vice President laid it before the Senate, and the Senate clerk read it to the Senate, it was passed by the Senate on the motion of Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then the President signed it. And it became the law of the land on July 1, 1935. It has been the law ever since. And it is the law now. And it was a long time before anybody got a notion into their head to repeal it.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 4

That there was no occasion for its passage.

There was ample occasion. Complaints have been growing and multiplying ever since the Soviet regime took over Russia. These complaints come from substantial, credible fathers and mothers of Washington, from the representatives of citizens' organizations, from the American Legion, from the District of Columbia Public School Association, from the Daughters of the American Revolution, from the ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, from teachers in the schools, and leading officials.

First. The official minutes of the Board of Education show that a teacher in the Western High School, Miss West, was suspended for 1 week for teaching bolshevism while discussing current events in her English class, and that she is still teaching in the schools.

Second. Four years after Dr. Frank W. Ballou became the $10,000-per-year superintendent of the Washington schools it became necessary for Congress to pass a law to stop communism from being taught by his corps of teachers. I quote the following from page 7796, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 3, 1924, being volume 65, part 8, Sixty-eighth Congress:

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. Summers of Washington: Page 33, at the end of line 22, insert: 'Provided, That no part of this sum shall be available for the payment of the salaries of any superintendent, assistant superintendent, director of intermediate instruction, or supervising principal who permits the teaching of partisan politics, disrespect to the Holy Bible, or that ours is an inferior form of government.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not make a point of order to that.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this is a limitation, and, of course, it is in order.

I think everyone will agree with me that no teaching of this kind should be permitted in the schools of this District nor in the public school of any city or town in any State in the Union.

I have spoken to a number of Members, and it is an exception to find one who does not say that his children have come to him with complaints in regard to one or the other of the points mentioned in this amendment.

In the interest of the highest possible standard of education in this city, and because I believe that the schools here should be as nearly as possible a model for those throughout the country, I think this thing ought to be stopped, and this amendment will have that effect.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Has the gentleman information that such things are going on in the schools which his amendment is intended to reach?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I have.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Who will pass upon the question as to whether this is happening or not? Who will be the arbiter?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The school board.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will not the man who issues or pays these warrants be the one? This being a limitation on this appropriation, will they not pass this question up to the accounting officers of the Government?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. All right.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In a practical way, I would like to know how that is going to work.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It might be up to the accounting officers. Anyhow, there would be a way then by which one might file a complaint and stop the payment of salaries to anyone who has been permitting this pernicious teaching. It has unquestionably been going on for years and is going on in this present year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, may we have it again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

(The amendment was again read.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

That was the first "red rider." The House of Representatives unanimously passed it on May 3, 1924. That was 12 years ago. It prevented teachers in the Washington schools from "teaching partisan politics", from teaching "disrespect to the Holy Bible", and from teaching that "ours is an inferior form of government", all communistic doctrines of Soviet Russia.

Note that Congressman Summers from the House floor then said, on May 3, 1924:

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I have spoken to a number of Members, and it is an exception to find one who does not say that his children have come to him with complaints in regard to one or the other points mentioned in this amendment.

Not a Member denied his statement. He then said it was an exception to find a Member whose children had not complained about such subversive teaching. It is Soviet Russia that is propagating the communistic doctrine of "disrespect to the Holy Bible" and that "ours is an inferior form of government." That is just the kind of doctrine that is embraced in the book Made in Russia, which Superintendent Ballou and his Board of Education now have in the schools of Washington.

FIRST "RED RIDER" PASSED IN 1924 BY HOUSE AND SENATE

After passing the first "red rider" in the House on May 3, 1924, Dr. Summers then had to battle Dr. Ballou, who tried to get the Senate to knock it out of the bill. Even at that early date Dr. Ballou raised his pet slogan of "academic freedom", but the Senate passed it, and the President signed the bill, and the first "red rider" became law, but was effective only until July 1, 1925, when it would expire.

SECOND "RED RIDER" PASSED SECOND TIME IN 1925

Again in 1925 Dr. Summers' "red rider" to prevent communism from being taught in the public schools of Washington was placed in the District appropriation bill, and passed both the House and Senate and was signed by the President, and became law in force and effect until July 1, 1926.

DR. BALLOU AND COMMUNISTIC HENCHMEN KEPT IT OUT OF NEXT BILL

The hue and cry of "factual instruction" and "academic freedom" was then started by Dr. Ballou and the Washington newspapers. They belittled and ridiculed the law. They belittled and ridiculed every Congressman or Senator who espoused it. They succeeded in keeping it out of the next appropriation bill, and the law expired on July 1, 1926. That is the reason that when the last "red rider" was passed by Congress on June 6, 1935, it was not drawn as a limitation that would expire with the fiscal year, but was drawn as permanent law by using the word "hereafter", so that Congress would not have to pass it again every year.

Third. The Board of Education cannot escape its responsibility, for it knew of its act when it suspended the Western High School teacher for 1 week for teaching communism. It knew of Congressman Summers' charge in 1924, when he passed the first "red rider." It knew of his charges in 1925, when he passed the second "red rider." Instead of cooperating with Congress in its attempt to stamp out communism from the schools, it joined Superintendent Ballou in 1925 and 1926 in trying to repeal the Summers "red rider", and did help Superintendent Ballou to repeal same, and the law expired July 1, 1926.

BOARD OF EDUCATION WHITEWASHED COMMUNISM IN 1928

The Washington Post on April 3, 1938, under its main headline, "Reds Renew Drive as School Board Launches Inquiry", and the subheadline, "Boy of 12 Testifies of Effort to Bring Him Into Fold of Communism", printed the following:

Communistic elements, whose activities in the schools was the subject of inquiry by the Board of Education yesterday, responded to the Board's thrust by renewal of proselytizing campaigns in the schools.

One 12-year-old youngster, who testified before the hearing yesterday, told the Board that yesterday he had been approached in the Central High School by another youth who sought to enlist his interest in communism.

Talk of communism pervaded the whole meeting. There are in the District schools, according to the testimony, two organizations affiliated with the Communist Party. One is the Young Communist League and the other the Young Pioneers. Columbia High School, Macfarland High School, Central High School, and Business High School were mentioned by the witnesses as having been points of Communist activity.

Mr. Henry Gilligan's statement that the Appropriations Committee has not the right "to tell us how to run our schools" was applauded.

It will be noted, Mr. Speaker, that on April 3, 1938, the Washington Post, which is now friendly to communism, and is friendly to Superintendent Ballou, and friendly to the Board of Education, and is against the "red rider", and in favor of the "Sissy bill", which would allow communism to be indoctrinated in the schools, then broadcasted to its readers the fact that the testimony before the Board of Education in 1928 showed that there are in the District schools two organizations affiliated with the Communist Party. Yet, instead of cooperating with Congress in trying to remove communism from the Washington schools, the Board of Education is cooperating with Superintendent Ballou in trying to repeal the "red rider", so that all teachers would then have a free hand to teach communism or any other subversive doctrine they may see fit to teach.

Fourth. The Federation of Citizens' Associations is a combined confederation of 63 different citizens' associations organized and existing in the District of Columbia. They represent, are prepared to, and do speak for the citizenship generally of Washington, D. C. They had the right to demand of Congress the passage of a law to stop communism from being indoctrinated in the schools to their children.

FEDERATION OF CITIZENS' ASSOCIATIONS REQUESTED "RED RIDER"

It was the people of Washington who asked for the "red rider." Will anyone say that 63 different citizens' associations through their Federation of Citizens' Associations did not have the inherent right to request the "red rider" to prevent communism? On March 16, 1935, the said Federation of Citizens' Associations passed a resolution advocating a rider upon the then pending District of Columbia appropriation bill to disallow an appropriation for so-called character education and to stop communism in the schools. The "red rider" to stop communism and the appropriation bill disallowing any appropriation for so-called character education were passed by both the House and Senate on June 6, 1936. It was in direct response to and in accord with the request of the fathers and mothers of Washington, whose children were being contaminated by the attempt to indoctrinate communism in the schools.

Fifth. The Federation of Citizens' Associations appointed a special committee consisting of Hon. George E. Sullivan, as chairman, he being one of the leading lawyers of Washington; Hon. Harry N. Stull, a vice president of said federation; Mrs. George Corbin and Mrs. Horace J. Phelps, two prominent, high-standing ladies of Washington, to act for said Federation of Citizens' Associations on the elimination of communism from the District of Columbia public schools. The following are resolutions passed by said federation and said special committee relating thereto:

1. Resolution adopted by the federation March 16, 1935, advocating a rider upon the then pending District of Columbia appropriation bill, in view of the disclosure that Dr. Charters (shown to be on the advisory board of communistic Moscow University summer school) was being employed for character education in the District of Columbia public schools.

2. Resolution adopted by the executive committee November 12, 1935, providing for the creation of this special committee and the taking of steps to eliminate textbooks in the District of Columbia public schools containing communistic propaganda and secure for the pupils instead "a clear and informative definition of communism and its evil and atrocious aims and purposes."

3. Further resolution adopted by the executive committee December 3, 1935, directing this special committee to extend its work to cover periodicals as well as textbooks.

4. Resolution adopted by the federation December 7, 1935, approving and endorsing the aforesaid actions by the executive committee.

5. Resolutions adopted by the federation January 4, 1936, advocating an immediate appeal to Congress to provide "an effective remedy, and one which will be so thorough that there can be no danger of a recurrence of existing conditions."

Sixth. The said special committee appointed by said Federation of Citizens' Associations to eliminate communism from the Washington schools was nonpartisan in every respect and embraced one Catholic and three of other religious faiths, and they worked together zealously and harmoniously. I quote the following from their report to the federation:

COMMITTEE REPORT APPROVED AND ADOPTED MARCH 28, 1936, BY FEDERATION OF CITIZENS' ASSOCIATIONS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING THE VOTING DOWN BY IT OF A PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE MOTION TO ENDORSE THE SISSON REPEAL BILL, H. R. 13375

MARCH 28, 1936.

To the Federation of Citizens' Associations, District of Columbia:

The last report of this special committee, dated January 4, 1936, was approved by the federation, and resolutions were adopted on that date describing "existing conditions" in the public schools of this District as "favorable to subversive, antipatriotic, and communistic propaganda", and expressly declaring that "the recent action of the Board of Education makes it imperative that the Congress of the United States shall be appealed to without delay to provide an effectual remedy and one which will be so thorough that there can be no danger of a recurrence of existing conditions." This special committee has made appeal to the Congress as so directed by the federation, the subject matter being presented to the Senate and House District Committees and also to the House Appropriations Committee.

The Subcommittee on the District of Columbia of the House Appropriations Committee conducted a thorough investigation into this subject matter. The entire subcommittee of five members participated actively in the investigation, and went to original sources for their data. Books and magazines, etc., in use with pupils in the public schools were carefully studied by said subcommittee, with such books, magazines, etc., actually before them for weeks; and the printed hearings show that the subcommittee found an abundance of antipatriotic and procommunistic matter, and also matter tending to seriously affect and undermine fundamental morals of the pupils in the matter of sexual relations. The destruction of sexual morality is well known, of course, to be one of the aims and purposes of communism. The Superintendent of Schools, the head of the history department in the high schools, and the editor of Scholastic magazine were heard before said subcommittee and disclosed no possible excuse or justification for the conditions against which this federation has complained, and which are now admitted to have been going on for a number of years.

Your special committee has carefully considered all of the foregoing and recommends that the federation deal specifically with the following issues which have been raised.

1. So-called academic freedom: We recommend that the federation reject as fundamentally unsound the proposition advanced by Congressman SISSON and by the Board of Education that it is an invasion of the rights of the school authorities for Congress to direct, regulate, or control any features of the curriculum in the public schools. No one has been able to suggest wherein this proposition has any foundation in American institutions; exclusive legislation for the District of Columbia is vested by the Constitution in the Congress, and the school authorities are public servants obligated to respect and obey such legislation. It should be noted in this connection that as early as 1886 (act of May 20, 1886 (24 Stat. L. 69)), Congress upheld its jurisdiction, not only in the public schools of the District of Columbia but in schools everywhere else subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, by expressly requiring "the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and special instruction as to their effects upon the human system" to be taught, and to require removal from office of anyone failing or neglecting to comply with such requirement.

2. Legislation requiring pupils to be acquainted with evil aims and effects of communism and other un-American doctrines: Since Congress has the undoubted power to require pupils to be acquainted with the harmful effects of alcohol and narcotics, which affect the individual only directly, and the Nation indirectly, how can anyone seriously question the power of Congress to require that pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia shall be made acquainted with the evil aims and effects of communism and other un-American doctrines, which affect both the Nation and the individual directly? This special committee recommends that the federation advocate the immediate passage of legislation to this effect, with means for enforcement similar to what is provided for in the aforesaid act of 1886, and with specific requirement that all such subversive doctrines be expressly denounced to the pupils in all textbooks or other data or explanation used with the pupils referring to such doctrines. This is in accord with the uniform position taken by this federation at all times. Not only has the federation at no time objected to pupils in the public schools being made so acquainted but it has insisted at all times upon the pupils being made so acquainted for their own protection; in other words, that the truth, and not half truths, shall be told the pupils about and against communism and that it is inherently impossible to tell them the truth about communism without teaching against communism and denouncing it as a world revolution conspiracy seeking destruction by force and violence of all nations and practically every vestige of civilization.

As a matter of fact, the clause against communism in the aforesaid District of Columbia appropriation bill of June 14, 1935, does not require any monthly or other affidavits; and it was not until December 1, 1935, that the Comptroller General decided to make such requirement, and then only because it became apparent that the school authorities would not accede to the reasonable demand of Congress (inherently necessary) that no teaching about communism could take place which did not actually teach against and denounce it.

GEO. E. SULLIVAN, Chairman,
HARRY N. STULL,
MRS. GEORGE CORBIN,
MRS. HORACE J. PHELPS,
Special Committee on Elimination of Communistic Matter from District of Columbia Public Schools.

HOW CAN ANY HONEST, TRUTHFUL PERSON SAY THAT THERE WAS NO OCCASION FOR PASSING THE "RED RIDER"?

When the Federation of Citizens Associations adopted the foregoing report of its special committee to eliminate communism, it was the people of Washington speaking. It was the fathers and mothers whose children were involved. It was the taxpayers who pay the expenses of the public schools here. They had a right to be heard. They had a right to protect their children. They had the right on March 16, 1935, to request Congress to pass the "red rider." They had the right to stand behind their "red rider" after it was passed. They had the right to denounce the "sissy bill" that would allow communism in their schools.

Seventh. The District of Columbia Public School Association is a federation of 97 different organizations and embraces 28 different citizens' associations in the District of Columbia. Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries is its president. General Fries did valiant service in France during the World War, and was in charge of our Chemical Warfare Service there. He has been at the head of the American Legion here in Washington for a number of years. His association, without a dissenting vote, passed the following:

Resolution adopted unanimously by the District of Columbia Public School Association April 1, 1936

Be it resolved by the District of Columbia Public School Association, That they are opposed to the appropriation for any further money for the so-called character-education experiment in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and they urge that any funds that might be available for such character-education experiment be used to employ additional teachers in the various grades where they are seriously needed.

AMOS A. FRIES,
President of the District of Columbia Public School Association.

Eighth. I quote the following from the evidence of Gen. Amos A. Fries before the Senate subcommittee:

STATEMENT OF MAJ. GEN. AMOS A. FRIES

Mr. Chairman, I am submitting this statement as president of the Public School Association of the District of Columbia, and in the name and on behalf of that association, an association of groups of civic, fraternal, business, and citizens already existing under other titles, but who are particularly interested in the public schools of the District. There are over 90 of these citizens' groups in the association. The various groups are taxpayers, citizens of the District of Columbia, and some of the teachers themselves. The great majority of them have now, or have had, children in the public schools, and are most concerned with the proper teaching and training of their children.

They pay the taxes that provides the money to build the schoolhouses, maintain the grounds and buildings, pay the teachers, and then feed, clothe, and care for the children. These parents feel that they are the ones to say what shall be taught their children and what shall not be taught them, and not the teachers. They feel that the teacher who is unwilling to take this view of the position of the parents is not fitted to teach and should get out of the public schools.

These parents strenuously object to ill-considered and wholesale experiments being practiced on their children, just because some professors or superintendents want to try out their particular ideas of methods of teaching, or social philosophies, economic theories, or even trying to teach a form of government foreign to that of the United States.

The District of Columbia Public School Association is vigorously opposed to the teaching of communism in the schools, or to the repeal of the law against teaching or advocating communism in the schools, unless and until a law is passed which will make mandatory the denunciation of the ideas, philosophy, and actual working of Communist governments, whenever the subject of communism is touched upon by any teacher in the public schools of the District.

The association is equally opposed to the appropriation of any more money for the so-called character-education experiment. It believes that the experiment is an absolute waste of the taxpayers' money and that certain of the schemes being carried out are actually detrimental to the children's future. It is to prepare our children for citizenship in the "new social order", but what that is Dr. Ballou says he does not know himself.

Ninth. The following is quoted from the testimony of Hon. George E. Sullivan, given before our subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations:

STATEMENT OF GEORGE E. SULLIVAN, CHAIRMAN, SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF FEDERATION OF CITIZENS' ASSOCIATIONS ON ELIMINATING ANTI-PATRIOTIC AND SUBVERSIVE MATTER FROM PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Sullivan, do you appear in a representative capacity.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do. I appear for the Federation of Citizens' Associations as chairman of their special committee on eliminating antipatriotic and other subversive matter from the District of Columbia public schools.

Mr. BLANTON. You are the duly authorized representative of the Federated Citizens' Associations of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I am.

Mr. BLANTON. How many associations are federated in your organization?

Mr. SULLIVAN. There are between 60 and 65 different organizations, each of which has two delegates to the assembly of the federation, which is our deliberative body.

Mr. BLANTON. They have delegated to you, these sixty-odd associations, the authority to act for them at this meeting?

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. And you appear for them?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. And you speak for them?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. And with authority from them?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you a member of the bar association here?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have been a member of the board of directors, and have been a member of the bar association since 1902.

Mr. BLANTON. What is your age?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I will be 55 this year.

Mr. BLANTON. You may proceed.

Mr. SULLIVAN. In order to save the time of the committee, as most of the matter I have to present is authentic documentary matter, I have prepared a memorandum here and, if it is agreeable to the committee, in order to save time, and in the interest of accuracy, I will read it, as follows, to wit:

As chairman of the special committee of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, District of Columbia, on eliminating antipatriotic and subversive matter from the public schools, I am authorized and directed to acquaint the Congress with conditions of long duration, which have been recently uncovered, and for the creation and continuance of which the superintendent of schools and the Board of Education are directly responsible. The seriousness of the matter cannot be gainsaid, as will appear from resolutions adopted by this federation January 4, 1936, declaring that—

"The recent action of the Board of Education makes it imperative that the Congress of the United States shall be appealed to without delay to provide an effectual remedy and one which will be so thorough that there can be no danger of a recurrence of existing conditions."

The public-school system has never had a more alert or faithful supporter than this federation, which always advocates and urges entirely adequate provision for the best school facilities. This federation believes the public-school system was devised and intended as the most important bulwark of patriotism and good citizenship, and that the public-school system should ever be preserved and maintained as such, and not be permitted to be used for contrary purposes, to impair or destroy patriotism and good citizenship.

This federation has always been most friendly to the Board of Education, and the superintendent of schools, Dr. Frank W. Ballou, and has extended its aid and cooperation to them on innumerable occasions. This federation believes in the patriotism and loyalty of the rank and file of the teachers generally in the District of Columbia public schools. Consequently, it was inconceivable to this federation, until most startling recent developments, that the District of Columbia public schools could possibly have become perverted into a means for subtly undermining patriotism and love of country, so as to create a fertile field for sowing the seeds of communism, and then proceeding to actually sow such seeds in the public schools. But we have been shocked to find what was considered inconceivable is an awful reality. Moreover, the methods used to accomplish it have been so clever as to practically defy analysis and detection by persons outside the schools, and to also carry the teachers along in a maelstrom, leaving the teachers helpless to resist or expose what is imposed upon them, without endangering the loss of their positions.

COMMUNISM, SOMETIMES CALLED "MARXIAN COMMUNISM", IS NOT A LEGITIMATE SOCIAL SCIENCE BUT A HYPOCRITICAL CONSPIRACY TO DESTROY ALL CIVILIZATION AND TO ESTABLISH IN ITS STEAD A WORLD-WIDE AUTOCRATIC BARBARISM

Since many intelligent persons, even in high official positions, do not appear to have acquainted themselves with the real nature and seriousness of communism, it is, perhaps, appropriate, by way of introduction to what is to follow, to give briefly, some really informative and authentic data concerning it.

Communism and Russia are by no means synonymous. Russia merely occupies the unfortunate position of being communism's first victim. Communism is synonymous with world revolution, and seeks the destruction of all nations, including abolition of patriotism, religion, marriage, the family, private property, and all political and civil liberties, and the establishment of a world-wide dictatorship of the so-called proletariat, which is an autocratic self-constituted dictatorship by a small group of self-perpetuating revolutionists. (See Rept. No. 2290, House of Representatives, 71st Cong., 3d sess.) Said report quotes admissions under oath by William Z. Foster, twice candidate of the Communist Party for President of the United States, as follows:

"Our party considers religion to be the opium of the people, as Karl Marx has stated, and we carry on propaganda for the liquidation of these prejudices amongst the workers (p. 10).

"As I stated before, workers who would be so imbued with religious superstitions that they would be married in a church would be of no value to the Communist Party.

"Q. And the same thing would happen to them in this country that happens to them in Russia?

"A. Of course (p. 10).

"Q. Do the Communists in this country advocate world revolution?

"A. Yes; the Communists in this country realize that America is connected up with the whole world system, and the capitalist system displays the same characteristics everywhere—everywhere it makes for the misery and exploitation of the workers—and it must be abolished, not only on an American scale but on a world scale (p. 11).

"Q. Just what is the Third International?

"A. The Communist International is the world party of the Communist movement.

"Q. Is the Communist Party of the United States connected with it?

"A. It is.

"Q. In what way?

"A. It is the American section (p. 11).

"The workers of this country and the workers of every country have only one flag, and that is the red flag. That is the flag of the proletarian revolution (p. 12)."

More recently the Communists have become so bold that they are publicly proclaiming some of their outrageous aims and purposes, previously concealed and disavowed. As late as April 15, 1932, George S. Counts (who is carried in printed literature of communistic Moscow University for the summer session of 1935 as a member of said university's national advisory council) published a book, Dare the School Build a New Social Order? There was a fifth printing of said book in October 1935. In said book he lays down the following as texts for teachers:

"That the teachers should deliberately reach for power and then make the most of their conquest, is my firm conviction. To the extent that they are permitted to fashion the curriculum and the procedures of the school, they will definitely and positively influence the social attitudes, ideals, and behavior of the coming generation (pp. 28–29).

"The conscious and deliberate achievement of democracy under novel circumstances is the task of our generation.

"Democracy, of course, should not be identified with political forms and functions—with the Federal Constitution, the popular election of officials, or the practice of universal suffrage (p. 40).

"Finally, be prepared as a last resort, in either the defense or the realization of this purpose, to follow the method of revolution (pp. 41–42)."

It will be observed that this communistically connected gentleman, Counts, is so clever with the use of language that these outrageously subversive texts, addressed to teachers, do not so much as mention the word "communism" or make direct reference to Soviet Russia in such quoted texts. Yet is is very plain from the language used—even aside from his connection with communistic Moscow University—that he is advocating resort to revolution as a final means for overthrowing our Nation, but recommending that the teachers be first used to make the coming generation believe that our Republic should be discarded and something accepted in its stead (obviously, the dictatorship of the proletariat) not identified with the Federal Constitution nor with the popular election of officials nor with the practice of universal suffrage.

The evil aims and purposes of communism, namely, the destruction of our Republic, and also of civilized society, and the rearing in its stead of a ruthless autocracy, with liberty, morality, and decency discarded, cannot be ignored by honest-minded persons.

SUPPOSED "ACADEMIC FREEDOM" IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The Communists maintain more than 300 schools in the United States, where revolution, strike tactics, and hatred to our Government and its institutions are taught. A list of such Communist schools is given on page 25 of Extracts from Public Hearings Before the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, House of Representatives, Seventy-third Congress, second session, December 20, 1934. The Communists in this country say they owe no allegiance to our Nation, its Constitution, or its flag, yet they claim the right to conduct such Communist schools as a part of supposed "academic freedom." Plainly, they do not have the right to any such "academic freedom", to deceive and mislead our youth. They are enjoying something to which they have no right and which the public authorities are derelict in not suppressing.

Since communism is primarily an antireligious and anticivilization creed, it is difficult to understand why, under the guise of "academic freedom", it is entitled to receive any attention in the public schools as a subject for study, even if communism's inherent subversiveness and hypocrisy be disregarded. It would, manifestly, be most unfair to have the pupils study matter misrepresenting and denouncing all religions, as communism does, when on refutation of such misrepresentation and denouncement of all religions would be possible, since discussion of any religious creed in the public schools is absolutely precluded.

Every loyal American citizen recognizes that patriotism is inseparable from national consciousness. Consequently, any attempt in the public schools to glorify, or even dignify, subversive internationalism, or to minimize the importance of national existence, national honor, or patriotism, or to induce or cultivate in the pupils skepticism regarding any of the last-named, in the interest of so-called scientific history, or for any other reason, is plainly pernicious and reprehensible.

THE EMPLOYMENT AND RETENTION OF DR. W. W. CHARTERS IN CONNECTION WITH CHARACTER EDUCATION IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PUBLIC SCHOOLS, NOTWITHSTANDING DR. CHARTERS' COMMUNISTIC MOSCOW UNIVERSITY, SINCE DECEMBER 1933

This federation became genuinely alarmed at such startling condition of affairs, and consequently on March 16, 1935, adopted a resolution urging the insertion in the then pending District of Columbia appropriation bill of a special provision prohibiting payment of any money appropriated for the public schools [reading]: "Any advocate of communism or other un-American doctrine or to any organization or agency advocating such doctrine."

The District of Columbia appropriation bill, as finally passed June 14, 1935, contained a special provision or prohibition as follows [reading]: "Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism."

CONDITIONS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PUBLIC SCHOOLS ON JUNE 14, 1935, WHEN THE RIDER AGAINST COMMUNISM WAS ADOPTED

The federation's alarm in March 1935, due to the employment and retention of Dr. Charters, whose connection with communistic Moscow University had been shown, suggested to it the necessity for alertness and caution as to what might occur in the public schools; but the federation was not led to even suspect that actual wrongdoing of any kind was then going on in the District of Columbia public schools.

It was not until November 1935 that this federation first learned of any actual wrongdoing going on in the public schools detrimental to the pupils, the citizenship generally, and our Nation. Such conditions, discovered commencing in and since November 1935, are shown to have existed for some years past, and to have been introduced on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools with the approval of the Board of Education. Earlier discovery would likely have been made, had it not been for assurances by Dr. Ballou and Dr. Charters that pupils were merely being taught how to think—not what to think.

TEXTBOOK MODERN HISTORY, BY CARL BECKER, IN USE IN WASHINGTON HIGH SCHOOLS SINCE FEBRUARY 1, 1933

The following brief quotations, with page references to enable consideration thereof in their exact setting, will make plain the presence of inexcusable objectionable matter in said textbook:

"The essence of Marx's scientific socialism is this: The workers are at present enslaved to the capitalists; but the stars in their courses, rather than the feeble wills of men, are bringing about their liberation. What Marx gave the workers was a new philosophy—religion—a religion to console them in their present distress, a philosophy pointing out the good time coming (pp. 535–536).

"Soviet Russia: How Nicolai Lenin made good the prophecies of Karl Marx by establishing the 'Dictatorship of the Proletariat' (p. 790, 1933 ed.; p. 779, 1935 ed.).

"Many great leaders in the crusade for human freedom have been like that. They have united a passionate sympathy for the poor and oppressed with a passionate hatred for those whom they held responsible for poverty and oppression.

"Lenin was a disciple of Karl Marx (p. 791, 1933 ed.; p. 780, 1935 ed.).

"The 'gentle and smiling' Lenin was the Lenin who felt a profound sympathy with the poverty and oppression under which the Russian people lived and had lived for centuries. The 'hard and criminal' Lenin was the Lenin who never doubted that the tsars and landed aristocrats and idle rich were responsible for this poverty and oppression, or that the most ferocious methods were necessary and justified in order to establish the rights of the people. This passionate faith in a doctrine is the secret of Lenin (p. 791, 1933 ed.; p. 781, 1935 ed.).

"By 1930 the output of Russian industries was on the whole as great as, and in some of the government-owned industries greater than, before the war.

"With the return of economic prosperity the Soviet Government became every year more popular, and in 1928 it felt strong enough to take another step forward toward the nationalization of the land (p. 799, 1933 ed.; p. 788, 1935 ed.).

"The Russian revolution aims to effect a complete transformation of society—the establishment of a Communist economic regime and the acceptance of a Communist philosophy of life. This is why it is, of all the events of our time, the most interesting and perhaps the most important (p. 805, 1933 ed.; p. 794, 1935 ed.)."

Professor Becker's record as favoring communism was well known before his book Modern History was adopted as a textbook for the District of Columbia schools. In 1920 he had published a book, The United States, an Experiment in Democracy, stating that immigrants—"describe America as they have found it—a country dominated by capitalists, a sordid bourgeois society, without ideals, a land of 'dollar chasers' where wealth controls the Government and exploits the people" (p. 234).

And as late as 1932 Professor Becker had published another book, The Heavenly City of the Eighteenth Century Philosophers, lauding Marxian communism as "a new religion" (p. 161), asserting it to be "the duty of common men" to "adjust themselves" to it (p. 162), and then paying the following tribute to communism in Russia:

"And now, in our day, the first act in the social revolution, accompanied and sustained by the Communist faith, has just been staged in Russia (p. 163)."

TEXTBOOK, CHANGING CIVILIZATIONS IN THE MODERN WORLD, BY HAROLD RUGG, APPROVED IN WASHINGTON PUBLIC SCHOOL DOCUMENT NO. 2, 1933, FOR "SLOW-GOING PUPILS" IN JUNIOR AND SENIOR HIGH SCHOOLS

This book contains praise of communism for its supposed accomplishments in Russia, as a few quotations therefrom will make manifest:

"Russia since her revolution: In general the standard of living today is about the same as in 1913. In this respect the recovery of Russia since the World War has about equaled that of Germany, France, and Great Britain (p. 399).

"Though wages are low, the Russian people have many advantages that they lacked before the revolution: * * * There are other important things besides wages and costs to be considered in judging the standard of living of a people; schools, medical help, and amusements are among these. In Russia all these things are free to factory workers and peasants. * * *

"We must remember all these things when we think of the standard of living of the Russians (p. 409)."

WEEKLY MAGAZINE SCHOLASTIC, SOMETIMES STYLED "THE AMERICAN HIGH SCHOOL WEEKLY", AND AT OTHER TIMES "THE NATIONAL HIGH SCHOOL WEEKLY", USED AS A STUDY MAGAZINE IN WASHINGTON HIGH SCHOOLS SINCE AS EARLY AS DECEMBER 1932, AND EXPRESSLY APPROVED ON PAGE 4 OF WASHINGTON PUBLIC SCHOOL DOCUMENT NO. 2, 1933

The social studies editor of this study magazine is the same Harold Rugg heretofore mentioned. Some quotations from a number of issues of said magazine will show its character and purpose.

"He (Santa Claus) was only a pretty fairy tale that our elders, for some unaccountable reason, had palmed off on us. They thought it made us happier.

"The shock of that disappointment is so long ago now that we can hardly remember. But since we got into high school, some other Santa Clauses have been bowled over. One gets punctured every day or two.

"The national flower, says one headline writer, has become the razzberry.

"The mood of disillusionment has indeed settled over the present generation.

"A journalist who traveled the country over and talked with hundreds of ordinary obscure men and women in all walks of life came back with a profound impression that the American people have no national faith." (From editorial on p. 1 of Scholastic magazine of Dec. 17, 1932.)

"You want to know what is the best kind of government, the best economic system, the best type of school. You want to know how to stop war and racial intolerance.

"If you will help us, you shall know these things, and the truth shall make you free." (From editorial on p. 1 of Scholastic magazine of Sept. 23, 1933.)

"Scholastic does not and will not attempt to indoctrinate its readers with specific, unalterable beliefs. Nevertheless, its editors have certain considered convictions as to society which they have no apologies for presenting to students as powerfully as they can." (From editorial on p. 1 of Scholastic magazine of Dec. 9, 1933.)

"Today 6,000,000 young Russians in the Communist Youth Association are helping to build a new social order. Here is the war psychology of dramatic action which is so dear to youth, set to the great building tasks of business. Stalin speaks of 'science as a fortress which must be carried by youth', etc." (p. 16 of Scholastic magazine of Dec. 16, 1933).

"For 100 years the productivity of the civilized world increased about 3 percent each year, perhaps a little, though not much, faster in the United States. Russia proposed to increase hers 20 times as fast.

"But Russian planners do not stop short with material things. They promise to increase the number of students in their country about 50 percent and reduce illiteracy by requiring every child to attend school at least 7 years.

"Can they do it? On the basis of past accomplishments, the answer is 'yes'." (P. 21 of Scholastic magazine of Jan. 20, 1934.)

"The older transients, it is true, resist communism. They have a mental hold-over of war psychology, the anti-red drives of Palmer, and a belief in the American success story. For boys and girls communism offers school, hope, and adventure." (P. 12 of Scholastic magazine of Oct. 6, 1934, quoting chapter stated to be taken from new book, Boy and Girl Tramps of America.

"Here, in rigid logic, he examines such popular beliefs as 'national honor', 'patriotism', 'security'—and exposes their childishness and hypocrisy." (Editorial comment in heavy type, p. 7 of Scholastic magazine of Nov. 10, 1934, extolling the author of a recent book featured in said issue.)

"Men fight for the glory and honor of the fatherland, the motherland, for right against might, for the king and the flag, for the women and children. Not the most iron discipline, not the most urgent necessity for new markets or coal fields can keep armies from crumbling away once the romantic appeal is discovered to be a tricky lie, once the last glimmer of chivalry has vanished." (P. 12 of article appearing in Scholastic magazine of Nov. 9, 1935.)

These precise dates of issues and page references are given in order that the quoted matter may be readily examined in its exact setting, so as to preclude any serious claim that anything has been "lifted" out of its context. Moreover, the quoted matter is so plainly "poisonous" as affecting students of impressionable and inquisitive age, that it cannot possibly be defended under a claim that Scholastic is merely attempting to give the pros and cons on controversial questions.

National existence, national honor, patriotism, and 100-percent Americanism (to the utter exclusion of that subversive and pernicious thing called communism) cannot be recognized as constituting controversial or two-sided questions in the public schools of this Republic, whatever may be the situation in Moscow. Consequently, the aforesaid "poisonous" matter cannot be justified or condoned by any amount of nonpoisonous matter supplied either before, after, or at the same time with such "poisonous" matter; any more than a nurse could justify administering poison to a patient by showing that she also gave the patient some nonpoisonous and wholesome food, or even showing that she gave the patient an antidote before, after, or along with the poison. The sterling loyalty and patriotism of our youth must be given no dose of poison, however small, nor can anyone justify creating or inducing skepticism or doubt in our youth about such matters.

The efforts of Scholastic to create at least a condition of skepticism or doubt in the minds of high-school students regarding patriotism and our Republic, as compared with communism and Soviet Russia, are further manifested by the manner in which the editors of Scholastic treat communications from students with respect thereto. In issue of February 16, 1933, page 30, Scholastic carried, in the Student Forum column, a letter from a student which asserted:

"(1) The average high-school student has intelligence to deduct the difference between opinions that he thinks are for the good of the Nation and terrorism.

"(2) Communism does not seek to destroy, but to uphold the rights of the people."

Judge Sullivan spent much time gathering this data, and I ask my colleagues to consider it carefully. I quote him further:

No editorial comment was added by Scholastic to direct attention to the true facts, namely, that communism seeks the overthrow of all nations, and of practically every element of civilization. However, when Scholastic carried, in its issue of November 18, 1933, page 30, a letter from another student, who stated:

"The only thing I dislike is your attitude concerning socialism and communism. You mention pamphlets written by Socialists and Communists and oftentimes hint for these evils in your columns. What can be your reason? Are you trying to make the students form the opinion that socialism and communism will work after its undoubted failure in Russia?"

The insertion of such student's letter was followed by editorial comment, saying:

"Scholastic suggests only that students investigate these and other ideas before they make up their minds whether or not to condemn them. For instance, investigation would show that communism in Russia, while it has not been a wholesale success, is hardly an 'undoubted failure.'"

Again, when Scholastic published, in its issue of January 13, 1934, page 26, a complaint received from Don Andrus, then a student in Western High School, Washington, D. C. (and who was colonel of the Washington High School Cadets), the publication of his letter was made under the sarcastic label "The Red Menace Again." Said complaint by Don Andrus asserted:

"Scholastic is a dangerous magazine. It is dangerous because of its communistic ideas and notions. Although the magazine is supposed to be unbiased, little things here and there reveal its communistic nature."

TEXTBOOK, HISTORY OF EUROPE: OUR OWN TIMES, BY JAMES HARVEY ROBINSON AND CHARLES A. BEARD, USED IN WASHINGTON HIGH SCHOOLS FOR SEVERAL YEARS

The following quotations from said book reveal the inexcusably objectionable matter contained in it:

"447. Karl Marx: The great teacher of this modern doctrine of socialism was Karl Marx, a German writer, who lived most of his life in London. He was a learned man, trained in philosophy and political economy, and he came to the conclusion, from a study of history, that just as the middle class or capitalists had replaced feudal nobles, so the working class would replace the capitalists in the future. By the working class he meant those who depend upon their work for a living. The introduction of the factory system had reduced the vast majority of artisans to a position in which the capitalist was able to dictate the condition upon which this work should be done. Marx, in an eloquent appeal to them in 1847, called upon the members of this 'proletariat' 'who have nothing to lose but their chains', to rise and seize the means of production themselves. This appeal had almost no effect at the time, but it has been an inspiration to later generations of Socialists and is frequently quoted by them. Modern, or 'Marxian', socialism is therefore a movement of the working class (p. 245).

"448. Socialism an international movement: There is one other important element in socialism. It is international. It regards the cause of workers in different countries as a common cause against a common oppressor—the capitalists (p. 245)."

There is also a chapter in said book commencing on page 611 entitled "Russian Communism", which gives it an air of respectability by failing to set forth its evil aims, purposes, and consequences.

TEXTBOOK, MODERN WORLD SETTING FOR AMERICAN HISTORY, BY GEORGE J. JONES AND EMILY F. SLEMAN, IN USE IN WASHINGTON HIGH SCHOOLS FOR SEVERAL YEARS

This book devotes a special and separate chapter to Karl Marx (pp. 102–106). It is thus plainly indicated or suggested to the pupils that Marxian communism is a part of the modern world setting for American history, instead of the pupils being acquainted with the fact that Marxian communism is a subversive and hypocritical conspiracy to destroy all civilization.

TEXTBOOK, EUROPEAN CIVILIZATION AND POLITICS SINCE 1815, BY ERIK ACHON, ADOPTED JANUARY 16, 1935, FOR THE TEACHERS' COLLEGES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

This book contains an extensive chapter, commencing on page 483, chapter XVII, Bolshevik Russia, several quotations from which will show its character and purposes. On page 532, Soviet Russia is described as having been built with Lenin's "own hands", adding:

"On that supreme achievement, in the last analysis, his immortality depends; and so long as it endures, Lenin can never die.

"Whom shall the students of world history find to compare with him? Alexander and Caesar, by contrast, are puny figures, Louis XIV likewise."

On page 539 it is stated:

"So far as the new social order is concerned, the exploitation of man by man has been eliminated."

The chapter on Bolshevik Russia concludes on page 540 with this final sentence:

"If Russia becomes the greatest power in the world—and there is better than an even chance that she will—what then? Lenin declared that capitalism and bolshevism cannot exist side by side. Can he, who was so often right, have been entirely mistaken in this respect?

METHOD BOOK FOR TEACHERS, A CHARTER FOR THE SOCIAL STUDIES, BY CHARLES A. BEARD

Bulletins of instructions to teachers in history and the social sciences, issued by George J. Jones, head of the department of history in the Washington high schools, have commended this book as giving a scholarly presentation of general objectives. (See p. 2, lines 14–17, of teachers' instruction bulletin, Purposeful Teaching; also p. 2 of teachers' instruction bulletin, Teacher Training in Service.) A reading of said book discloses it to be indefensible and pernicious, insofar as its use in the public schools is concerned. It plainly suggests to the teachers that communism is a legitimate subject of social science for teaching in the public schools, and also that communism ought not to be denounced in the course of such teaching (pp. 44–45), the following ironical statement appearing on page 45:

"In some communities supposed to be enlightened teachers are forbidden to discuss Russia without denouncing her form of government and system of economy."

Said method book adds, on pages 55–56:

"If it be urged that the teacher of social studies should have nothing to do with ideas so controversial in nature, but must stick to facts, an invincible answer is forthcoming. Since all the facts cannot be assembled and presented in any scheme of instruction, a selection must be made, and in the arrangement, since some numerical order is necessary, emphasis cannot be avoided. Every statesman, every judge, every informed citizen who acts on something more than prejudice has in mind a more or less logical picture of an ideal social order to be preserved or realized; and in concrete cases of controversy throws his weight on the one side or the other in accordance with his mental picture. The teacher of social science can only escape presenting the necessity of choice in social affairs by fleeing from the world of reality to a land of abstraction. If this is the alternative, then civic instruction might as well be taken out of the schools."

The proposition thus advanced clearly demonstrates the impropriety and indefensibility of the employment and retention of the communistically connected gentleman, Dr. W. W. Charters, to guide or direct the character-education experiment in the District of Columbia schools. This impropriety is aggravated when it is learned, as it now is, from page 5 of teachers' instruction bulletin, Character Education Through History, issued by the head of the history department of Washington high schools, that character education in the District of Columbia schools is not intended to teach morals as generally understood but rather to make the teaching of the social sciences the central feature of character education. In lines 4–6 of page 5 of said bulletin it is asserted:

"Character building, it would seem, should be a vital aim of all teachers in the social studies. The social sciences have the center of the field for this kind of work."

It is noteworthy in this same connection that the other communistically connected gentleman, George S. Counts, heretofore mentioned, who wrote the aforesaid pernicious book Dare the School Build a New Social Order? is the editor of the magazine The Social Frontier, and on the executive board of another magazine, The Social Studies, both of which magazines have been used in the District of Columbia public schools for a number of years. If character building in the public schools is to be molded a la Moscow, let us eliminate it altogether. Nothing short of 100 percent Americanism, without confusion or deviation of any kind, can be tolerated in the teaching curriculum of the public school.

METHOD BOOK FOR TEACHERS' CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMISSION ON THE SOCIAL STUDIES, AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

This book was endorsed for use by teachers in Washington high schools on page 3 of teachers' instruction, bulletin Teacher Training in Service, issued by George J. Jones, head of department of history, Washington high schools, and was more recently, namely, on June 5, 1935, expressly approved for such use by the Board of Education upon the recommendation of the superintendent of schools. This book expressly refers to, adopts, and supplements the previously named book, A Charter for the Social Studies, which is described as part I of the report of the commission on the social studies. The two outstanding members of said commission were the same George S. Counts and Charles A. Beard, already mentioned. As a matter of fact, said report of said commission expressly included as part IX, teachers' method book, The Social Foundations of Education, by said George S. Counts, in which it was asserted on page 27 that "the Federal Constitution with its system of checks and balances represents a deep distrust of popular rule."

Dr. W. W. Charters, who has also been heretofore mentioned, is commended on page 150 of this last-named method book for assistance in the preliminary stages of the commission's work. Dr. Frank W. Ballou is stated on page 152 of said book to have served as a member of said commission and been its secretary throughout the 5-year period of its work (from January 1929 to December 1933). Dr. Ballou refrained from affixing his formal signature to said book and was careful to have the book say he declined to sign, though he did nothing to keep it from being endorsed for use by teachers in the Washington high schools. In fact, Dr. Ballou himself recommended the action which the Board of Education took on June 5, 1935, approving the entire report of said commission on the social sciences for methods for teachers. (See Minutes of Board of Education of June 5, 1935.) Moreover, the document which Dr. Ballou then recommended and which said board approved expressly listed (on p. 10) Karl Marx as a subject for study by seventh-grade pupils under the general heading The Industrial Revolution, with express suggestion as to—

"(1) His (Marx's) sympathy for the poor.

"(2) His originality in thinking out a plan."

It is interesting, in this connection, to note, from article carried in the Evening Star of January 3, 1936, that an enthusiastic supporter of communistic teaching as a subject of social science in colleges, namely, Dr. Warren Reed West, professor of political science and assistant dean of George Washington School of Government, was careful to point out, in his public address on this subject, which was then being reported, "that the teaching of political theory to high-school boys and girls is perhaps a waste of time, because it is not adapted to the immature mind."

A fortiori, the teaching of political theory is not adapted to seventh-grade pupils, as is now being attempted in the District of Columbia public schools, with the special featuring of Karl Marx to such immature pupils.

While the Federal Constitution provides for its amendment, it does not vest such power, directly or indirectly, in graded or high-school pupils, nor in teachers, superintendents of schools, or boards of education in the public-school system, all of which officials are required to take an oath to support the Federal Constitution as it now is, and until it has been amended through regular recourse to the people in the manner provided for in the Constitution. Consequently, the public schools cannot be legitimately used to sow discontent or dissatisfaction, or to cultivate skepticism, on the part of pupils as to any part of the Federal Constitution.

The aforesaid teachers' method book, Conclusions and Recommendations, constituting the last volume of said report of said commission on the social studies, is so ingeniously written that a very careful study of it is required in order to grasp the full extent of its perniciousness when applied to public schools. A few extracts therefrom, however, may be enlightening:

"Within the limits of an economy marked by integration and interdependence, many possibilities, many roads stand open before education. The making of choices, by either evasion or positive action, also cannot be avoided in the development of an educational program (p. 37).

"The teacher seldom dares to introduce his pupils to the truth about American society and the forces that drive it onward (pp. 75–6).

"In comparison with the social-science teacher in the more advanced European countries, the American teacher is poorly trained (p. 76)."

At page 133 of said book, it is asserted that teachers in the public schools should be protected against ignorant majorities, thus pointedly suggesting that teachers should assume the role of public masters, rather than public servants.

LITERATURE TO UNDERMINE THE MORALS AND CHARACTER OF PUPILS

Every informed person is aware that the first step in Communist technique is the undermining of the morals of the youth, and thereby making their subjugation easy. This is the real reason why the Communists wish to destroy all thought of God, religion, and morals, under the pretense of giving greater freedom to youth.

Although Dr. Ballou has made public only a few of the complaints received by him from parents of pupils, it now appears from those few which have been made public that the public schools have been actually utilized to undermine morals of the pupils. On December 20, 1932, Mr. Thomas W. Brahany complained to Dr. Ballou about his 15-year old daughter being required by her teacher to write a summary of a sordid Negro sex story, A Proud Fellow, which had appeared in the December 17, 1932, issue of the aforesaid objectionable magazine Scholastic. In his reply of February 7, 1933, Dr. Ballou admitted the story itself to be one which high-school pupils should not be called upon to read, but ignored the fact that the teacher had singled out the objectionable story for summary by the pupils, and undertook to pay a compliment to Scholastic magazine as being carefully edited. On January 15, 1933, Dr. E. M. Ellison, complained about a history teacher having assigned to his 15-year old daughter for reading a sexually enticing fiction story of prostitution in Asia entitled "Good Earth", written by Mrs. Pearl S. Buck.

In his reply of February 7, 1933, Dr. Ballou admitted that this book had been approved for reading assignment to pupils of that age, but said that the teacher did not recall assigning it in this instance, and added that all assignments are subject to approval by individual parents. In other words, according to Dr. Ballou, parents should not expect the public school to refrain from assigning such morally debasing literature to pupils, but parents must protect their children by directing noncompliance as to particular assignments. This book Good Earth was listed on page 9 of Washington School Document No. 5, 1933, entitled "A Reading List in History for Senior High Schools", and the continuing use of said list is specifically reendorsed by Dr. Ballou and the Board of Education on page 104 of Revised Course in History, and so forth, adopted June 5, 1935. Moreover, as recently as January 18, 1936, the aforementioned study magazine Scholastic reinvited the attention of high-school pupils to said book Good Earth, on page 14 of Scholastic issue of said date, under heading "China as Viewed Through the Eyes of Pearl Buck", saying:

"The author, in her novel, the Good Earth, writes of old China with its fetters of superstition and misunderstanding. She gives us a vivid description."

And so forth. It further appears that commencing on page 11 of Scholastic magazine of October 6, 1934, a chapter from the new book, Boy and Girl Tramps of America, by Thomas Minehan, was carried, with a commendatory introduction thereto as "both a vivid picture of nomad life and a challenge to a nation." During December 1935 and January 1936 my efforts to examine said book at the Library of Congress were fruitless, and I was finally told on January 16, 1936, by a special searcher in the reading room of said Library that the book was very popular with young persons and, on that account, he did not know how long it might be before I could examine it. I thereupon ordered a copy of the book from the publishers, and found it to be most debasing in every way. Not only does it refer slightingly to patriotism, and laud communism, but it abounds in low and vile language and features promiscuous sensual relations and even stoops to blasphemous ditties.

Within the past month I have accidentally learned that in addition to his position of superintendent of schools, Dr. Ballou is on the board of trustees of the Public Library of the District of Columbia, which Public Library is declared by law to be "a supplement of the public educational system of said District" (sec. 1421, Rev. Ed. D. C. Code). I thereupon made a personal investigation to learn whether the aforesaid two objectionable books—Good Earth and Boy and Girl Tramps of America—had actually invaded said Public Library. I was amazed to find both of said books carried in said Public Library, and also in the 11 branches of said library scattered in various portions of this District. The main Public Library, located at Seventh and K Streets, is right now carrying and featuring said book, Good Earth, in a special display rack labeled "Books too good to miss." The branch libraries also carry said book, Good Earth, nine copies standing in a row on the shelves of the Mount Pleasant branch ready for instant reading. As to said other book, Boy and Girl Tramps of America, it has been carried in the Public Library since as early as September 1934, four copies being now carried in said main Public Library, and each of the branch libraries also carry said book. The Mount Pleasant branch carries two copies of it. My efforts to see this last-named book, Boy and Girl Tramps of America, at the Mount Pleasant branch have not been successful, the clerk there explaining to me that it is a right popular book, and the southeast branch advised me that the book is now in the bindery on account of its condition from use. Thus, the main department of our public educational system—the public school—is misused to induce or require pupils to read particular books of a morally debasing character, and another department—the Public Library—is cooperatively misused, and public funds wasted, in making such particular debasing books readily available to pupils intended to be thus victimized. Youth in the tenth grade and up are given adult cards in the Public Library. Surely, no time should be lost in fixing the exact and precise responsibility for such intolerable conditions, indicative of very serious malfeasance in office, and in dealing sternly and effectively with all persons found to be responsible. If the public educational system cannot be relied upon to safeguard morals and develop character, but may be used to destroy morals and character under the guise of liberality, academic freedom, or any other pretense, no decent self-respecting parent can be expected to subject his child to such jeopardy and danger.

PRESERVATION OF CONGRESSIONAL RIDER OF JUNE 14, 1935, AND ITS VIGOROUS ENFORCEMENT IMPERATIVE

What has thus been shown plainly demonstrates that the invasion of the public schools here by antipatriotic and other subversive matter has been upon a large scale and has been carefully planned, and, further, that these conditions have been going on for at least 3 years, and have, consequently, done inestimable harm and injury already to many thousands of our youth. These disclosures make it impossible for any informed, honest-minded person to doubt the wisdom of the original adoption of the congressional rider of June 14, 1935, or to question the necessity for its preservation and vigorous enforcement. Those who advocate its repeal are either ignorant of the undeniable conditions aforesaid or actually desirous of having such conditions continue. Those in the latter class should not stay in this country and enjoy the liberties which here prevail, but ought to go to Russia and accept there the yoke to which they would subject our children. Those in the former class have no possible excuse for remaining in a state of ignorance upon this important subject.

On December 18, 1935, the Board of Education approved the elimination of the aforementioned Achorn textbook, it being so moved by Dr. Ballou, who then stated he was advised it might be construed as "too favorable toward communism." This amounted to the suggestion that a textbook might properly be favorable toward communism, provided it was not considered as "too favorable." It is further significant that said Achorn book was originally adopted by the Board of Education in January 1935, in apparent disregard of admonitions then being given by this committee of the Congress. It is further significant that said Achorn book was continued in use in defiance of the congressional rider, and its discontinuance on December 18, 1935, occurred only when this federation was persistently demanding a special list which would reveal said book—

I want it noted, Mr. Speaker, that this Federation of Citizens Associations want the "red rider" kept intact and not repealed—

The Rugg textbook heretofore mentioned, in use in District of Columbia public schools for about 3 years, namely, since before January 1, 1933 (school document no. 2: 1933), was expressly declared by the Board of Education in said official school document to be for "slow-going pupils" in the junior and senior high schools. It is now claimed by said Board (through its approval of Maurer committee report of Dec. 18, 1935, p. 3) that the use of said Rugg textbook, which said Board concedes "might possibly be interpreted as favorable to communism" (p. 8 of Maurer report), was adopted "for experimental purposes only in the field of industrial history." Just why such a textbook embracing such subject matter should be used upon "slow-going pupils" at all, much less to experiment upon them, or why such an experiment should be carried on for about 3 years, is not explained. The Board of Education admits (p. 8 of Maurer report) that said Rugg textbook has been used since the schools reopened in September 1935, notwithstanding the congressional rider, but claims that the section on Russia was not taught in classrooms since such reopening, and that the presence of objectionable matter in a textbook is unobjectionable if it be not specifically dealt with in the classroom. The minutes of the Board of June 12, 1935, show that Dr. Ballou gave the Board advice at that time that, if the rider became law, such course could be followed, and textbooks containing objectionable matter need not be eliminated. The Board of Education has recently stated that the Rugg book is not to be further used, claiming that the school plans of June 1935 contemplated discontinuance of this book after the latter part of 1935 (p. 3 of Maurer report). In other words, it is suggested, after about 3 years of its use, that this particular book is not to be further used in such claimed experiment upon "slow-going pupils." This suggestion came for the first time nearly a month after the book had been protested, no such suggestion being made by the Board at the hearing when the protest was presented. The public is, moreover, entitled to know whether the purpose of such incomprehensible experiment upon "slow-going pupils" was to ascertain how many of them were converted to communism, or just what the purpose was.

The Board of Education refused to take action eliminating Scholastic as a study magazine, but approved instead its Maurer committee report styling this federation's unanswerable showing as "some strictures" and merely referred the matter to the superintendent of schools, who has continued said magazine in use among high-school pupils as a study magazine. Said Board has also failed to remedy any of the other intolerable conditions hereinbefore pointed out. Said Board has further refrained from conducting any thorough investigation of its own into textbooks generally to see that they do not violate the congressional rider. What has been presented by this federation embraces, of course, only such subject matter as has happened to come to the federation's attention. The federation lacks funds and facilities to fully investigate all textbooks, study magazines, etc., in use in the public schools.

It thus appears that the superintendent of schools and the Board of Education, the persons primarily responsible for the conditions in the public schools requiring correction, are evading prompt and full compliance with the congressional rider, and while so doing, are seeking to give the rider a ridiculous interpretation, namely, that textbooks containing communistic or other objectionable matter, may be retained in the public schools, provided such matter be not required to be studied by pupils. An admonition to pupils to skip such matter, thereby causing the pupils to take a special interest therein by reason of the air of mystery created, would, of course, be a necessary incident to such absurd proposition. This is a plain attempt by violators to utilize their own evasiveness to bring the law which they are violating into disrepute and thereby bring about its repeal. All textbooks, study magazines, etc., containing objectionable matter must be entirely eliminated unless absurdity and evasion be sanctioned as this federation clearly pointed out to the Board of Education on November 20, 1935. This composite condition of affairs, constituting a plain affront to Congress and to all practical fair-mindedness, caused this federation to adopt its resolution of January 4, 1936, declaring that—

"The recent action of the Board of Education makes it imperative that the Congress of the United States shall be appealed to without delay to provide an effectual remedy and one which will be so thorough that there can be no danger of a recurrence of existing conditions."

In conclusion, I should call the committee's attention to the fact that the American Historical Association, under whose auspices the afore-mentioned pernicious method book for teachers were prepared and published, was incorporated by act of Congress of January 4, 1889, and by such act was expressly limited to purposes "in the interest of American history and of history in America"; yet the said method books show that the association has been diverted from such authorized purposes to the radically contrary purpose of promoting the tenets or pretenses of Marxian communism, aided by a special aggregation of educators having such views, including some recently shown to be directly connected with communistic Moscow University, namely, George S. Counts and W. W. Charters. Moreover, Dr. Ballou's recommendations of textbooks and study magazines for history and social sciences in the District of Columbia public schools during the past 3 years are shown to have specially favored those connected with said American Historical Association, including Carl Becker (who was president of said association in 1931), Charles A. Beard, George S. Counts, Harold Rugg, and a number of others.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Sullivan, is your Federated Citizens Association, embracing some sixty-odd associations, in any way objecting to this rider that Congress passed last year?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Not at all. The federation strongly favors it, although there is a small minority element in the federation on that matter.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean, does your Federated Citizens Association oppose it?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Absolutely not.

Mr. BLANTON. Have they taken any action against it?

Mr. SULLIVAN. The attitude of the Federated Citizens Association is that that proposal ought to be strengthened.

Mr. BLANTON. They feel that, instead of repealing it, we ought to strengthen it?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, sir; it ought to be made even stronger than it is.

Mr. BLANTON. Your attitude is that we ought not to allow anything about communism to be taught in the schools?

Mr. SULLIVAN. It ought not to be taught in the public schools as a subject for social-science study. It should be explained as to its evil aims and consequences and denounced.

Mr. BLANTON. It should be denounced?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, sir. It should be expounded objectively as to its pernicious character and denounced.

Mr. BLANTON. This book Conclusions and Recommendations shows that Dr. Ballou was secretary of that commission for 5 years. Dr. Ballou admitted that the book was written by Counts and Beard; did you know that?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I did not know that.

Mr. BLANTON. This book Boy and Girl Tramps of America, by Thomas Minnihan, is too vile to even quote from.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I quite agree. It is entirely.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you know that Dr. Ballou had admitted that it is one of the most vulgar, one of the vilest pieces of literature, that he had ever heard of being published?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I did not know that. I do not know why it is in the public-school libraries.

FROM TESTIMONY OF MAJ. GEN. AMOS A. FRIES

Tenth. Since the uninformed, the irresponsibles, the sympathetic pinks, and the reds are contending that there was no occasion for Congress passing the "red rider", I am going to take enough space in the RECORD to prove beyond doubt that Congress acted wisely and did so at the request of the substantial mothers and fathers of Washington when it passed the "red rider" to prevent communism from being indoctrinated in the schools. I quote the following from the testimony of Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries before our subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations:

STATEMENT OF MAJ. GEN. AMOS A. FRIES, UNITED STATES ARMY, RETIRED, PRESIDENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PUBLIC SCHOOL ASSOCIATION AND PAST DEPARTMENT COMMANDER OF THE AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. BLANTON. We have Gen. Amos A. Fries, who asks to be heard on the requested appropriation for character education and upon communism in the public schools. General Fries, you are a retired major general of the United States Army?

General FRIES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. You have had how many years service in the United States Army, General?

General FRIES. I had more than 31 years commissioned service when I was retired.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you have service abroad?

General FRIES. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What service did you have during the war, General?

General FRIES. I was there throughout the World War, having sailed from New York on July 23, 1917, and returned December 18, 1918. I was Chief of what is now the Chemical Warfare Service throughout the war in France, having organized it and carried it through from start to finish.

Mr. BLANTON. How long have you lived in Washington?

General FRIES. I have lived in Washington since March 1, 1920, and I had been in Washington nearly 5 years before the war.

Mr. BLANTON. Is your permanent home now in Washington, General?

General FRIES. It is.

Mr. BLANTON. You have a home here?

General FRIES. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. You are what we call a resident of Washington?

General FRIES. I am.

Mr. BLANTON. And you are interested, as a citizen, in what goes on here?

General FRIES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. General Fries, you may proceed. If you care to make a statement about any matters, you may proceed, General. I know it interferes with your thought somewhat to be interrupted, and we won't interrupt you until you make your statement; but we do reserve the right to ask you questions when we see fit. Proceed in your own way, General, and later we will ask you questions.

General FRIES. I will say, first, that I have been interested in public schools all my life.

I graduated from high school and went to West Point, having taught fully 3 years in the public schools during the last couple of years I was in high school and for a year before I went to West Point. I make this statement to show that I have had considerable experience in teaching, having been for 3½ years an instructor and director in post-graduate military and civil engineering in the United States Engineering School.

We have had four children go through the public schools of the District of Columbia. For a period of 15 years we had from one to four children in those schools, and both Mrs. Fries and myself have taken an active interest in the schools. I have taken an interest with the American Legion and other patriotic organizations.

I began to see radicalism creeping into our schools, I thought, as early as 1922. I brought up, when I was department commander of the American Legion of the District of Columbia, in 1926, a matter that was referred to me by a citizen of the District and a patron, complaining of a certain teacher in one of the high schools.

A year ago I was appointed chairman of a committee by the American Legion to investigate and report on the character education program. We opposed that appropriation then, and while the Legion has taken no very recent action, I am sure its position still stands. I want to submit later our final report of two pages. I am not going to read all of it at this time. However, I do want to read two short paragraphs because I think they sum up, in many ways, my attitude on this question, with particular reference to Dr. Charters [reading]:

"When challenged, Dr. Charters protests his enthusiasm for American forms and doctrines. However, he admits his membership on the advisory council of the Soviet's Moscow University, an appointment accepted at the suggestion of Stephen Duggan, who, in his turn, admits that the advisory council, in cooperation with the Soviet educational authorities, initiated the requirement that Americans and others attending the university take a fundamental course in the principles of the collective society. In our opinion, Dr. Charters' connection with the Soviet educational system, however remote it may be, unfits him for any connection with the public schools of Washington.

"It is not sufficient that those in charge of the education of our children refrain from indoctrinating them with communism. Our school authorities and teachers should and must be persons thoroughly imbued with an understanding of, and enthusiasm for American ideals and methods. Anything short of that wholly unfits them for the task of teaching children of graded-school and high-school age."

I would say, further, I am here as president of the District of Columbia Public School Association. Last October when it was made known that communism would be taught in the schools, regardless of the rider, the public school association held a protest meeting and vigorously protested that they were against any weakening of that rider. We made it very clear in presenting the case at that time to the Board of Education that the statements that are frequently made to the effect that we are trying to stifle information are absolutely absurd and incorrect, and we insisted that the truth of communism was not made known whatever to our children; that what was covered in the school textbooks and in the papers circulated were sugar-coated platitudes, which could only deceive the children into thinking that communism as it exists in Russia is a fine thing.

Within a few days after the public school association held a protest meeting, October 28, 1935, against the teaching of communism in the District of Columbia schools, in spite of the law forbidding such teaching, the American Civil Liberties Union announced (according to an article in the Washington Daily News) that they had a committee working up a program to support Dr. Frank W. Ballou and the local school board. At least two lawyers who do work for the A. C. L. U. appeared at the school board meeting, November 6, 1935, when protests were made against teaching communism in the schools by many civic associations besides the public school association.

Since several college professors, besides John Dewey, are on the national committee of the American Civil Liberties Union, I desire to submit the following extract from page 56 of House Report 2290, Seventy-first Congress, third session, where Roger Baldwin, a "director" and spokesman for the American Civil Liberties Union, told what his organization stands for—

I want my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, to note carefully what Roger Baldwin stands for—

"The CHAIRMAN. Does your organization uphold the right of a citizen or alien—it does not make any difference which—to advocate murder?

"Mr. BALDWIN. Yes.

"The CHAIRMAN. Or assassination?

"Mr. BALDWIN. Yes.

"The CHAIRMAN. Does your organization uphold the right of an American citizen to advocate force and violence for the overthrow of the Government?

"Mr. BALDWIN. Certainly; insofar as as mere advocacy is concerned.

"The CHAIRMAN. Does it uphold the right of an alien in this country to urge the overthrow and advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence?

"Mr. BALDWIN. Precisely on the same basis as any citizen.

"The CHAIRMAN. You do uphold the right of an alien to advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence?

"Mr. BALDWIN. Sure; certainly. It is the healthiest kind of a thing for a country, of course, to have free speech, unlimited."

Now, the congressional committee's definition of communism is this:

"The following is a definition of communism, a world-wide political organization advocating:

"1. Hatred of God and all forms of religion.

"2. Destruction of private property, and inheritance.

"3. Absolute social and racial equality; promotion of class hatred.

"4. Revolutionary propaganda through the Communist International, stirring up Communist activities in foreign countries in order to cause strikes, riots, sabotage, bloodshed, and civil war.

"5. Destruction of all forms of representative or democratic governments, including civil liberties, such as freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly, and trial by jury.

"6. The ultimate and final objective is by means of world revolution to establish the dictatorship of the so-called proletariat into one world union of soviet socialist republics with the capital at Moscow."

In my opinion, that is an absolutely fair and accurate definition.

Mr. BLANTON. Of communism?

General FRIES. Yes, sir.

NUMBER KILLED OR EXECUTED IN RUSSIA

"Henri Bero, a French Socialist, has gathered figures showing that the number of people who have been killed or executed since the Soviet regime came into power in Russia is almost unbelievable. His figures of the known dead are as follows:

" 'Twenty-eight bishops and higher clergy, 6,778 priests, 5,585 school teachers, 8,000 doctors, 51,850 army officers, 200,850 policemen and other officials, and 11,488,520 peasants and artisans. These make the staggering total of 11,726,746. Nearly 2,000,000 more dead than the total killed in the World War.' "

Mr. BLANTON. You mean 2,000,000 more were executed in Russia than were killed in the World War?

General FRIES. That has nothing to do with the 20,000,000 that died of starvation.

PROTEST OF AMERICAN LEGION AGAINST APPROPRIATIONS FOR CHARACTER EDUCATION

Now, I want to take up the so-called character education in the District of Columbia schools. As I stated, the American Legion, a year ago, protested against any appropriations for that on the grounds that it was not teaching character.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you have a copy of that protest?

General FRIES. Yes, sir; I read a quotation from that previously. I am going to put that report in the record.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish you would.

General FRIES. Yes. The report is as follows:

"Report to the executive committee, Department of the District of Columbia, American Legion, of special committee to investigate 'character' education in the Washington public schools

"Your special committee appointed to investigate the scheme of 'character' education in the Washington public schools, having investigated the subject, reports back the following findings and conclusions, with a recommendation:

"The 'character' education experiment was introduced in the local public schools in September 1934. Little is known about the details of the system except that its proponents hold out the idea that it is intended to 'develop fine characters in boys and girls of Washington.' Similar claims are made for most of the fads that are sought to be introduced at the expense of taxpayers.

"The very suggestion of the establishment of a special system or course of 'character' education in the public schools carries with it an implication that the public-school system is a failure. Character is something which is developed within one's self. It is not supplied from the outside. True, the development of character is affected by education, but only to the extent that cultural advancement through general education tends to enhance intelligence and enable one to understand and endeavor to eliminate in one's self faults that detract from character. The province of the schools in this respect is, through the teaching of sound curricula, to advance the intelligence of our children, and, further, the maintenance of a high standard of character among the teaching personnel whose precept and example have much to do with the development of the characters of the pupils under their direction. When public-school authorities suggest establishment of a special and distinct course or system of 'character education', it is obvious that they have lost sight of the proper function of the schools, or have failed to set up adequate curricula, or to maintain a high ethical standard for the teaching personnel. The cure will be found in a correction of these defects and not in the establishment of any new system, misnamed 'character education.'

"The expense of the course, estimated at about $87,000 annually, would constitute an unjust and unnecessary burden on the taxpayers, wholly out of proportion to any beneficial results that might be expected.

"Home environment and family influences, as well as religious training, are the chief and most important elements in the development of character. Parents have a tremendous and appropriate responsibility in this regard. One of the worst effects of the establishment of a so-called 'character education' system in the public schools would be its tendency to undermine the parents' sense of responsibility. The scheme is another move toward the undermining of the integrity of the American family—another step toward encouraging parents to foist their responsibilities onto public agencies—another advance in the direction of substituting governmental agencies in the execution of proper family functions; it smacks of the communistic doctrine that families are nonexistent, religion is passé, and children are the chattels of the State. Is it any wonder, then, that we find that the person selected to direct such activities in the Washington public schools has been touched by the influence of Moscow? Why, in establishing the 'character education' system, did our school authorities have to search so far beyond our borders to find a competent advisor and finally pick up in Ohio Dr. W. W. Charters, a member of the advisory committee of Moscow University?

"It is not sufficient that those in charge of the education of our children refrain from indoctrinating them with communism. Our school authorities and teachers should and must be persons thoroughly imbued with an understanding of, and enthusiasm for, American ideals and methods. Anything short of that wholly unfits them for the task of teaching children of graded-school and high-school age.

"Those under whose care our children are placed for educational purposes should have no connection, remote or otherwise, with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. After all, this is America, and we want our children raised and educated as Americans. They can derive nothing of benefit to themselves or their country from teachings tainted by any of the doctrines evolved by a benighted nation whose people of the present generation are just beginning to emerge from the Stygian darkness of serfdom, whose people have never yet known the blessings of liberty. When the Russian people have passed through their present ordeal of communism and hate-bred enmity of others, when they have had time to become educated and to appraise and correct their present political and economic schemes born of ignorance, when they have groped their way to the status of an enlightened nation, when, in short, the Russian people have grown to adult status intellectually, then perhaps they may contribute something worthwhile to the culture and advancement of the world. In the meantime, we do not want any part of their methods introduced here or any of their influences present in the education of our children.

"We recommend that the Department of the District of Columbia, the American Legion, register its opposition to any continuation of the so-called character-education system in the public schools of Washington.

"AMOS A. FRIES, Chairman.
"HOWARD E. SNYDER.
"H. W. LINEBURG.
"RAYMOND J. QUEENIN.
"FRANK L. PECKHAM."

I have here an address by Dr. Ballou, delivered in New York City, November 1, 1934. Dr. Ballou sent me this under date of January 30, 1935, knowing that myself and the others in the Legion, as well as other organizations, were opposed to the so-called character education.

Mr. BLANTON. Have you ever been an officer in the Legion?

General FRIES. I am a past department commander of the American Legion, District of Columbia. On page 2 this statement is made by Dr. Ballou:

"The character-education experiment, which was systematically inaugurated in the public schools of Washington in September 1934, grew out of the investigation of crime and racketeering conducted by a committee of the United States Senate of which Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, of New York, is chairman."

On page 4 he stated:

"In preparation for the beginning of the experiment an institute or conference was held for a period of 3 weeks, beginning June 25."

I want to say right here that I called up Mr. COPELAND'S secretary and verified the fact that the first hearings were held August 14, 1933, and the last hearings were held on January 31, 1934. In an article entitled "The Copeland Experiment in the District of Columbia", by Dr. Charters——

Mr. BLANTON. Do you mean Dr. W. W. Charters?

General FRIES. Yes, sir; Dr. W. W. Charters. He says: "Washington was selected for this study", which means this character-education experiment, "partly because it was a convenient location, partly because Superintendent Ballou and the Board of Education are enthusiastic about the project, and partly because the teaching corps of the city has been working upon the problem for the last 5 years."

Mr. BLANTON. What is the date of that speech he made?

General FRIES. This was published in October 1934.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it would mean that before October 1934 Dr. Ballou and the teaching corps had been working on that 5 years.

General FRIES. Yes; and yet Dr. Ballou and Charters both say it was based on the crime investigations which did not start until the middle of August 1933 and did not end until January 31, 1934.

Now, to show that Charters did not make an error, we find this statement of his on page 12:

"Our program has through the years increased this range, as indicated in our School Document No. 9, 1931" (Preliminary Report on Character Education in the District of Columbia).

In other words, in 1931 a preliminary report on character education in the District of Columbia was submitted, about 3 years before Dr. Charters made his speech and 2 years before he says character education was introduced in the schools of the District because of the crime investigation.

Mr. BLANTON. And 2 years before the Senate crime investigation?

General FRIES. Yes, sir.

Now, Dr. Charters, as shown on page 15 of this report of the Commission on the Social Studies, was one of those working with that committee of 17 originally, of which Dr. Ballou was secretary throughout 5 years, January 1, 1929, to January 1, 1934, and chairman of at least one subcommittee, and a member of two other subcommittees, there being five subcommittees. Dr. Charters was one of those working on problems.

Mr. BLANTON. Dr. Ballou admitted that that book was written by George S. Counts and Dr. Charles A. Beard. You knew that, didn't you?

General FRIES. I have heard that statement made. In other words, as we have shown here, Mr. Chairman, from the statements of Dr. Charters, there was a group in the District of Columbia schools working on this character education approximately the same 5 years that Dr. Ballou was working with this commission, of which he was secretary throughout 5 years, and in which he was chairman of one subcommittee and a member of two others.

Mr. BLANTON. In that connection, General, does that coincide in time with the 5-year program of Soviet Russia?

General FRIES. Well, Russia is the one who has popularized 5-year programs.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know who those teachers were here working in connection with it?

General FRIES. One of them was Mr. Jones, because he is mentioned as one working with them, and also Paul Lutz, of Teachers College.

An 11-page mimeograph marked in the lower left-hand corner of the last page, "LF 1/12/31", and distributed to certain teachers, has the title "Character Education in History." (Statement prepared by Mr. Jones in 1929.)

The above dates correspond with the date (Jan. 1, 1929) when the committee on the social sciences with Dr. Ballou as secretary began its work, and the date, January 12, 1931, agrees with the date Dr. Charters mentions as the date of Preliminary Report on Character Education in the District of Columbia, quoted earlier.

The Mr. Jones referred to is Prof. George J. Jones, head of the history department in Dr. Ballou's Washington schools. I quote further:

Mr. BLANTON. General, it may be interesting to you to know that, as shown by our printed hearings a year ago, Dr. Ballou testified that he had selected Dr. W. W. Charters to guide this character education in the District of Columbia and was paying him $50 a lecture for coming here regularly to deliver lectures to guide it here in the District of Columbia.

General FRIES. I want to go back for just one moment to Dr. Ballou's address, in which the says, "In these daily conferences", quoting, "the program for inaugurating the experiment was developed."

Mr. JOHNSON. These daily conferences for what?

General FRIES. Character education.

Mr. JOHNSON. When?

General FRIES. They started June 25, 1934. [Reading]:

"In these daily conferences the program for inaugurating the experiment was developed. The conferences were presided over by Dr. W. W. Charters, of Ohio State University, who was assisted by Dr. Ben D. Wood, of Columbia University; Dr. Ralph W. Tyler, of Ohio State University; and Dr. Charles R. Mann, director emeritus of the American Council on Education."

I just want to call your attention to this—that Dr. Charters and Dr. Ben Wood both are mentioned in this book, Report of the Commission on the Social Studies, and both took part in them. Dr. Charters and Dr. Mann were both members of the Moscow Advisory Council.

FROM DR. BALLOU'S ADDRESS, ATLANTIC CITY, FEBRUARY 26, 1935

"As a superintendent of schools I am heartily in accord with the general idea that schools must play an important part in social change. When the consensus of the American people shall have decided the kind of a social order they want I think the schools are prepared to give instruction in that social order."

Mr. JOHNSON. In other words, prepare them in advance?

General FRIES. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. For a change in our system.

General FRIES. Yes, our civilization.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is what he means.

General FRIES. Dr. Ballou said in a newspaper statement quoted earlier "Don't try to tell our children what they should do or what kind of a philosophy they should have, in the future" and here he is saying practically the same thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Right there, turning to page 477 of the previous hearings, Dr. Ballou said:

"What we are trying to do is set up a new philosophy of education"—

Mr. Clerk, read what Dr. Ballou then said he had to do about the teachers.

The CLERK (reading):

"whose philosophy has got to be changed fundamentally."

Mr. JOHNSON. That is on page 477?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. What hearing?

Mr. BLANTON. For the fiscal year 1936. Then, read the statement appearing on page 482 of the 1936 hearings.

The CLERK (reading):

"Mr. CANNON. It seems to me rather a startling statement that the philosophy of all teachers engaged must be changed in order to introduce correct training in the schools. I had supposed that the philosophy of every good teacher includes correct training."

On page 106 it states:

"But the State can be expected to move in this direction only in response to pressure arising from some group or groups of citizens."

That is practically what Dr. Counts has said in his book, Dare the School Build a New Social Order? In other words, the teachers should seize power, and, therefore, it is stated above that "the State can only be expected to move" by pressure, from some group or groups of citizens.

I consider this one of the most vicious things I have ever read.

On page 119 it states:

"The program for the teaching of the social sciences which the commission has outlined in its report is designed for a system of public schools functioning in and serving immediately American society."

In other words, this is for the public schools, not for any college.

On page 133, paragraph 12, it states:

"In order that the individual teacher, out of loyalty to this supreme ideal of social-science instruction, may be protected against the assaults of ignorant majorities, heresy-hunting minorities, and all self-constituted guardians of public morals and thought, the profession as a whole must make provision for the review of controversies, thus arising, by trained specialists, competent to pass judgment upon the scholarship, subject matter, and manner of presentation in question."

Then, paragraph 13, following:

"In the case of unfair or unwise dismissal the profession must be prepared to conduct energetic and appropriate inquiries and, by resort to the courts if necessary, see that justice is done, damages asked, and reinstatement achieved."

That is just practically an open statement that they propose to bludgeon the people into taking the school system as well as the teachers they approve of.

Among those most active on the Commission on the Social Studies, which has been quoted from at length, we find the names of Prof. George S. Counts, of Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, and Dr. Charles A. Beard, historian and formerly of Columbia University.

OLD DOG TRAY IN BAD COMPANY

I will now quote from Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling's The Red Network, a Who's Who of Radicalism, giving the close associates of Dr. Ballou, for whom he served as their secretary during the 5 years they were planning their book, Conclusions and Recommendations, which Dr. Ballou now admits was so very radical that he refused to sign it—to wit:

DR. CHARLES A. BEARD, "RADICAL"

The Red Network, in its Who's Who in Radicalism, embraces Dr. Charles A. Beard, "a college professor", and states that—

He is a supporter of the radical Rand School.

DR. CHARLES S. COUNTS, "RADICAL"

The Red Network, in its Who's Who in Radicalism, embraces Dr. George S. Counts, described as—

Professor, Teachers' College, Columbia University, showing membership in, and relationship to, and author of, various communistic organizations and communistic books.

DR. BALLOU ADMITS THAT BEARD AND COUNTS ARE "RADICALS"

After serving with them for 5 years on a commission, he being its secretary, Dr. Frank W. Ballou says that both Dr. Charles A. Beard and Dr. George S. Counts are "radicals", and they are the ones whom Dr. Ballou says wrote Conclusions and Recommendations, which was the main product of the 5 years' work of his Commission on the Social Studies:

Mr. DITTER. You understand what I mean by the term "radical"?

Dr. BALLOU. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. Interpreting my use of the term, would you say, sir, that there were any in this group who would fall into that category, such as I have described by the term "radical"?

Dr. BALLOU. I am clearly of the opinion that the discussion shows that is so.

Mr. DITTER. Would you care to give us your opinion as to where one Charles A. Beard would fall in such a classification?

Dr. BALLOU. I think he is an extreme left-end man.

Mr. DITTER. By left-end man, do you mean by that "radical"?

Dr. BALLOU. A liberal or radical.

Mr. DITTER. Very liberal or radical?

Dr. BALLOU. Yes, sir.

Mr. DITTER. Would you say that George S. Counts would fall in that same category?

Dr. BALLOU. I think he stands very close to Mr. Beard.

Yet Dr. Ballou acted as the secretary for Dr. Beard and Dr. Counts for 5 years in getting up said communistic book, Conclusions and Recommendations.

DR. BALLOU PREFERRED NOT TO DISSENT

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1936.

Mr. WILLIAM A. DUVALL,
Clerk, Subcommittee on Appropriations for the District of Columbia, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I refer to your letter of February 13 about the volume, Conclusions and Recommendations, which forms a part of the report of the Commission on the Social Studies of the American Historical Association. You ask me to furnish you with any communication which Dr. Frank Ballou may have sent indicating his reasons for refusing to sign these conclusions and recommendations of the commission. Dr. Ballou was invited to state his reasons for dissent, and facilities were offered to him for printing his dissenting opinion as an appendix to the book in question. He preferred not to do so.

Yours very truly,

CONYERS READ, Secretary.

Mr. BLANTON: You are acquainted, are you not, with the assertion on page 133 of said book, Conclusions and Recommendations, published by your commission, that the individual teacher of social science instruction should be protected against the assaults of "ignorant majorities"?

Dr. BALLOU. Yes; I think they should be protected against the assault of anybody. I do not know what that statement means.

Mr. BLANTON. Does it mean that if the majority of the people of Washington wanted their children to be safe from communism here in the Washington schools that you ought to have protection from them?

Dr. BALLOU. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. What is meant by "the assault of ignorant majorities"?

Dr. BALLOU. I do not know. You will have to ask the writer.

Mr. BLANTON. Doctor, you are acquainted, are you not, with the following statement on page 142 of said book of your commission, Conclusions and Recommendations [reading]:

"In the steadily integrating social order of the present and future, if education is to be given competent and relevant direction, the emphasis in the professional education of the administrator must be laid again on social science, social philosophy, and statecraft."

Dr. BALLOU. Who is the author of that statement?

Mr. BLANTON. That appears in Conclusions and Recommendations, at page 142.

Dr. BALLOU. Of course, I will admit I am familiar with every paragraph in the book. I have read it many times.

Mr. BLANTON. But that is a statement that you do not agree with? You can read it over. There is the paragraph.

Dr. BALLOU. No; I could not accept that.

Mr. BLANTON. You do not accept that, do you?

Dr. BALLOU. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not also true, Doctor, that on June 5, 1935, on the recommendation of yourself, the Board of Education approved a revised course in history and other social studies, and that on the last page of such approved document, School Document No. 1, 1936, the following appears as one of the approved reading courses under heading [reading]:

"General Reference Readings on Methods for Teachers; Report of the Commission on the Social Studies; American Historical Association."

Dr. BALLOU. Yes, sir; I expect it is there.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then you did put this in as one of your approved books?

Dr. BALLOU. We put that in the list of books that would be of benefit to the teachers.

Mr. DITTER. Is it still there?

Dr. BALLOU. Yes; I expect it is still there.

Mr. BLANTON. Doctor, you recall, do you not, writing Mrs. E. N. Dingley on February 11, 1935, that [reading]:

"The commission on the social studies of the American Historical Association, of which I was a member and which devoted 5 years to the study of this subject, was unanimously of the opinion that our study of history should increasingly have to do with the history of modern times as compared with the former emphasis on history of ancient times and should deal impartially and dispassionately with some of the current problems of economics and sociology. The commission recognized that in undertaking to do this it might be criticized for the way in which it dealt with the problems of capitalism, labor, and many patriotic subjects."

Dr. BALLOU. I recognize that.

Mr. BLANTON. You did write that?

Dr. BALLOU. Yes.

12. STATEMENT OF HARRY N. STULL, CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION OF THE FEDERATION OF CITIZENS' ASSOCIATIONS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. STULL. I represent the Federation of Citizens' Associations, chairman of the committee on education.

Mr. BLANTON. Chairman of the committee on education for the Federation of Citizens' Associations?

Mr. STULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. You are the duly authorized spokesman for the committee on education of the Federation of Citizens' Associations?

Mr. STULL. That is correct; yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. There are some sixty-odd associations in your federation?

Mr. STULL. Sixty-three; that is right.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a rider on last year's appropriation bill, to eliminate communism from our public schools. Are you for or against that rider? Are you with us in our attempt to stop communism?

Mr. STULL. Yes; I am in favor of that rider.

Mr. BLANTON. You want us to stop communism in the schools?

Mr. STULL. Yes, sir; I do; and my idea about that is that the ruling of the Corporation Counsel, Mr. Prettyman, was a proper one.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I have quoted enough excerpts from the voluminous mass of evidence before our subcommittee to show that the contention that there was no reason for passing the "red rider" is not true, but false.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 5

That the "red rider" prevents factual instruction.

From Corporation Counsel Prettyman's opinion, I quote the following:

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
OFFICE OF THE CORPORATION COUNSEL,
September 5, 1935.

To the Commissioners:

We think that the word "communism" refers to the governmental forms and theories of the present-day Communist parties composing the Internationale. Chief among their economic and political tenets are (1) the abolition of private ownership of property and the substitution therefor of a system of common ownership, (2) control of the government by the proletariat (wage earners without property), that is, a dictatorship by the proletariat, (3) the destruction of present systems of government and the substitution therefor of other systems adapted to the theory of proletarian dictatorship. These tenets are, of course, directly opposed to the established American system, which includes among its principal bases private ownership of property, governmental control by a majority of all classes, periodically expressed, and a governmental system, legislative, executive, and judicial, designed to function in accordance with these concepts. The congressional intent in the present statute was obviously directed to the protection of this system against internal attack.

The word "advocate" is easy of definition in this context. It means to plead for or to urge the adoption of.

Much more difficult is the exact definition of the limits of the word "teach" as it appears here. In ordinary parlance it may mean to enlighten, or to indoctrinate, or to nurture, or to train. Clearly, any teaching of communism which has for its purpose or its intended effect the nurture, the training, or the indoctrination of the pupils in communistic thought is forbidden by this statute.

But I am of opinion that the mere informing of pupils concerning the history, existence, or theories of the communistic governments or parties is not prohibited. Obviously Congress did not mean to prohibit comment or instruction which is adverse to communism, that is, teaching against it. Neither does it seem to me that the congressional intent reaches to the recital, without any shadow of favor or support, of factual data, whether historical, economic, or political. There is a vital difference here between teaching and teaching about. To state that communism exists is not to teach it. To state what Communists believe is not to teach communism within the meaning of this statute, provided that the method or manner of statement does not imply approval.

Thus I am of opinion that the mere recitation or study of factual data is not the teaching prohibited by this statute. But I am also of the view that any shadow of favor or support of communism shown by or reasonably to be drawn from such recitation or study is prohibited.

E. BARRETT PRETTYMAN,
Corporation Counsel, District of Columbia.

The corporation counsel is the legal authority for the District. He holds that the "red rider" does not prevent proper factual instruction. He says that all it does is to prevent indoctrination.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 6

That Comptroller General McCarl has interfered with the academic freedom of teachers.

No person can show one line from McCarl interfering with academic freedom. When Dr. Ballou refused to instruct his teachers to obey the law as construed by Prettyman, and contended that Congress had no right to restrict his teachers as to what they shall not teach, McCarl required them to make an affidavit that they had not violated the law.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 7

That teachers are insulted by having to make affidavits.

Why are teachers insulted? The President makes an affidavit. Cabinet officers make affidavits. Generals and admirals make affidavits. Senators and Congressmen make affidavits. Teachers can blame no one but Superintendent Ballou. He could easily eliminate affidavits.

"DID NOT SEE FIT TO DO IT"

To show that by instructing his teachers that they must obey the law passed by Congress as construed by the corporation counsel, Dr. Ballou could have stopped all affidavits, I quote the folowing from our printed hearings:

Mr. BLANTON. Doctor, is it not a fact that I proposed to you that if you would advise the teachers of Washington that Congress had passed a law that they should neither teach nor advocate communism, that the Comptroller General would withdraw that requirement, and that the teachers would not be required to make any further affidavits? Didn't I propose that to you?

Dr. BALLOU. You proposed that to me.

Mr. BLANTON. You could have submitted that suggestion to the Board of Education yourself, could you not?

Dr. BALLOU. Well, I have not.

Mr. BLANTON. You could have done it, couldn't you, Doctor?

Dr. BALLOU. I could have done anything, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. You did not see fit to do it, Doctor?

Mr. BALLOU. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that you replied to me that you would never agree that the right of the teachers to teach according to their method of teaching should be taken away from them?

Dr. BALLOU. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. "I will say this to you now, Doctor, that if you will instruct your teachers tomorrow that Congress has passed a law that prevents them from teaching or advocating communism in the public schools, and this law must be obeyed, I know that this committee can have Comptroller General McCarl withdraw the requirement of those affidavits immediately. Now, if the affidavits are inconvenient, aren't you willing to issue that instruction to them?

Dr. BALLOU. I am not authorized to issue that instruction until the Board takes action.

Mr. BLANTON. You were not sufficiently interested in the matter to have proposed it to the Board of Education.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 8

That there was no authority to allow witnesses to testify about communism.

Our subcommittee was holding hearings on requests for appropriations. We had to decide whether we would allow or disallow them. Dr. Ballou requested $78,660 for his so-called character education. As testified by Judge Sullivan, Major General Fries, and many other witnesses, said character education was just a smoke screen for indoctrinating communism, and was inseparably connected with communism. Our subcommittee, after hearing all witnesses, voted unanimously not to allow the $78,660, and the full Committee on Appropriations, consisting of 39 members, approved our action, and the House of Representatives passed our 83-page bill without amendment, with only 26 Members voting against it on roll call.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 9

That our subcommittee abused witnesses, did not give them time needed, and conducted star-chamber proceedings.

The above is false in its entirety. The following is what the members of our subcommittee say about it:

SUBCOMMITTEE ON DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

As members of the subcommittee handling appropriations for the District of Columbia, we certify that our hearings presided over by our chairman, Mr. BLANTON, on the $78,660 appropriation requested for so-called character education, which incidently involved the question of indoctrinating communism in our schools, were conducted in a way that was fair and just to everyone. We heard at length Superintendent Frank W. Ballou, Prof. George J. Jones, head of the history and social studies department, and members of the Board of Education they brought with them. Chairman BLANTON was courteous to everyone and patiently heard every witness they wanted heard, and we devoted 4 hours continuous hearing to Editor Robinson, of Scholastic, and we allowed Congressman ELLENBOGEN to accompany Robinson and remain throughout his entire testimony. We heard every witness who wanted to be heard and gave them such time as they requested. After concluding the hearings, our subcommittee voted unanimously not to allow the $78,600, as we believed it was being wasted and used for subversive purposes, and we refused to put this $78,600 in the appropriation bill.

CLARENCE CANNON,
B. M. JACOBSEN,
GEORGE W. JOHNSON,
J. W. DITTER,
Members of Subcommittee,
Committee on Appropriations.

Attest:

As clerk, I was present during entire hearings and know above is correct.

WILLIAM A. DUVALL, Clerk.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 10

That Washington people want the "sissy bill" enacted and the "red rider" repealed.

That contention is absurd. Without a referendum, the only way to get the sentiment of the Washington people is through their organizations. The Federation of Citizens' Associations, embracing 63 different organizations of citizens, through their chosen committee, George E. Sullivan, Harry N. Stull, Mrs. George Corbin, and Mrs. Horace Phelps, say that Washington people want the "red rider", and do not want the "sissy bill" that would repeal it. The American Legion, through its representatives, says it wants the "red rider" and does not want the "sissy bill." The ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic say they want the "red rider" and do not want the "sissy bill." The District of Columbia Public School Association, embracing over 90 different organizations of citizens, says that it wants the "red rider" and does not want the "sissy bill."

That the House of Representatives is practically unanimous against the "red rider."

How does anyone know that? Such assertion is foolish. That will be decided by a vote. I offered to join the proponent of the "sissy bill" to ask the Speaker to allow him to call it up under suspension of rules that day, but he would not risk it. It is my firm belief that by an overwhelming vote the House will refuse to repeal the "red rider" and kill the "sissy bill"; but, until we vote, no one can speak with authority.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOOD NO. 12

That the District subcommittee hearings accorded all witnesses fair treatment and warranted the passage of the "sissy bill" and repeal of the "red rider."

The hearings show this subcommittee met on February 25, at 10:30 a. m., and adjourned at noon; that it next met on March 2, at 10:30 a. m., recessed at 12:30 to 2, and adjourned at 5:06; next met on March 9, at 10:30, recessed at 12:30 to 2:30, and adjourned at 4:45, hence altogether it devoted only 10 hours and 21 minutes to its entire hearings, while our Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations devoted 4 full hours to hearing Editor Robinson of the Scholastic, alone.

Chairman KENNEDY prefaced the hearings by saying:

Unless there is objection on the part of the subcommittee, we will hear from the proponents of the bill, but not from the opponents (p. 2).

Page 1 notes the presence of Congressmen KENNEDY, SCHULTE, and BREWSTER, members; and Mrs. CAROLINE O'DAY, and Messrs. SISSON and MAVERICK. The proponent stated he preferred not to make any statement at that time, though he (not on committee) was allowed to interrogate witnesses.

On the second day, besides committeemen, there was noted the presence of Congressmen SISSON, ELLENBOGEN, SCOTT, and MAVERICK. Both Mr. SISSON and Mr. ELLENBOGEN, not committeemen, were allowed to interrogate witnesses. Thus 58 printed pages were consumed in hearings before any opponent was heard, and I quote the following from the statement of Mrs. JENCKES, a Representative in Congress from Indiana:

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. * * * I charge as a Member of Congress that the Board of Education in the District of Columbia is unfit to administer the great responsibility of public trust which rests upon them.

I charge the Board of Education with deliberate neglect and inefficiency.

I charge the Board of Education of the District of Columbia with assuming a responsibility the parents of children attending the District's schools never intended them to assume nor will permit them to assume.

I charge the Board of Education with neglect in line of duty.

I charge the Board of Education with inefficency in the administration of the finances of the school system in our Nation's Capital.

I make these charges as a Member of Congress and as a member of the Subcommittee on Education of the District of Columbia Committee of the House of Representatives.

I ask my colleagues on this Subcommittee on Education not to be rushed or stampeded by the Board of Education into reporting this bill out of committee until I can place before you an official brief over my signature as a Member of Congress and as a member of this committee which will give you in detail specific references and proofs of the charges I make. There is no need for the "railroading" of this legislation.

Now, I desire to make a charge against the Board of Education of the District of Columbia as an American mother. I appeal to every mother in the District of Columbia and throughout the Nation to open your eyes, become informed concerning the indoctrination of communism in the public schools of our Nation's Capital as well as the schools throughout America.

As an American mother, I charge the Board of Education with deliberately betraying a public trust. I ask mothers to resent this with all the fury at their command. I ask mothers to investigate this horrible thing which the Board of Education has knowingly permitted to touch children in the schools in our Nation's Capital. I warn you, your children are in danger. I appeal to you mothers to arouse yourselves. The unpatriotic agencies who would make America a godless nation, the insidious agencies who would break down our American form of Government, who would nationalize women and children, who would tear down our churches and our cherished American institutions, are asking the Congress to make it easy to place in the hands of children of immature judgment information about communism. There is no need for this. Children of immature years are not capable of rejecting the vile philosophies of communism. In Washington, almost at the very doors of the Board of Education Building, exists a school, operated and maintained by the Communist Party, which takes up the instruction of communism where the Board of Education of the District of Columbia leaves off. This is a part of a Nation-wide movement to plant schools of communism operated by the Communists in close proximity to public schools. The existence of the School for Communism operated by the Communists is known to the Crime Prevention Bureau of the Washington Metropolitan Police Department.

The instruction course on communism which the Board of Education of the District of Columbia authorized as a preparatory course for the instruction course on communism given by the School of Communism operated by the Communists.

Although they were not members of the subcommittee, and Mrs. JENCKES was a member, both Mr. SISSON and Mr. ELLENBOGEN insisted on cross-examining the lady from Indiana, and I quote from page 61:

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. If the lady will permit me for a moment, the lady does not propose to file a brief and conclude the hearing with the filing of that brief because if the lady is given that privilege that surely would be a most unfair thing.

Mrs. JENCKES. They shall have every opportunity to answer that.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. When will you have that?

Mrs. JENCKES. I will have it by Wednesday. I would have had it with me if I had not been in bed all last week, and I was not prepared to come here this morning.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I would like to say to the lady that I for one shall object to any extension of remarks in this hearing because the members of the subcommittee should have an opportunity to interrogate the lady on the subject. I would like to ask the lady a few questions.

Mrs. JENCKES. Please refrain until you have had my statement.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. In regard to this statement, does the lady object to the members of the school board being appointed by the judiciary; why doesn't the lady charge the judiciary——

Mrs. JENCKES. The judiciary appointed the school board.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Does the lady intend to charge that the judges in the District of Columbia are secretly fostering communism?

Mrs. JENCKES. I am not making any charges in regard to the judges whatever.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I want to say to the lady that in my district in the State of Pennsylvania the members of the school board are appointed by the judges and the judges are elected by the people, whereas in the District of Columbia the judges are appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate, which is elected by the people. The method of the election of the school board by the judges was resorted to because it was thought that was the best method to keep politics out of our Board of Education, and if the lady desires to propose a different system in the District of Columbia, of course, that could be considered, but that is an indirect charge against the judges of the District of Columbia, and I think in her brief the lady should cover that question.

Now, I would like to ask the lady if she knows that that school of communism is attended by children or adults in the District of Columbia. Who is attending it?

Mrs. JENCKES. I do not know, Mr. ELLENBOGEN. This morning I am not strong enough to answer your question. I will have all that information in the brief, and I shall send you a copy at the same time I send it to the committee.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, before the lady leaves——

Mr. KENNEDY. I think she is not disposed to answer the question.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know whether I have any standing in this matter, but I will inquire of the chairman and will accept the ruling of the committee if I do have any right to ask the lady from Indiana any questions in regard to the wholesale charges she has just made here.

Then there was not another opponent heard until you get to page 104 of the printed hearings, when George E. Sullivan appeared for the Federation of Citizens' Associations. At the outstart here is the way he was circumscribed:

Mr. KENNEDY. Let me ask you a question, Mr. Sullivan. How long will it take you to conclude your statement?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I think it will take somewhere between 1 hour and 1 hour and a half. I will make it as concise as possible.

Mr. KENNEDY. We do not have that much time.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I am merely giving what is essential.

Mr. KENNEDY. I suggest that you make a briefer statement and file any statement which will take that amount of time in writing.

Mr. SHORT. We have very important matters to consider in the House. One matter is the impeachment of a United States Federal judge, and we will have to vote on that.

Mr. KENNEDY. See if you cannot conclude in 15 minutes.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I cannot possibly do so in 15 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Go ahead and get started.

Judge Sullivan was cross-examined not only by the committeemen but by Mr. ELLENBOGEN and Mr. SISSON, and the following will show a fair sample:

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. You are trying to tell us that the school board is not doing its job, but the passage of this law will not correct that situation, because you want to revamp the school board. You cannot expect Congress to check on the school board; that is not its function. Don't forget this is a National Legislature.

Mr. SULLIVAN. We don't forget it.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. As a matter of fact, we do not have any business as a matter of local procedure to interfere with the school board. If the school board is not properly constituted, you ought to oppose it.

Mr. SULLIVAN. We have facts to show that that rider was both necessary and warranted.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I understand you believe that.

Mr. KENNEDY. This book is used by the authority of whom?

Mr. SULLIVAN. On the recommendation of the superintendent with the authority of the Board of Education, who originally selected it.

Mr. KENNEDY. And subsequently it was prohibited; is that correct?

Mr. SULLIVAN. It was thrown out after 11 months.

Mr. KENNEDY. By whom?

Mr. SULLIVAN. By the Board of Education upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools.

Mr. KENNEDY. Assuming that you did not or you did have this rider to the appropriation bill, that action should have been taken regardless of that.

Mr. SULLIVAN. It should have been; but the point was that it would not have been.

Mr. KENNEDY. How do you know that?

Mr. SULLIVAN. We are showing you the facts upon which you can draw your own conclusion.

Mr. KENNEDY. Do you mean to contend that they prohibited this book after the so-called rider was placed on the appropriation bill?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Without the rider I think every person who studied this would be satisfied that that book would still be in, and it took Congress, the rider, plus the Comptroller General's action, plus the action and persistence of this federation, to get it out; and it only went out on the very day when we were demanding a hearing as to why we could not get a list of the textbooks used in the teachers' colleges.

I say those are the facts. We don't want to draw the conclusion, but we want to give you the facts so that each of you can draw your own conclusion.

Mr. SHORT. Can you tell us the number of teachers in Washington who are graduates or who attended the teachers' college at Columbia?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I could not give you the statistics.

Mr. SHORT. You do not know how many there are?

Mr. SULLIVAN. No.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Do you know whether this book is also in the other teachers' training colleges throughout the States?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have no means of knowing that. We have no funds or facilities. All we have is given you, what we have dug out at great trouble here.

Now, in connection with that, the fact is that they have done that, and the responsibility has not been fixed for the selection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. How can the teachers tell the truth unless they discuss Russia?

Mr. SULLIVAN. We have not objected to the mention of Russia or communism; we have not objected to the telling of the facts, but we object to their telling them falsehoods and deceiving them as to what are the facts there.

Mr. SCHULTE. Where do you base your views on that?

Mr. SULLIVAN. In these books [indicating].

Mr. SCHULTE. Do you know of any particular instance where a teacher was advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SULLIVAN. As I have said before, I am not touching the teachers, I have not been in the classrooms and watching them.

Mr. SCHULTE. You have heard of teachers teaching communism in the schools of Washington, have you not?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes; Senator KING has a letter from a Mrs. Dingley, who advised him that she had to withdraw her grandchild, and she is the daughter-in-law of Congressman Dingley. She advised Senator KING that she was compelled to withdraw her grandchild from the public schools and put her in the private schools because of the way other governments were being praised to the detriment of this country.

Mr. SCHULTE. How recent was that?

Mr. SULLIVAN. That letter was within the last 30 or 40 days.

Mr. SISSON. If I were in a court of law, I would object to that as a matter of pure hearsay.

Mr. SHORT. If you will permit me to state that Mr. Counts says in his book, Dare the School Build a New Social Order? on page 19 [reading]:

"My thesis is that complete impartiality is utterly impossible, that the school must shape attitudes, develop tastes, and even impose ideas."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Sullivan, are not these teachers already as employees of the Federal Government required to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Before this "red rider"?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Well, how does the "red rider" place upon them any higher allegiance than the oath to support the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I can answer that very readily; that oath of allegiance is a general oath to support and defend the Constitution. You cannot prosecute a person under that for some of the specific things here, such as the featuring of communism, describing it inaccurately and falsely to the pupils. You have got to make a showing which goes specifically to an attempt to overthrow our Government or our Constitution.

Mr. SISSON. It is not any more a general oath than my oath as a Member of Congress. That is specific. I am sworn.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Exactly.

Mr. SISSON. I am sworn to support the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SULLIVAN. So am I as a lawyer.

Mr. SISSON. What more do you want? Do you want them hanged and quartered? [Laughter.]

Mr. SULLIVAN. They are obeying the instructions of the Board of Education and the Superintendent of Schools to follow the teachers' method books and the textbooks and the study magazines with the pupils, and if they do it they do not tell the pupils the truth about communism; they tell them falsehoods about communism, and they are winning them to communism all the time.

Mr. SCHULTE. You are making a blanket indictment there. You say they are telling? They are not telling them the truth?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I say these do not give the truth.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Sullivan, you know the members of the school board?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I know some of them by sight.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. They are ladies and gentlemen of the highest reputation, aren't they?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I cannot undertake to pass on them one way or the other. I am not reflecting upon their standing.

No wonder, Mr. Speaker, that I received the following complaint:

FEDERATION OF CITIZENS' ASSOCIATIONS,
OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Re H. R. 11375—Sisson bill.
Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE BLANTON: While the proponents of the repeal bill were given the fullest opportunity, the proponents of the present law were limited, restricted, interrupted, and subjected to repeated harrassments and discourtesies such as I have never before witnessed. These harrassments and discourtesies were not only committed by members of the subcommittee, but also by others not on said subcommittee, notably Congressmen SISSON and ELLENBOGEN, who appeared to practically take charge of the hearing a large part of the time, and who seemed to consider it to be their function to insult those appearing in opposition to the repeal bill. The audience, which was composed largely of officers and teachers in the public schools, was encouraged by such harrassments and discourtesies so emanating from the committee table to supplement the same by noisy demonstrations in the hearing room against those opposing said repeal bill, and such demonstrations were openly led by the principal of a junior high school without any attempt by the subcommittee or the Superintendent of Schools to deal with such offenders.

It requires a rather wide stretch of the imagination to say that the opponents of the repeal bill were really given any hearing. I went to the trouble, on behalf of said federation, of carrying before said subcommittee textbooks, study magazines, etc., in order that said subcommittee might see for itself, in the precise setting and context, the antipatriotic, procommunistic, etc., matter which had been injected into the public schools here. I was not, however, permitted to make such presentation, the subcommittee stating that its time was too limited and then restricting me to the supplying of a written statement for the record covering the principal part of my subject matter. This was followed by the subcommittee, and also the main committee, reporting said repeal bill favorably in advance of the printing of the hearings, and, consequently, without any adequate opportunity for consideration of the matter submitted by me which the subcommittee refused to hear in its open session.

By reference to page 221 of said printed hearing you will see that Congressman SISSON expressly treated the Communist Party as on a par with the Democratic and Republican Parties, to which exception was taken by a Mr. AYERS, who said:

"I don't think the analogy is a good one. No good Democrat and no good Republican ever advocated the overthrow of this Government."

Those who are so solicitous about fairness to the Communist Party ought certainly to show a reasonable amount of fairness to this federation in this very matter in the public interest, if not justice to the federation itself.

Very truly yours, GEO. E. SULLIVAN,
Chairman, Special Committee of Federation of Citizens' Associations of the District of Columbia on Elimination of Antipatriotic, etc., Matter from Public Schools of the District of Columbia.

I have a letter, Mr. Speaker, from Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries stating that he was cross-examined, interrupted, heckled, and insulted until he was unable to make a connected statement. The following are a few of the questions:

Mr. SCHULTE. Do you believe in our form of government, General?

General FRIES. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. General, how many Communists are there?

General FRIES. Well, I never tried to count them.

Mr. SCHULTE. Do you believe any of the teachers in the public schools are Communists?

General FRIES. Well, I have reason to think so.

Mr. SCHULTE. Either answer "yes" or "no." Either the fellow is or he is not.

General FRIES. In my opinion, he is.

Mr. SCHULTE. Now, will you give the school board the name of that particular individual, so that he may be investigated?

General FRIES. Yes.

Mr. SCHULTE. And if you find that that is not true, you will certainly avail yourself of the opportunity to defend this particular individual?

General FRIES. Yes.

Mr. SCHULTE. It is just hearsay on your part?

General FRIES. No.

Mr. SCHULTE. Then as an American citizen you have not availed yourself of the opportunity, as an outstanding leader of the District of Columbia, to find out whether that fellow is teaching communism.

General FRIES. I took the matter up with the Superintendent of Schools in 1926 and asked about it.

Mr. SCHULTE. Nine years ago?

General FRIES. I believe that the School Board and the School Superintendent are responsible for the way the teachers are not furnished with the other side of the information on communism; that they are furnished with the "good side" of communism, if there be such.

Mr. SCHULTE. What do you mean by "if there be such"? Both sides of the story?

General FRIES. No; I say "if there be such"—any good side to communism.

Mr. SCHULTE. How many Communists are there in the District of Columbia?

General FRIES. I think perhaps the police department might give you some estimate of that number.

Mr. SCHULTE. Have you availed yourself of the opportunity to observe to see how many there are in the District?

General FRIES. No; I am not interested in the exact number in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SCHULTE. How do you feel about child labor?

General FRIES. I do not think it should be permitted.

Mr. SCHULTE. You believe in child labor?

General FRIES. No, sir; I am just as much opposed to hardships on children as any man living.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Have you read the books written by Karl Marx?

General FRIES. I have read a book entitled "The Manifesto."

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Have you read his books?

General FRIES. I have read parts of them.

Mr. ELLEBOGEN. Have you seen any part in his book where he talks about the nationalization of women?

General FRIES. Yes.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Which part?

General FRIES. You will find that, I think, probably on pages 28 and 29 of the particular copy that I have; and I will read you what I took from there on pages 18, 19, 28, 29, 30, and 31.

Mr. KENNEDY. Let me ask you, do you think Dr. Ballou is a proper man to head the public-schools system in the District of Columbia?

General FRIES. I think we could get a much better one.

Mr. KENNEDY. Do you think he is the right man for the position?

General FRIES. In my opinion, no.

Mr. SCHULTE. Do you believe in communism?

General FRIES. No, sir; I do not believe in giving autocratic power to any man.

Mr. SCHULTE. You are sure you do not lean toward the Communist idea?

General FRIES. If I ever thought so, I would bend myself back the other way.

Mr. SISSON. General, going back to the correspondence between Secretary of War Weeks and yourself with regard to child labor. You were at that time an acting commanding officer in the United States Army, were you not?

General FRIES. Yes, sir. That had nothing——

Mr. SISSON (interposing). Just a moment. Answer my question, please. And, as such, you lent yourself to the opposition to the abolition of child labor in this country, did you not?

General FRIES. I did not in connection with that chart at all.

Mr. SISSON. That is not what I am asking you about, the chart. You were opposed to the abolition of child labor, and you made statements to the effect that you were opposed to the abolition of child labor by the Federal Government?

CONCLUSION

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I hope and pray that whenever the "sissy bill", which seeks to repeal the law against communism, is taken up in the House that it will be snowed under by an overwhelming vote, in protection to the 99,000 school children in this Nation's Capital.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOEHNE, for 1 week, on account of official business.

To Mr. GRAY of Indiana, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, for several days, on account of illness in his family.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2286. An act providing for the allocation of net revenues of the Shoshone power plant of the Shoshone reclamation project in Wyoming; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 9244. An act providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida at Panama City, Fla.; and

H. R. 10193. An act to amend the act to fix the hours of duty of postal employees.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), in accordance with its order heretofore entered, the House adjourned until Monday, May 4, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 4, 1936

(Legislative day of Friday, Apr. 24, 1936)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, April 30, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 1432) to amend section 5 of the act of March 2, 1919, generally known as the War Minerals Relief Statutes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10193) to amend the act to fix the hours of duty of postal employees.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 231) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Swedes in Delaware, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8599) to provide for a change in the designation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, to create a marine casualty investigation board, and increase efficiency in administration of the steamboat inspection laws, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BLAND, Mr. SIROVICH, Mr. RAMSPECK, Mr. LEHLBACH, and Mr. WELCH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10267) to provide for adjusting the compensation of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, assistant superintendents at large, assistant superintendents in charge of car construction, chief clerks, assistant chief clerks, and clerks in charge of sections in offices of division superintendents in the Railway Mail Service, to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BURCH, Mr. HILDEBRANDT, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. DOUTRICH, and Mr. GOODWIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 11688. An act providing for a change in the design of the 50-cent pieces authorized to be coined in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Arkansas into the Union; and

H. R. 12527. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 9244. An act providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida at Panama City, Fla.; and

H. R. 10193. An act to amend the act to fix the hours of duty of postal employees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

OPINION OF SENATOR JOHNSON IN RITTER IMPEACHMENT CASE

Pursuant to the order entered on the calendar day of Thursday, April 16, 1936, allowing each Senator 4 days after final vote on the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, within which to file his individual opinion, the order having been modified subsequently to extent the time limit, the following opinion, signed by Mr. JOHNSON, was filed and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

MEMORANDUM OPINION OF HON. HIRAM W. JOHNSON IN THE MATTER OF THE IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

It is quite true that impeachment proceedings are cumbersome and archaic. The method of conducting them could readily be simplified, and without difficulty the procedure could be modernized. To create additional courts or to put within the jurisdiction of those now existing the impeachment of judicial officials or others would be of doubtful value, and the ills which we would suffer from such a change would likely be worse than those from which we would flee. A very cursory study of the provisions of the Constitution, in the light of the debates of our formative period, will demonstrate that there is scarcely a suggestion now made which wasn't presented when the Constitution was first written. We can read the hallowed words of the men who prepared the Constitution about the danger of a judicial oligarchy, we can observe the care with which finally they provided for the removal of recalcitrant officials, and in the light of the discussions then indulged, we may well conclude that the system prescribed and which now obtains is perhaps the best that could be devised. What faults exist in the mode we now have are not because of that mode but because those who are called upon to render judgment violate its spirit and with too little knowledge and study permit inadvertently the purpose of the Constitution to be submerged in their anxiety to construe as their unrestrained wills dictate. To me it is a dreadful thing, and one scarcely to be condoned, that men sit upon an impeachment court and subsequently vote guilty or not guilty, as the case may be, when they have heard little or none of the testimony and have seen few or any of the witnesses. And if Senators are unable to listen to the testimony and observe the demeanor of the witnesses, some rule should be devised under which, if they themselves would not voluntarily step aside they could be challenged upon the ultimate vote and be made to retire. Of course, to temporary and brief absences no such rule should apply, but how the iron must enter the soul of one upon whom Senators are passing judgment when he suddenly sees strangers to him whom he has not observed during the long impeachment trial, strangers, too, to the testimony that has been given, and who cannot possibly have observed the demeanor of witnesses, depriving him of what is more precious than life itself. If reforms of impeachment trials are to be discussed, I respectfully submit that instead of entrusting impeachment of a judge to judicial officers or newly created courts we reform the impeachers themselves and require substantially what is required in any jury trial—the attendance of those in whose hands the fate of a fellow human being is placed. Moreover, the mode of trial, including rules of evidence, should be definitely established, so that the trial may be judicial in character. This could be and should be determined in advance. These are but suggestions, of little consequence perhaps, but more important than establishing new tribunals.

There were seven counts in the articles of impeachment in the recent Ritter trial. Six of these counts were of definite and specific character, and the seventh a sort of résumé or catch-all of the six. Upon the first six counts Ritter was acquitted. Upon the seventh he was convicted by exactly the necessary two-thirds vote—56 to 28. Under ordinary circumstances such a decision would be wholly paradoxical, and in an ordinary proceeding, if appellate jurisdiction rested anywhere, it would be instantly set aside. It is very forcefully argued that a Federal judge who, under the Constitution, holds office during good behavior, may be impeached for misbehavior even though misbehavior is without definition and may rest entirely upon the mental whim or caprice of individual Senators. Perhaps this may be so, and it may be that the framers of the Constitution intended to leave the scope of the unknown offense of "misbehavior", although never mentioning it, as broad and illimitable as the minds of individual Senators. This might be doubted in so high an offense with a penalty which carries ignominy, shame, and disgrace and inflicts the severest mental anguish. But for argument's sake, conceding this hazy construction, it would seem to be stretching even the rule for which some distinguished Senators contend to unwarrantable lengths, when solemnly the Court has acquitted upon all the specific charges and then those same specific charges are utilized to justify conviction upon the loose generality of "misbehavior."

CONFUSION OF THOUGHT

The confusion of thought prevailing among Senators is evidenced by their varying expressions. One group eloquently argued any gift to a judge, under any circumstances, constituted misbehavior, for which he should be removed from office, and moreover that neither corrupt motive nor evil intent need be shown in the acceptance of a gift or in any so-called misbehavior. Another prefaced his opinion with the statement: "I do not take the view that an impeachment proceeding of a judge of the inferior Federal courts under the Constitution of the United States is a criminal proceeding. The Constitution itself has expressly denuded impeachment proceedings of every aspect or characteristic of a criminal proceeding."

And yet another flatly takes a contrary view, and states although finding the defendant guilty on the seventh count: "The procedure is criminal in its nature, for, upon conviction, requires the removal of a judge, which is the highest punishment that could be administered such an officer. The Senate, sitting as a Court, is required to conduct its proceedings and reach its decisions in accordance with the customs of our law. In all criminal cases the defendant comes into court enjoying the presumption of innocence, which presumption continues until he is proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt."

And again we find this: "Impeachment, though, must be considered as a criminal proceeding."

The foregoing quotations are made not in criticism of the makers, or even of their expressions, but to indicate the contrariety of opinion that existed among the members of the Court as to the character of the proceeding and the quantum of proof required. Indeed, the very able chief manager on the part of the House, Mr. SUMNERS, in his argument made perfectly plain his theory. He said: "When a judge on the bench, by his own conduct, arouses a substantial doubt as to his judicial integrity he commits the highest crime that a judge can commit under the Constitution. It is not essential to prove such conduct beyond a reasonable doubt. The doubt is the other way. Do I make that clear? There is nothing in the Constitution and nothing in the philosophy of a free government that holds that a man shall continue to occupy office until it can be established beyond a reasonable doubt that he is not fit for the office. It is the other way."

With such loose procedure, with a court, whose members are insisting upon wholly different views of the character of the proceeding and the measure of proof required, with absolutely divergent opinions of the meaning of a word not written in the Constitution, but interpolated for the purposes of the trial, it is not surprising the decision was reached in confusion and perplexity by utterly irreconcilable processes.

What a novel proposition if impeachment is a criminal proceeding, and if the presumption of innocence attaches to the respondent, and the proof against him must convince the Court beyond a reasonable doubt that neither evil intent, nor illegality, nor corruption need be either alleged or proved. And how much more novel and, indeed, startling that a respondent may be not guilty of every substantive charge brought against him and yet should be impeached.

A BRIEF RÉSUMÉ OF THE AUTHORITIES

Of course, it would be presumptuous for any humble member of the Impeachment Court to disagree with the few profound constitutional expounders of the Senate who hold the course pursued by the Senate to have been both logical and justified; but that the record may be preserved we may be pardoned a very brief examination of one or two of the few existing judicial constructions of impeachment proceedings.

The three provisions of the Constitution relating to impeachment are as follows:

Section 4, article II: "The President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors."

Section 3, article I: "Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall, nevertheless, be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law."

Section 1, article III: "The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, * * *."

It will be observed from these sections that there can be no impeachment save for treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

Endless has been the discussion as to what are "high crimes and misdemeanors." It will serve no useful purpose here to quote the various authorities and precedents holding the one way or the other. The respondent in this case upon the first six counts was tried for "high crimes and misdemeanors", criminal and penal in their character. Of these he was acquitted, but it is asserted, because the tenure of office of a judge is during good behavior, the causes of impeachment may be not only what the Constitution says, "Treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors", but also the antithesis of good behavior—misbehavior. Of course, if the judge were guilty of any of the specifications against him, which constituted "treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors", his punishment should have been the severest that could have been inflicted upon him; and yet, the Senate, after its paradoxical determination of his guilt for misbehavior when he had been acquitted of the very offenses constituting this misbehavior, unanimously voted to eliminate from the judgment the second portion of the penalty provided by the Constitution: "Disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit in the United States." We have, therefore, the singular picture here of the impeaching court solemnly acquitting the judge of all the substantive charges, then writing into the Constitution "misbehavior", or making that term synonomous with "misdemeanor", and just as solemnly holding him guilty under the generic and mystic term of "misbehavior" of the very matters upon which they had just said he was not guilty.

I would not be so bold as dogmatically to insist that the great constitutional expounders of the Senate wholly erred in their construction of the Constitution; but the proposition that the discretion vested in the Senate in impeachment proceedings is absolute and unrestrained I cannot for an instant subscribe to. It would be a sad travesty, a reflection upon the founders of the Constitution, and a denial, in some instances, of justice itself, if in a case of transcendant importance, caprice, prejudice, or the untrammeled will of the judges held sway and our usual boasted safeguards of the law were denied. I challenge the production of any case of impeachment, either of judge or inferior official, where an acquittal of all the charges separately was transmuted into a shotgun decision of guilty upon some of them collectively. In this case presumably those voting guilty on the seventh count held the reasonable and probable consequences of the actions of Ritter specified in the charges on which they acquitted him, brought his court into scandal and disrepute "to the prejudice of said court and public confidence in the administration of justice therein and to the prejudice of public respect for and confidence in the Federal judiciary and to render him unfit to continue to serve as such judge." There was not one word of testimony upon scandal or disrepute, lack of public confidence, or the prejudice of public respect for and confidence in the Federal judiciary in all the days of the trial, and not a single witness testified to a single thing of that kind or character. All of the evidence was, indeed, to the contrary; and while a division existed as to the specific acts, the conduct of Ritter's court as high, decorous, and efficient was nowhere denied; and the years through which he served, save for these specific instances, no human being questions.

The very lapse of time since the occurrence of the acts asserted against him negatives the allegations of the seventh count, and during the period subsequent to the alleged misconduct the record shows affirmatively not only that he had the confidence of his fellow member of the Federal judiciary but that he had before him some thousands of cases and proceedings of which there is not even the suggestion of a complaint by litigant or lawyer. When we recall that the specific charges related to a time many years before the impeachment proceedings, and the period and character of his services upon the bench, that no witness questions, his acquittal by the Senate of the long-ago specified acts, it almost passes comprehension that the verdict recorded in this case should have been rendered.

Who accurately can describe misbehavior? Supposititious cases, revolting in character, may perhaps be conjured up by a vivid imagination, but it is sufficient answer to say there are no such instances in the Ritter case.

To the differing minds of 96 senatorial judges what might be held as misbehavior by some would seem wholly unsubstantial and trivial to others. Less than 5 years ago, if it could have been proven in an impeachment proceeding that a judge served wine upon his table, or committed the egregious sin of sipping a cocktail before his dinner, a large number of our people, perhaps a majority, would have thought him guilty of the grossest misbehavior, which should have condemned him to the most condign punishment. Some in this case boldly and emphatically proclaim, as has been stated, that a judge who received a gift of any kind, under any circumstances, should immediately be impeached. It requires neither fertility of imagination nor facility of expression to suggest innumerable acts which, to some of us, would seem wholly innocent but concerning which others would shake their heads in sorrowful negation and darkly say, in their self-righteous intensity to protect the morals of all the rest of us, that there had been misbehavior which should instantly remove from office the guilty one.

Misbehavior may be akin to maladministration, and some light is shed upon the constitutional provision by the proceedings and debates during the adoption of that great instrument. We have in his work upon the Constitution by Mr. Foster, beginning at page 508, the following of the Constitutional Convention proceedings upon impeachment:

"8. The clause referring to the Senate the trial of impeachments against the President for treason and bribery was taken up.

"'Colonel MASON. Why is the provision restrained to treason and bribery only? Treason, as defined by the Constitution, will not reach many great and dangerous offenses. Hastings is not guilty of treason. Attempts to subvert the Constitution may not be treason, as above defined. As bills of attainder, which have saved the British Constitution, are forbidden, it is the more necessary to extend the power of impeachments. He moved to add after "bribery", "or maladministration." Mr. Gerry seconded him.

"'Mr. MADISON. So vague a term will be equivalent to a tenure during the pleasure of the Senate.

"'Mr. GOUVERNEUR MORRIS. It will not be put in force and can do no harm. An election of every 4 years will prevent maladministration.

"'Colonel Mason withdrew "maladministration" and substituted "other high crimes and misdemeanors against the state."'"

The objection of Mr. Madison to Colonel Mason's word "maladministration" is singularly apt here because of the arguments that are made about the tenure of office of a Federal judge. Maladministration was designated by Mr. Madison as vague, and its use, he said, would be equivalent to a tenure of office during the pleasure of the Senate. What could be more vague than "misbehavior"? In the text of Foster, page 510, we find related the discussion concerning the constitutional provision:

"A short discussion took place as to what should constitute an impeachable offense. The first definition was malpractice or neglect of duty.' The report of the committee on detail said that the President might be removed on impeachment and conviction 'of treason, bribery, or corruption.' When the report was discussed. Colonel Mason first moved to insert, after 'bribery', 'or maladministration'; then substituted 'other high crimes and misdemeanors against the state'; and finally 'United States' for 'state', in which form his amendment was adopted. A similar provision as to the impeachment of other officers was added. The committee on style dropped the words 'against the United States.' Their report in this respect passed without criticism."

There will be found quoted, section 89, page 512, of Foster, the reasons for trial of impeachment by the Senate in the language of Hamilton, Story, and Rawle. This may be interesting to the gentlemen who want to change the method. But the quotation is made from the proceedings of the Convention to indicate that the very vague and indefinite term so beloved by impeachers was apparently in the minds of the framers of the Constitution when that document was written, and the idea of the tenure of judges at the pleasure of the Senate, so ably argued by some today, was rejected by our forefathers.

Judge Story, in his monumental work on the Constitution, thus states:

"It would be a most extraordinary anomaly that while every citizen of every State originally composing the Union would be entitled to the common law as his birthright, and at once his protector and guide, as a citizen of the Union, or an officer of the Union, he would be subjected to no law, to no principles, to no rules of evidence. It is the boast of English jurisprudence, and without it the power of impeachment would be an intolerable grievance, that in trials by impeachment the law differs not in essentials from criminal prosecutions before inferior courts. The same rules of evidence, the same legal notions of crimes and punishments prevail" (Story on the Constitution, fifth edition, p. 582).

Whatever may be said of the attitude or the views of those who laid such stress upon misbehavior, it is clear from the record that upon the seventh count, which it was claimed came within that category, Ritter was "subjected to no law, to no principles, to no rules of evidence." He was judged, not by the essentials of the law but by the varying contradictory and irreconcilable theories of the individuals, each a law unto himself.

Senator Davis, in Johnson's impeachment, scathingly answered the suggestion that the Senate was absolute and restrained by no judicial rules thus:

"But the position that the Senate, when trying an impeachment, is a law to itself, is bound by no law, may decide the case as it wills, is illimitable and absolute in the performance of certain restricted judicial fuctions, in a limited government, is revoltingly absurd."

In State v. Hastings (55 N. W., p. 780) is a very able discussion of the words of the Constitution, "high crimes and misdemeanors." The conclusion of the Court was as follows:

"It may be safely asserted that where the act of official delinquency consists in the violation of some provision of the Constitution or statute which, if denounced as a crime or misdemeanor, or where it is a mere neglect of duty, willfully done, with a corrupt intention, or where the negligence is so gross, and the disregard of duty so flagrant, as to warrant the inference that it was willful and corrupt, it is within the definition of a misdemeanor in office. But where it consists of a mere error of judgment, or omission of duty, without the element of fraud, and where the negligence is attributable to a misconception of duty, rather than a willful disregard thereof, it is not impeachable, although it may be highly prejudicial to the interests of the State."

It is obvious from this and other authorities that an act, even of misbehavior, to constitute an impeachable offense must be willfully done with a corrupt intention. To hold otherwise would mean that every decision of a court must meet with universal favor, that judicial discretion would be destroyed, and that it would be quite sufficient ground of impeachment that any decision which roused the passion of any litigant, who could gather to himself adherents, would at once subject the judge to the horror and the ignominy of trial; and if enough of the Senate agreed with the disappointed litigant concerning the decision, conviction and ouster from office. As the Nebraska court well says, a mere error of judgment or omission of duty without the element of fraud is not impeachable, "although it may be highly prejudicial to the interests of the State."

In a well-considered Alabama case, after the quotation of authorities, it is said: "The authorities above hold that removal from office and disqualification to hold office are criminal punishment, but the doctrine has been carried much further"; and then, after other quotations, says: "We feel constrained to hold that impeachment under our Constitution is a criminal prosecution."

I cannot refrain from quoting, upon the character of the proceeding and the quantum of proof required to warrant conviction, the case already referred to, State v. Hastings (55 N. W. Reporter, p. 781). I commend this to the consciences of those who claim for the Senate in impeachment unlimited discretion and a freedom from all law and judicial concepts. The learned court in the Hastings case said:

"Another question which is suggested in this connection is the character of this proceeding, viz, whether it is to be regarded as a civic action or as a criminal prosecution for the purpose of the production and the quantum of proof to warrant a conviction. It may be safely asserted that the decided weight of authority in this country and England—if, indeed, there exists a diversity of opinion on the subject—is that impeachment in that respect must be classed as a criminal prosecution, in which the state is required to establish the essential elements of the charge beyond a reasonable doubt. Blackstone (4 Comm. 259) thus defines the proceeding: 'But an impeachment before the Lords by the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament is a prosecution of the already known and established law, and has been frequently put in practice, being a presentment to the most high and supreme court of criminal jurisdiction by the most solemn grand interest of the whole kingdom.' In the impeachment of Belknap, Senator Wright used the following language: 'Because it does not satisfy me upon this point beyond a reasonable doubt, and because it is quite wanting in everything like directness and force, * * * I feel bound to vote "Not guilty."' Language of similar import was used by Senators Christiancy, Booth, Oglesby, and others. But we are fortunately not without judicial authority on the subject. In the impeachment of Barnard (1872) the judges of the court of appeals of New York sat with the senators, and appear to have been consulted upon all doubtful questions. Chief Justice Church (p. 2070), speaking upon the subject under consideration, said: 'If I felt warranted in balancing the evidence and in determining that question in a civil action, I might come to the conclusion that the evidence of payment was not reliable; but we are here in a criminal case, where the respondent is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt, both upon the facts and the law, and I cannot say that the evidence which has been produced is not sufficient to create some doubt.' Judge Andrew (p. 2071) said: 'I shall vote "Not guilty" upon this article, upon the principle that this defendant is entitled to every reasonable doubt, and that that doubt as to his guilt, according to the charge, exists in my mind upon the evidence in the case.' Like views were expressed by other judges, but there was no dissent from the opinions above quoted. And, in State v. Buckley (54 Ala. 599), impeachment is defined as a criminal proceeding without the right of trial by jury. It is not alone in form, but also in substance, a criminal prosecution. As said by Senator Sargent in Belknap's case (p. 87): 'A sentence of disqualification is a humiliating badge affixed to high crimes and misdemeanors in office.' While we have in this country no technical attainder working a corruption of blood, the sentence of disqualification to hold or enjoy any office of honor, profit, or trust which is provided by our Constitution in case of conviction by impeachment is within the primary definition of the term. It is the extinction of civil rghts and capacities; a mark of infamy by means of which the offender becomes attinctus or blackened (Rap. & L. Dict., tit. 'Attainder'; 1 Bish. Crim. Law, 966, 970, and notes). The allegation that the respondents acted willfully and corruptly being without support, it follows that there is a failure of proof with respect to specification no. 3."

The case of Barnard referred to was the impeachment of a judge under the procedure of the State of New York.

There are many authorities other than what have been cited; but those herein referred to, with the later Nebraska cases following State v. Hasings, the Alabama cases, the cases in Kansas, Utah, and Texas, which are fet forth in the brief of Senator AUSTIN, sufficiently state what should be the procedure and the rule in impeachment proceedings. In Andrews v. King (77 Maine, 235) a question somewhat akin to that in the instant case arose, and the reasoning of the Maine court would seem to be apt upon the six acquittals by the Senate and the subsequent vote of guilty upon those acquittals. It is but fair that the case of Judge Archbald, who was impeached by the Senate, and in which there was a blanket count somewhat similar to that in the case of Judge Ritter, should be cited here in order that the student of impeachment and the procedure thereon may be fully informed. A very able article by Mr. Wrisley Brown, who was special assistant to the Attorney General and conducted the original investigation, may be found in Twenty-sixth Harvard Law Review, page 684. The position taken by Mr. Brown is not different from that which some members of the impeachment court took in relation to the seventh count in the case of Judge Ritter. Archbald was convicted upon the blanket count, but it may be remarked that he was convicted by an overwhelming vote on the first, third, fourth, and fifth articles of impeachment. The difference in the two cases, therefore, will be obvious; and while it may be asserted that there is no difference in principle, the fact that on numerous counts Archbald was convicted, then upon the final count, which restated his offenses, was likewise convicted, presents a very different picture from the Ritter case, where there was acquittal upon all counts where there were substantive charges.

CONCLUSION

I have refrained from a detailed discussion of the evidence because upon the charges that were factual, as set forth in the first six counts, Judge Ritter was found "not guilty", and, of course, logically it follows from his acquittal that the number of Senators required to impeach were not convinced they were proven. A word or two, however, may not be amiss concerning some incidents which were stressed during the trial. The gravamen of the charge against the judge, stripped of all incidental matters, was that he had deliberately conspired to allow an extravagant and exorbitant fee to his former partner and had been given by that partner of that fee $5,000. He insisted that when he and his partner separated after his appointment to the bench he sold his interest in the firm for that sum, and that an honest debt existed, which had been liquidated by its payment to him. To an ordinary man weighing the testimony it would seem infinitely more probable that the judge's interest in the partnership had been sold for that sum rather than the judge had sold his soul and jeopardized his entire career by the acceptance of that paltry amount out of fees aggregating $90,000. The facts in the case as to the fees demonstrate that when first an allowance was to be made, the judge, with meticulous care, addressed a letter to a fellow Federal judge asking him to preside and award what sum was deemed appropriate.

Certainly his conduct at that time has the approval of all. Subsequently, another allowance for attorneys' fees was presented in the pending proceeding. The judge declined to act upon the decree then presented to him in the litigation or the allowance of attorneys' fees, until every interest involved, however conflicting, and every attorney, and there were many in the case, in writing, agreed, both to the decree and to the allowance of attorneys' fees, and it was then that Judge Ritter signed the decree and made the allowance of $75,000 to his former partner, out of which, it was understood, all the attorneys in the case were to be compensated. A consent decree under the circumstances that we detail is by no means unusual in our court procedure, and with the litigants and all the attorneys consenting, and consenting in writing, a corrupt act on the part of the judge can scarcely be predicated. With the conspiracy and corruption charges disposed of there is little that remains to warrant any verdict of impeachment.

If we are to be guided by the law and to decide judicially, the acquittal of the charges of conspiracy and corruption should be sufficient to warrant upon the whole bill of impeachment a verdict of not guilty. And let it ever be remembered the wrongdoing, the illegality, and the corruption were alleged to have occurred in 1929 and 1930 in reality. Judge Ritter sat upon his bench until 1936. In that time the evidence shows 7,000 proceedings and cases were before him, and during that period the evidence does not show complaint of any character nor a single attempt to disqualify him, nor even dissatisfaction of any kind regarding his character nor of him personally. It passes belief how it could be held that a court against which there was neither complaint nor accusation for many years in past, concerning which no witness suggested scandal or disrepute, where none claimed public confidence in the administration of justice or public respect for the judiciary had been prejudiced, and where there was not an atom of evidence in respect to any of these allegations could be found by a verdict of impeachment afflicted with all.

It must not be overlooked, even by the most suspicious, that after all, the high Court of Impeachment is a court bound by rules of evidence and judicial decision. It is not a haphazard tribunal to be swayed by suspicion or moved by vengeance. While not, of course, criticizing my brethren for the decision, which, undoubtedly, they conscientiously rendered, I could not go their way. I would not have branded the most inconspicuous citizen nor the most contemptible or detestable individual upon the evidence as I saw it. I voted, therefore, "not guilty", and the brief lapse of time since the verdict has confirmed me in the justice of my decision.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Commissioners of the town of West New York, N. Y., requesting a full and complete investigation of the administration of the W. P. A. as it affects West New York, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the city commission of the city of Phoenix, Ariz., favoring the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Ellenbogen low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the State Bar of Nevada, favoring the enactment of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 237) for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution of the New York (N. Y.) Adult Blind Aid Association, Inc., praying for the enactment of House bill 7122, providing for pensions to blind persons who are 21 years of age and upward, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the Syracuse Housing Authority, of Syracuse; the Municipal Housing Authorities of the State of New York; the Consolidated Tenants' League of New York City; and the congregation of the Good Shepherd Presbyterian Church, of New York City, all in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 4424, the so-called Wagner low-cost housing bill, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of the New York Commandery, Naval and Military Order of the Spanish War, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 4011, relating to the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the National Commandery, Naval and Military Order of the Spanish-American War, praying for the enactment of Senate bill 4011, relating to the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented the memorial of R. S. Beatty Lodge, No. 910, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, of Buffalo, N. Y., remonstrating against the alleged usurpation by the United States Supreme Court of powers granted to Congress, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Riverdale Branch (N. Y.) American League Against War and Fascism, protesting against the passage of legislation to suppress attempts to incite disobedience of orders by the enlisted forces of the Army and Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by students of James Madison High School, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring reduction in armaments, the principle of arbitration, and international economic agreements, and protesting against war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by John Reed Branch 514, I. W. O., of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the passage of the so-called workers' social-insurance bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local No. 44, United Upholsterers' Union, of New York, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to create a court of appeals for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented the petition of the Larchmont (N. Y.) League of Women Voters, praying for the enactment of legislation to place all first-, second-, and third-class postal officials under the classified civil service, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Executive Board of the American Newspaper Guild, of New York City, favoring the continuation of Federal art projects under the Works Progress Administration, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Student Council of the Adult Educational Courses, of New York City, favoring the continuation of adult education under the Works Progress Administration on a permanent basis, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying for the enactment of House bill 7122, providing pensions to blind persons who are 21 years of age and upward, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

IMPROVEMENT OF HOUSING CONDITIONS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred, two resolutions, one adopted by the Housing Authority of the city of Syracuse, N. Y., and the other by the Board of Public Land Commissioners of the City of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the enactment of housing legislation, being Senate bill 4424, introduced by me.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there are now before the Congress of the United States a bill introduced by Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, of New York (Senate bill No. 4424), and an identical bill introduced by Congressman HENRY ELLENBOGEN, of Pennsylvania (H. R. 12124); and

Whereas the Syracuse Housing Authority considers that the above bills constitute a constructive step toward the realization of a program of improvement of housing conditions in the United States: Be it

Resolved, That Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, of New York, Congressman CLARENCE E. HANCOCK, of the Thirty-fifth Congressional District, as Representatives of the territory served by the Syracuse Housing Authority in the Congress of the United States, are requested to give the above-mentioned bills their favorable consideration and support; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. Senator WAGNER and to Congressman HENRY ELLENBOGEN.

CITY OF MILWAUKEE,
BOARD OF PUBLIC LAND COMMISSIONERS,
April 30, 1936.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: At a regular meeting of the Board of Public Land Commissioners, which board functions as the Milwaukee Housing Authority, held April 29, 1936, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas housing conditions in slum and blighted areas of urban centers are a recognized economic and social detriment to community life; and

"Whereas the tenants in such housing districts are forced to live in these intolerable conditions because private enterprise cannot and will not provide low-rent housing facilities; and

"Whereas it is necessary for the Government to bear a certain portion of the burden of financing the clearance of slums and the construction of low-rent housing if these conditions are to be eliminated: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Board of Public Land Commissioners (Milwaukee Housing Authority) endorses a bill introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER, United States Senator from New York, and in the House of Representatives by the Honorable HENRY ELLENBOGEN, Congressman from Pennsylvania, which reads as follows:

" 'A bill to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the development of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.'

"Be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Senator Robert M. La Follette, Jr., Senator F. Ryan Duffy, Senator Robert F. Wagner, Congressman Raymond J. Cannon, Congressman Thomas O'Malley, and Congressman Henry Ellenbogen."

REFUND OF CERTAIN PROCESSING TAXES

Mr. OVERTON presented a resolution adopted by the New Orleans (La.) Flour Club, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Agricultural Adjustment Act of the United States was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States on January 6, 1936; and

Whereas by a further order of the Supreme Court of the United States the millers were refunded all impounded process taxes accumulated from about June 1, 1935, until January 6, 1936; and

Whereas the bakers and macaroni manufacturers in the State of Louisiana and vicinity absorbed the process tax and did not pass it on to the consumer, which fact can be easily proved; and

Whereas the bakers of the State of Louisiana have suffered in a business way more than any other class of business, and are urgently in need of the process taxes which they paid and absorbed from June 1, 1935, until January 6, 1936, and which they are rightfully and legally entitled to; and

Whereas the flour millers operating in the United States have failed and/or refused to refund to bakers the process taxes collected by said millers from June 1, 1935, until January 6, 1936, and they further refuse to commit themselves in any manner with regard to refunding these taxes to the bakers and macaroni manufacturers: Be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be petitioned and urged to enact some legislation which will force and compel the flour millers of the United States to return and refund to the bakers and macaroni manufacturers of the State of Louisiana, and of other States, the process taxes which they received and collected and now have in hand and which accumulated during the period commencing about June 1, 1935, and ending January 6, 1936, to the end that the bakers and macaroni manufacturers, who absorbed said tax, shall be reimbursed the millions of dollars which they have paid, and which funds are now in the hands of the flour millers of the United States.

Whereas the Congress of the United States is now in the process of enacting a revenue bill, including a "windfall" tax, in an effort to recapture process taxes on flour and other commodities, which were impounded through injunctions by the various flour millers and returned to them by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States declaring the Agricultural Adjustment Act to be unconstitutional; and

Whereas the revenue act as now proposed fails to protect brokers, jobbers, wholesalers, bakers, and macaroni manufacturers with respect to floor taxes on merchandise in the possession of these merchants at the time said act was declared unconstitutional; that said protection is ineffective without a proper appropriation to cover refund of floor taxes to said merchants: Be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is hereby petitioned to amend its present revenue act containing the "windfall" taxes in order that proper provision be made to return to the brokers, jobbers, wholesalers, bakers, and macaroni manufacturers the floor tax on flour in their possession on January 6, 1936, and that a proper appropriation be stipulated in said revenue bill to properly refund the floor tax to said merchants.

INVESTIGATION OF COSTS OF CANVAS RUBBER-SOLED AND WATERPROOF FOOTWEAR

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred copy of a letter, together with a memorandum, addressed to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee by the chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, in response to Senate Resolution 283, which I submitted and which directs the Tariff Commission to investigate, under sections 332 and 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, differences in costs of production in the United States and in the Philippine Islands of all types of "canvas rubber-soled footwear and waterproof footwear."

There being no objection, the letter and memorandum were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, April 27, 1936.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: I have your letter of April 18, enclosing a copy of Senate Resolution 283, which directs the Tariff Commission to investigate, under sections 332 and 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, difference in costs of production in the United States and in the Philippine Islands of all types of "canvas rubber-soled footwear and waterproof footwear."

In response to your request, I have had incorporated in a memorandum, which I am enclosing, pertinent information with respect to the footwear covered by the resolution.

It has been held, for the purposes of section 336, that production costs in the Philippine Islands cannot be taken into consideration in adjusting rates of duty. Furthermore, all footwear and other articles wholly produced in the Philippine Islands and all products of those islands which do not contain foreign materials to the value of more than 20 percent of their total value are entitled to free entry when coming therefrom to the United States. Dutiable canvas rubber-soled and waterproof footwear was the subject of an investigation under section 336, as a result of which the duties were increased the maximum amount permissible under the law. Another investigation under that section with respect to these products could result only in confirming or reducing the present duties on them.

There have been no shipments into the United States from the Philippine Islands of the types of footwear covered in the resolution. Therefore, an investigation under section 332 does not appear warranted upon the basis of present conditions, nor is it believed that an investigation could be justified on the basis of probable future developments. Furthermore, any action at this time would involve possible conflict with the obligations implied in the Philippine Independence Act.

It therefore appears that an investigation under section 336 looking toward an increase in the rate of duty on this footwear would not be possible and that an investigation under section 332 at this time could serve no useful purpose.

Very sincerely yours,

ROBERT L. O'BRIEN, Chairman.

MEMORANDUM REGARDING SENATE RESOLUTION 283, SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, April 23, 1936.

Senate Resolution 283, now pending before the Finance Committee, provides for investigation by the Tariff Commission, under sections 332 and 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, of the differences in costs of production of "all types of canvas rubber-soled footwear and waterproof footwear" in the United States and in the Philippines.

The basis of assessing duties on footwear of this type was changed from foreign value to American selling price by Presidential proclamation (effective Mar. 3, 1933) following an investigation by the Tariff Commission under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930. The effect of the proclamation was to increase, by the maximum allowed by law, the duties on imported canvas rubber-soled footwear and all kinds of waterproof footwear in chief value of rubber.

Official statistics show that the Philippines shipped no footwear of the types covered by the resolution to the United States in 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, and the first two months of 1936, and that exports of these products from the islands to other countries are negligible.

On the other hand, the attached table shows that shipments of rubber footwear from the United States to the Philippines amounted to 1,503,000 pairs, valued at $1,171,000 in 1929, to 14,000 pairs, valued at $10,000 in 1932, and to 278,000 pairs, valued at $121,000 in 1935. The great bulk of these exports consisted of canvas rubber-soled footwear.

According to data obtained from the Department of Commerce there is a small production of canvas rubber-soled footwear in the Philippines, which probably amounted to around 1,500,000 pairs in 1935. There is also some all-rubber footwear produced in the islands, but the output of this type amounts to considerably less than the output of canvas rubber-soled footwear. Since the Philippines receive substantial quantities of rubber footwear from the United States and other countries and exports only negligible quantities, it is apparent that the production in the islands falls considerably short of supplying the local consumption.

Production of canvas rubber-soled footwear in the United States in 1933, the last year for which statistics are available, amounted to over 26,000,000 pairs and the production of other rubber footwear amounted to 34,000,000 pairs.

Information obtained from the Department of Commerce indicates that there are four small companies in the Philippines manufacturing rubber footwear (both canvas rubber-soled and all rubber). Almost all the rubber used by three of the companies is produced in the Philippines; the fourth company uses some Philippine rubber but also uses ready-made rubber soles imported from Japan. The canvas used for uppers by all the companies comes chiefly from Japan, most of it cut and some of it sewn, ready to be attached to the soles. The flannel comes from Japan and the laces from Japan and China, while small findings come mainly from the United States.

As already stated, the bill as now drawn directs the Tariff Commission to make investigations of differences in costs of production of "canvas rubber-soled footwear and waterproof footwear" under sections 332 and 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930. It should be pointed out, however, that the Tariff Commission would have no authority (aside from the legal status of the islands as part of the United States) to investigate these products with the object of increasing the duty under section 336 for the following reasons: (1) Footwear made in the Philippines, containing not less than 80 percent (by value) of materials, the growth or product of the Philippine Islands or of the United States, is accorded free entry under the provisions of section 301 of the Tariff Act of 1930, and section 336 does not apply to products now on the free list; and (2) the duty on rubber footwear from the Philippines not meeting the 80-percent requirements would be dutiable, if entered, on the same basis as imports from foreign countries and, as indicated above, the duty has been increased by the maximum allowed by law as the result of a previous investigation under section 336; therefore, further action under this section could only result in confirming or decreasing the present duties.

In an investigation of costs of production in the United States and in the Philippines under section 332, the lack of receipts from those islands would prevent the Commission from following the procedure, otherwise open to it, of using invoice prices or values as evidence of foreign costs. It would be necessary, therefore, for the Commission to send experts to the Philippines for the purpose of such an investigation which would involve considerable time and expense. It should also be pointed out that owing to the much lower quality of the Philippine product, as compared with the footwear produced in the United States, it is doubtful whether satisfactory cost comparisons could be made.

No opinion is herein expressed regarding possible conflict between Senate Resolution 283 and obligations which may be implied from the Philippine Independence Act.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL POLICIES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred, a letter addressed to me jointly by John G. Paine, chairman, management group, and William Green, chairman, labor group, the Council for Industrial Progress, embodying the specific recommendations made to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor by the Committee on National Industrial Policy.

The recommendations relate to production control, hours and wages, trade practices, and permanent advisory council.

Seven interesting and valuable reports submitted by seven different committees were made to the council, namely:

Report of the committee on national industrial policy;

Report of the committee on maximum work week, general wage, and child labor;

Report of the minority management group of the council for industrial progress dissenting from the adopted report of the committee of the council regarding maximum work week, child labor, and wages;

Report of the committee on fair trade practices;

Progress report of the committee on internal and external competition (Pt. I: Internal Competition);

Report of the committee on internal and external competition (Pt. II: External Competition);

Report of the committee on antitrust laws (including the Federal Trade Commission Act);

Report of the committee on financial aid to small enterprise; and

Report of the committee on Government competition with private enterprise.

These reports, together with council resolutions, resolution of the United Mine Workers of America, letter from the American Federation of Labor, resolution of the National Association of Tobacco Distributors, Inc., were adopted by the council in session on March 12, 1936, and were submitted to the President.

In connection with the specific recommendations referred to, I request that there be printed also in the RECORD report of the committee on maximum workweek, general wage, and child labor, report of the minority management group of the council for industrial progress dissenting from the adopted report of the committee of the council regarding maximum workweek, child labor, and wages.

There being no objection, the letter and the reports were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COORDINATOR FOR INDUSTRIAL COOPERATION,
Washington, D. C., April 8, 1936.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: The Council for Industrial Progress, at its meeting on March 12, 1936, unanimously approved the report of its committee on national industrial policy. It is felt desirable to invite the attention of the members of the Committee on Education and Labor to the specific recommendations because of the possibility that legislation upon some of these matters might be proposed. The recommendations are as follows:

"Production control: The committee declares its belief in an economy of abundance and therefore considers unwise and ineffective any attempt to solve unemployment by the limitation of production, whether imposed by Government or accomplished through voluntary agreements in industry. The committee recognizes the need, under emergency conditions, of instituting production control when that may be necessary to prevent the destruction of socially useful values.

"Hours and wages: While recognizing the need to maintain the respective fields of State and Federal authority, the committee advocates the policy of a minimum wage in industry and the payment of substantial overtime rates for hours worked in excess of a reasonable workweek, believing this to be an advisable national policy tending to increase the purchasing power of wage earners, and make for reemployment in an age of continuous technological improvement.

"Trade practices: The committee believes that our national industrial policy should give proper recognition to the need for curbing those unfair competitive practices which are destructive of the public interest in the maintenance of a free and open market for the sale and distribution of goods.

"Permanent advisory council: The committee believes there should be instituted by the National Government a continuing study of the national income, the source from which it springs, the channels through which it flows, the uses to which it is put, and the forces which cause it to periodically form and freeze into vast pools of disuse, causing the stagnation and paralysis of industry and bringing unemployment and suffering to the people."

Very truly yours,

JOHN G. PAINE,
Chairman, Management Group.
WILLIAM GREEN,
Chairman, Labor Group.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON MAXIMUM WORKWEEK, GENERAL WAGE, AND CHILD LABOR, AS ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL FOR INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS MARCH 12, 1936

To the Council for Industrial Progress:

Your committee was directed to make a study of—

1. The effect upon the free flow of commerce of free competition in the three major subjects of productive processes in industry, namely, wages, hours, and child labor, by those engaged in and who compete in interstate commerce.

2. The effect upon the economic stability and purchasing power of the Nation of free competition within and between the several States in the three major productive processes in industry, namely, wages, hours, and child labor.

3. The effect upon the free flow of commerce from the free competition within and between the several States created by a minority of industry, (a) where labor is paid wages below the concept of American living standards, (b) where the hours worked in a factory are much in excess of the hours prevailing in a given industry, (c) where a minority in an industry operate to the disadvantage of the rest of the industry because of local low age child-labor requirements.

4. The effect of substitution of noncompetition from free competition in the three major productive processes, to wit, wages, hours, and child labor, in order to create competitive equality between manufacturers who compete within and between the several States, by establishing a minimum wage, a maximum-hour week, and by regulating child labor.

Your committee, dealing with the general subject of wages, maximum workweek, and child labor submits for the consideration of the council our recommendations and conclusions based on findings after due consideration.

The flow of raw materials, supplies, and products of industry within and between the several States of the United States constitutes a continuous stream of commerce.

Employment and wages of labor are vital factors contributing to the economic stability and purchasing power of our Nation.

While your committee in its recommendations deals specifically with minimum wages, it feels called upon to state that general wages should have a sound foundation above which employees should, through initiative, ability, training, and organization, be able to individually or collectively obtain wages commensurate with their worth.

Accordingly, it is the opinion of the committee that findings and considerations of the problems assigned to this committee justify the following conclusions:

That wages of labor constitute a vital factor of the national income.

That wages are a major factor, in the productive processes, contributing to fair competition.

That hours of employment are a major factor in the productive process, contributing to fair competition.

That approximately 25 percent of the employable persons are unemployed at the present time. This constitutes a most serious obstacle to the economic stability and industrial tranquillity within these United States.

That in view of the present tendency toward lengthening the working hours and reducing wages, your committee believes that these conditions create unfair competition, unemployment, and low consuming power.

That unregulated employment of children in industry is conducive of unfair competition and harmful to the general welfare of the Nation.

That recent records showing that, following the abolition of Nation-wide prohibition of child labor under the National Recovery Administration, child labor has increased by a considerable percentage, indicating a trend definitely toward employment of children, which denies to adults the opportunity for employment: Now therefore

The committee finds that long working hours, inadequate wages, and employment of children in industry create unfair competition in the flow of commerce in and between the several States of the United States and is detrimental to the general welfare of industry and the Nation, and that Congress should create commissions empowered to regulate such unfair and detrimental practices; it is

Resolved, That Congress be requested to enact legislation creating a commission which shall, after findings, have authority to determine a minimum wage rate to be paid by each of the several industries, the commission to determine the field covered by each industry; it is further

Resolved, That Congress be requested to enact legislation creating a commission which shall, after findings, have authority to determine the maximum number of hours per week to be worked in each of the several industries, the commission to determine the field to be covered. That in any instance where the hour-week shall have been greater than the hour-week established by the commission for that industry an adjustment in the wage rates shall be made, so that there shall be no reduction in the earnings of the worker; it is also further

Resolved, That Congress be requested to enact legislation creating a commission which shall, after findings, regulate the minimum ages at which children may be employed in commerce, manufacturing, mines, or agriculture; it is also further

Resolved, That in the appointment of a commission Congress shall provide for a personnel giving equal representation of management and labor.

REPORT OF THE MINORITY MANAGEMENT GROUP OF THE COUNCIL FOR INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS DISSENTING FROM THE ADOPTED REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE COUNCIL REGARDING MAXIMUM WORK WEEK, CHILD LABOR, AND WAGES

Dissenting minority report

We believe that the report should, but does not, give due consideration to the constitutional limitations on Federal and State legislative power.

(Signed) TOM GLASGOW.
F. A. JENKINS.
A. E. SAWYER.
D. G. SHERWIN.
S. F. VOORHEES.

Further dissenting minority report

While concurring in the dissenting report set forth above I feel that the report is inadequate. Although I sincerely regret that portion of the decision of the Supreme Court in the recent N. R. A. case having to do with interstate commerce, the fact remains that, in plain and unequivocal terms, the Court, by unanimous action, declared that the Congress could not legislate on matters indirectly affecting interstate commerce such as (page 16 of the decision) "building, * * *, mining, manufacturing, or growing crops."

I definitely endorse action by the several States creating a reasonable minimum wage and the prohibition of abusive hours of labor and child labor.

I feel, however, the council, in approving the committee's report requesting congressional action at this time, specifically recommended that the Congress enact legislation definitely and obviously unconstitutional in the light of the clear and unusually specific language of the Court in this case and the former child-labor cases.

Such action by the council is reasonably calculated to seriously discount its usefulness, discredit the worthy aims for which the council was formed and embarrass both the Congress and the administration.

Respectfully submitted.

TOM GLASGOW.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency an editorial from the Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune of April 21, 1936, the leading newspaper of the State of Montana, entitled "The Job Completed."

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune, Apr. 21, 1936]

THE JOB COMPLETED

Within a few days now the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will finish its big job. On May 7 making of loans to home owners to refinance old indebtedness on their property will cease entirely. The agency will then have only the work of collecting the installments and interest on the outstanding loans.

The Montana agency of the H. O. L. C. has only 10 or less applications pending for disposal before that time. In the period of 2½ years it has loaned $7,450,000 to Montana home owners and has brought relief to several thousand home owners.

This emergency effort of the Federal Government is generally praised, even by opponents of the administration that established it. It was created to do a very important job and has creditably performed that task. One of the most serious situations on March 4, 1933, was that of the home owner with a burdensome debt. Private institutions making loans on residence properties were also in distress quite generally. They were unable to make new loans and in many cases to carry further those already made. Borrowers were everywhere unable to make payments on their indebtedness, and wholesale foreclosures of home properties seemed inevitable.

This agency furnished funds to refinance those debts, lowered the annual interest charge materially, made compromises possible in many cases between debtor and creditor as to the principal of the debt. The home owner was enabled to make needed repairs on his place, to clear up delinquent taxes, and to look ahead with new hope because he could save his home.

Those who criticized the policy on the start are much less inclined to do so now. Apparently the Corporation will secure the repayment of the capital put into the loans and the necessary step of restoring the morale of the home owners was a most important factor in starting the processes of recovery.

The Home Owners' Loan System is distinct from the Federal housing program, and has been under a different agency at Washington. The housing problem is one that has not been adequately met as yet and it is of pressing importance. There has been considerable sentiment to the effect that the Federal housing activities should have been placed in the H. O. L. C. administration, in view of the results obtained by the latter.

But that is a debated question which does not affect the general statement that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has completed a very important job in a very creditable manner.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 11302. A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to lend to the reunion committee of the United Confederate Veterans 3,000 blankets, olive drab, no. 4, 1,500 convas cots, to be used at their annual encampment to be held at Shreveport, La., in June 1936 (Rept. No. 1977); and

S. J. Res. 257. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Acadamy at West Point Maximo Mariano Pruna y Hernandez, a citizen of Cuba (Rept. No. 1978).

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3220) to authorize the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to withhold the pay of officers, warrant officers, enlisted men, and nurses of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps to cover indebtedness to the United States under certain conditions, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1979) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3736) authorizing and directing the appointment of Joseph W. Harrison as a captain in the Chaplain Reserve Corps, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1980) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 115) designating the last Sunday in September as Gold Star Mother's Day, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1981) thereon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5058) to convey certain lands to Clackamas County, Oreg., for public-park purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1982) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8431) to provide for the establishment of the Fort Frederica National Monument, at St. Simon Island, Ga., and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1983) thereon.

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3841) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 1985) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4297. A bill to amend section 80 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, as amended (Rept. No. 1986); and

H. R. 8940. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto (Rept. No. 1984).

COTTON COOPERATIVES—MINORITY VIEWS OF SENATOR BANKHEAD

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, some time ago I filed a report, under the authority of Senate Resolution 185, regarding the investigation of cotton cooperatives. One of the members of the committee, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who was ill at the time the report was filed, desires to file a dissenting report, and I ask unanimous consent in his absence that his report be filed, printed, and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1819, pt. 2) was received, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My approval is withheld from the report submitted by Senator McKELLAR pursuant to the authority of Senate Resolution No. 185, authorizing an investigation into the expenditures by the Federal Government for cotton cooperatives.

The testimony taken comprises 654 printed pages. Therefore a detailed analysis of this testimony would unnecessarily prolong this report, but the following conclusions seem to me to be warranted:

1. The American Cotton Cooperative Association and its affiliates are farmer owned and farmer controlled, and that they are organized and operated in accordance with the letter and spirit of cooperative marketing laws.

2. The Government twice attempted efforts in the nature of stabilization operations, once in the 1929–30 cotton season, when an advance of 16 cents per pound was made on cotton delivered through the cooperatives, and again in the 1930–31 cotton season, when 90 percent of the market value of cotton was advanced to growers through the cooperatives. The Government has assumed and paid some of the losses incident to these stabilization operations, but has not paid all losses.

3. The record shows that in performing the ordinary functions of cooperative marketing associations, exclusive of stabilization operations, American Cotton Cooperative Association and its affiliates on the whole have rendered satisfactory service. Out of over a quarter of a million producer members less than 20 appeared to protest any grievance or criticism.

The evidence does show that the cotton cooperatives lost certain reserves and were put in debt to the Federal Government as a direct result of stabilization efforts conducted at the instance and under the direction of the Federal Government acting through the Federal Farm Board. The record further shows that since the cessation of these stabilization activities by the Government, the operation of the cotton cooperatives as a whole have been conducted in accordance with sound business and cooperative principles. As illustrative of this the evidence conclusively shows the following facts: American Cotton Cooperative Association was organized in 1930 by 13 State and regional cotton cooperative associations with a paid-up capital of only $76,950. This association has accumulated a substantial capital and surplus reserve through earnings. At the close of the 1933–34 season the capital and surplus amounted to $2,355,658.59, and all of this, except the original $76,950, was a result of earnings. These earnings are held for the benefit of the producers whose patronage has contributed to it. At the close of the 1933–34 season $480,058.20 was distributed by this association as patronage dividends. These results have been accomplished in spite of some testimony by the cotton trade to the effect that the American Cotton Cooperative Association and its affiliates were paying more to producers than the trade could afford to pay and were selling cotton to the mills at lower prices than the trade could afford to take.

I am impelled to the conclusion that during these years the operations of the cooperatives have reduced the spread between the producer and the consumer to the benefit of both.

4. The record does not justify the assumption that capital loans to the cooperatives are worthless, or that the Government will ultimately lose thereby. I find no basis for reflecting upon the officials of Farm Credit Administration appointed by the President pursuant to the law passed by Congress. None of these officials were called by the subcommittee; and certainly there is no evidence indicating that these capital loans were recklessly, improvidently, or illegally made. I see no reason to believe that the Government's loans are likely to be lost in whole or in part.

5. As to membership relations, the element of coercion is absent. The membership contracts introduced in the record give the members the right to withdraw from membership and cancel the contract. Hence I am unable to join in the view that the cooperatives retain their membership by coercion or duress.

6. The record shows that the cooperatives have rendered a noteworthy service. Through means of local offices and receiving agents, classing service is widely provided to the end that farmers who do not know the grade or staple of their cotton, and may not understand its value, are advised in these respects.

A basis sheet is made available throughout the Cotton Belt and every producer of cotton in the South can ascertain what the cooperatives will pay for his cotton on any date.

Various sales options are provided, including the seasonal pool, the daily fixation pool, and other pools. In the seasonal pool, cotton is sought to be sold in an orderly manner at the average seasonal price received from sales rendered to growers. In the daily fixation pool the current day's price is given to the farmer. Under the marketing contracts he has exclusive option control in determining whether to sell through a daily pool or seasonal pool. There is no evidence that the judgment of the association's officials is substituted for his judgment in these particulars.

7. The immediate fixation or daily pool is a natural development of cooperative marketing. If only seasonal pool were offered, financed on a basis of advancing 60 percent of the market value at time of delivery, with subsequent distribution as sales are made from this pool, the effect would be to deny the advantages of cooperative marketing associations and their facilities to the weakest and neediest of the producers. With more than one-half of the American cotton crop produced under landlord's lien, crop mortgage, or furnishers' lien, the immediate fixation or daily pool is a necessity.

8. The evidence warrants the conclusion that the cooperatives have rendered noteworthy services in the marketing of cotton. To mention only a few, they have eliminated in large areas the purchase of cotton without taking into consideration in price fixing the grade and staple of cotton. The old method is commonly referred to as hog-round buying; they have narrowed the differentials between interior country points and central marketing points; they have contributed to cutting down the spread between the price paid to the producer and the price paid by the mills; and they seek to make the marketing of cotton as direct as can be economically done. The record supports the conclusion that the cooperatives aim to pay to the producers the highest price possible, not to buy his cotton at the lowest price and sell it for the highest price.

9. The record shows that in the operation of the cotton cooperatives there have been mistakes made. Handling never less than 1,000,000 bales per year since the organization of American Cotton Cooperative Association, it would be well-nigh impossible to market so large a volume of cotton without errors and perhaps injustice. But occasional errors should not call for a sweeping condemnation of the entire cooperative marketing system in cotton.

The public policy of the United States is committed to cooperative marketing. It was endorsed in the platform of both political parties in the last Presidential campaign. The cooperatives are seeking, to their credit, out of their own reserves, to build a solid financial structure. To expect the cotton producers immediately to contribute all of the capital needed to finance their operations is vain; and, therefore, both major political parties pledged financial aid of the Government to the cooperatives.

It does not appear, as stated, that capital loans to American Cotton Cooperative Association and its affiliates have been recklessly or wantonly made, or that those whom the President has entrusted with responsibility for the affairs of the Farm Credit Administration have been recreant to their trust.

It is a fair deduction, as heretofore pointed out, that the cooperatives lost reserves, which they held for their farmer members, as a direct result of stabilization operations initiated by the Federal Government. The former chairman of the Federal Farm Board, who was responsible, in part, for the policy initiated and the conduct of the operations, testified that the cooperatives and their members were penalized as a result of these operations. He frankly stated that the Federal Farm Board, at the close of the operation, was compelled to make a harsh and unfair settlement with the cooperatives based upon a legal interpretation of existing statutes. I am forced to the conclusion that the Congress, who alone can right the wrong, should by appropriate legislation, restore to the cotton cooperatives and to their producer members the reserves which were thus appropriated.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on April 30, 1936, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 247) authorizing the recognition of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of Harvard College and the beginning of higher education in the United States and providing for the representation of the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the anniversary.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 4581) authorizing the payment of certain salaries and expenses of employees of the General Land Office; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4582) for the relief of M. Seller & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BACHMAN:

A bill (S. 4583) granting a pension to Thomas A. Yadon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 4584) to amend the Migratory Bird Treaty Act of July 3, 1918 (40 Stat. 755), to extend and adapt its provisions to the convention between the United States and the United Mexican States for the protection of migratory birds and game mammals concluded at the city of Mexico, February 7, 1936, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 4585) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act to Walter Conner; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 259) to amend the joint resolution of July 18, 1935, relating to the Seventieth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held in the District of Columbia in September 1936; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. KING, the Committee on Banking and Currency was discharged from the further consideration of the following bills, and they were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

S. 4511. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of credit unions within the District of Columbia", approved June 23, 1932; and

S. 4512. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of laws for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 12527, the Navy Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500,000, to be used for the further development of the naval base at Tongue Point, Oreg.

"The Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to expend the appropriation of $1,500,000, made pursuant to this act, for the following purposes:

"For constructing hangars, ramps, barracks, shops, storehouses, and any other facilities required for the use and maintenance of naval aviation squadrons and their personnel.

"For dredging.

"For maintaining existing piers and shore facilities heretofore constructed.

"For enlarging existing piers and shore facilities heretofore constructed if found necessary and desirable by the Secretary of the Navy."

THE MERCHANT MARINE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I submit amendments which I intend to offer to the bill (H. R. 8555) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes. I wish to call attention to the one difference between the committee print which was made available Saturday and the amendments which I send to the desk. The change appears in section 53.

I ask that the amendments be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, some days ago the Committee on Interstate Commerce reported the bill (S. 1636) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, which had been recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The first part of the bill as introduced would have given the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to fix minimum joint rail and water rates. The second part of the bill referred to the power of the Commission to establish and maintain joint routes and rates.

When hearings were had on the bill it was agreed that the committee should not take action on the provision giving the Commission power to fix minimum rail and water rates, but by reason of clerical oversight this provision was not taken out of the bill as reported. I desire to introduce now an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill previously reported, and ask that it lie on the table, be printed, and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment in the nature of a substitute was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"Paragraph (3) of section 15 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is further amended by adding the following: 'The elimination of any existing through route or joint rate, fare, charge, or classification without the consent of all carriers, parties thereto or authorization by the Commission shall be deemed prima facie unreasonable and contrary to the public interest.'

"SEC. 2. Paragraph (4) of section 15 of the Interstate Commerce Act is hereby amended to read as follows: 'In time of shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency declared by the Commission it may (either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, if it so orders without answer or other formal pleadings by the interested carrier or carriers, and with or without notice, hearing, or the making or filing of a report, according as the Commission may determine) establish temporarily such through routes as in its opinion are necessary or desirable in the public interest.'"

AMENDMENT OF RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. CAPPER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. WAGNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 3, in the table of contents, strike out the following: "Sec. 120. Unlimited deduction for charitable and other contributions"; and strike out "Sec. 121" and in lieu thereof insert "Sec. 120."

On page 40, line 16, strike out "animals;" and insert "animals."; and in lines 17 to 19, strike out the following: "to an amount which in all the above cases combined does not exceed 15 percent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this subsection"; and in lines 22 to 24, strike out the following: "(For unlimited deduction if contributions and gifts exceed 90 percent of the net income, see section 120.)"

On page 42, lines 13 to 15, strike out the following: "; to an amount which does not exceed 5 percent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this subsection."

On page 42, line 20, strike out "section 121" and in lieu thereof insert "section 120."

On page 127, beginning with line 16, strike out down to and including line 2, on page 128.

On page 128, line 3, strike out "Sec. 121" and in lieu thereof insert "Sec. 120."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 12527) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ALLEGED UNDERCOVER OPERATIONS BY GOVERNMENT AGENTS

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, my attention has been directed to an article recently appearing in one of the local papers which condemns certain alleged practices of so-called undercover men employed by some Government departments and who are charged with a low form of spying and general all-around espionage.

I have been advised of at least one such instance, which seemed an utterly indefensible case of this very thing. I am concerned over the fact that such practices may exist. If they are not checked by the salutary force of public opinion, they might readily lend themselves to the most odious form of oppression and coercion and easily become the basis of what might amount to political blackmail.

What is to prevent such practices from being used to coerce Members of Congress into attitudes favorable to the ends sought by the people who control these undercover operators? If the activities of these men are not brought to light, what is to prevent them from becoming instruments of tyranny in the hands of ambitious men?

In the near future I shall have something to say about this matter, and probably offer a resolution looking to an investigation by the Senate to determine the extent to which its own Members may have been the object of attention at the hands of this nascent and budding O. G. P. U. If there be nothing to this now so frequently repeated charge, it might be well to lay this ghost of gossip by the heels and have an end to the undercurrent of charges and cross-charges now so freely indulged in when Members of Congress meet for frank, private discussion of what is going on. I think that an official investigation would be a healthy thing, and it would give an opportunity to the supersleuths to come before the committee where the bright light of publicity could and would be turned on their work.

EXPENSES OF COMMITTEES OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 567, Calendar No. 1992, being a joint resolution to provide an additional appropriation for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1936.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for expenses of special and select committees authorized by the House of Representatitves there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000 for the fiscal year 1936: Provided, That no person shall be employed under this appropriation at a rate of compensation in excess of $3,600 per annum.

EVERYBODY'S RELIEF—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BARBOUR

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a radio address entitled "Everybody's Relief", delivered by the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] on the Columbia chain Sunday, May 3.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It seems to me everyone needs relief. The unemployed need relief until they can secure regular jobs. The taxpayer needs relief from the growing burden of taxation. The American people in general need relief from an overdose of costly governmental experiments.

I am convinced that we can give relief to everybody right now. I think we could take adequate care of the unemployed during the coming year by using money already authorized. This would help the unemployed, and it would help the taxpayer too.

It means, in figures, that we would not need that extra $1,500,000,000 authorization which the New Deal wants to take from our pockets now. It also means that the Budget would be nearer a balance.

The New Deal relief administrators have simply got into a revolving door. They keep going round and round, hopefully trying this and that, and always coming out where they went in. There are just as many unemployed in this country as when they started. There is the same old waste and inefficiency in relief administration, and every turn of the door takes a few more billions out of the American pocketbook.

Unemployment relief is necessary so long as people are out of work. But it ought to be conducted with as little expense as possible. It is just as bad for the United States Government to squander part of the relief money intended for the unemployed as it is for a man to gamble away part of his weekly pay when his wife and children need the money for food and clothing. That is just what is happening now, however, and that is the reason why our unemployment-relief program is so expensive.

The money that finally reaches the unemployed is only a portion of the relief funds which the President has at his disposal. Part of it goes toward maintaining huge offices and large armies of bureaucrats in Washington. Part of it goes for bales of blanks and forms that have to be filled out and shuttled back and forth between Washington and the local relief projects. Part of it goes for land, materials, transportation, and all the other things that go into Federal work relief. Finally, and most unfortunately, part of it gets into the hands of purely partisan politicians.

You probably remember the C. W. A. of 2 years ago, which spent, roughly, $834,000,000 in 5 months to provide boondoggling projects for an average of less than 3,000,000 unemployed. C. W. A. so reeked with inefficiency and incompetence that even its Administrator, Harry L. Hopkins, could not stand the smell of it. C. W. A. was disbanded as soon as possible and Mr. Hopkins said at the time:

"I am perfectly frank to say that when this enterprise was started it did not occur to me that people would do this kind of petty chiseling."

C. W. A. took an average of about $167,000,000 per month of the taxpayers' money, of which the unemployed finally got a portion after the commissions, bureaus, patronage, and politics had abstracted their share.

Right now the Government is trying to provide unemployment relief by means of a set-up called W. P. A. Personally I can see little difference between the old C. W. A. and this new W. P. A. except in one particular. W. P. A. costs more. It is spending an average of $275,000,000 per month, or 65 percent more than the old C. W. A.

Although costing more, W. P. A. is providing less relief than C. W. A. When the first half of the current fiscal year was over, W. P. A. had given relief to an average of 1,800,000 unemployed persons, which is a little more than half the number that C. W. A. took care of.

They fired C. W. A. without a reference because it was too expensive and open to chiseling and political manipulation. Yet W. P. A. is allowed to meander on its even more costly way.

There is one thing that I wish to make clear before I go further. I do not know of a single person who even suggests that we stop giving relief to the unemployed. Nobody wants the unemployed to go hungry or to be without proper clothing and shelter or medical care. I am only pointing out that much of the relief money is being wasted—needlessly wasted.

This year the Government is spending about $3,000,000,000 for relief.

What is a billion dollars? It is a pretty hard sum to imagine. No one person on earth has ever had that much money.

Yes; a billion dollars is a breath-taking sum; but the Government was given $4,880,000,000 last year for unemployment relief, and $3,300,000,000 the year before for the same purpose. These sums are to past Government appropriations what the Pacific Ocean is to the old swimming hole.

During the year prior to the appropriation of these sums the Government had provided for all kinds of relief cases. It had cared for those whose physical or mental disabilities prevented their being able to work. It had cared for the transients who took to the road to find work, but who had no longer any fixed home anywhere. It had cared for those able and eager to work, but who could not find jobs because of the depression.

Now with more money in the till than ever before, the New Deal changes its relief policy. It washes its hands of the unfortunate who cannot work. They are told that the individual States or the counties or the cities or towns must take care of them. The New Deal also has left the transients to shift for themselves. As these unemployed could not claim any particular State as home, they are denied State or local relief. It is not that the States and communities are hard-hearted; their laws prevent their giving any relief to transients. So many transients are faced with the choice of starving or else getting a precarious living by the humiliating process of panhandling.

The unemployed who are able in body and mind are to be given jobs under W. P. A. It took quite a little while for W. P. A. to get organized. Although the last $4,000,000,000 were available last July 1, it was not until late in the fall that any appreciable number of unemployed were given jobs.

Of course, everyone is glad when the unemployed are given work and wages. Many of us feel that the only kind of work which will preserve the respect of the worker is work which is useful and of enduring value. How much use or permanent value is there in the Government putting the unemployed to such work as raking leaves, bringing jack rabbits under control, tanning hides by hand, canning sauerkraut, giving pageants and festivals, collecting testimony of ex-slaves, or constructing portable theaters?

For relief, some of it in the form of such trivial projects of little value, the New Deal spent $1,600,000,000 during the first half of the current fiscal year. Only about two-thirds of the money on work-relief projects went to the unemployed. The rest of it went to materials, supplies, and equipment.

According to various estimates, the Government will have spent $3,000,000,000 or a little more for relief when the current fiscal year ends on June 30. That means that there will be $1,500,000,000 left for the unemployed for next year. And there may be more.

The trouble with figures of this kind is that they are only guesses. It is very difficult to get a clear picture of what is going on in New Deal relief because its workings are obscure and definite information is withheld. Here are some of the New Deal agencies connected with unemployment relief: Works Progress Administration, Public Works Administration, Emergency Conservation Work, Resettlement Administration, Bureau of Public Roads, National Youth Administration, Department of Agriculture, Department of Commerce, Department of Labor, Alley Dwelling Authority, Rural Electrification Administration, and lots of others.

In fact, there are so many cooks dishing up relief that it is little wonder it gets spoiled in the dishing.

I have introduced in the United States Senate a resolution calling on the Relief Administrator to advise Congress the sum of money remaining for relief purposes. I think we all ought to have that information. I know I am going to have a difficult time getting that resolution passed over the protests of New Deal Members of Congress, but I am going to keep trying.

The reason I want to know how much money is still left from the nearly five billion given the Relief Administrator last year is because I suspect there is still a lot available. By the same token, I also suspect that we may not need to ask the taxpayers to furnish any more money for next year's relief. We may be able to go along on what we have. Certainly we should find out if we can do so.

Of course, that means cutting down relief costs, too. That does not mean, however, cutting down on payments to the unemployed. It means cutting out the waste and inefficiency of the present system with its Washington bureaucrats and its petty chiselers all along the line.

Why should an unemployed man in your community be hungrily waiting and waiting for word that relief is on its way when all that is holding it up is the decision of some pee-wee potentate in Washington that line 18 of form 86 is improperly filled out? All this shuttling of requisitions, allocations, vouchers, and whatnot back and forth through General Farley's mails keeps the many-headed monster of bureaucracy in Washington well fed, but it doesn't put one penny in the pockets of the unemployed.

Ask yourself this question: How would you administer relief to the unemployed? You know your own community. You know where the people are who are out of work. You know or you can soon find out which are the chiselers and which the deserving. You wouldn't let anyone starve, but you wouldn't go around throwing dollar bills in the air like the "Spirit of Spring" tossing blossoms in a pageant.

That is the answer to the question, "Why is Federal relief so expensive?" It is impossible for persons in Washington, however well meaning, to know local conditions in every urban and rural community in the country. And when Washington sends agents to find out, that only adds to the costs of administering relief and delays it.

Relief should be administered by the States. They understand their own local problems. They will not have to clog the mails with questionnaires. They will not have to employ armies of clerks whose only jobs are to receive papers from the one on the left and pass them on to the one on the right. They will administer relief with a minimum of expense and a maximum of efficiency.

Under such a State-administered relief system, with money supplied by the Federal Government on a grant-in-aid basis, it is estimated that the national relief cost can be cut just about in half.

Instead of a possible $3,000,000,000 a year, it can be done for perhaps $1,500,000,000. Since we shall probably have just about that much left from last year's $4,800,000,000 appropriation, our next year's relief will be in a sense "on the house."

As I said before, these estimates are difficult to arrive at because the relief structure is so complicated. That is why I am asking in my Senate resolution that the Relief Administrator make a report of his past stewardship and furnish estimates from his experience for the future.

I am hoping that this resolution will pass. I hope we shall secure information that will show us the way to relief for everybody—the unemployed, the taxpayer, and Mr. and Mrs. America and their family wherever they are.

AMERICAN FOREIGN-TRADE POLICIES—ADDRESS BY SECRETARY HULL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered last Thursday, April 30, by Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, before the general session of the Twenty-fourth Annual Meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in Washington.

This is a very able address on our foreign-trade relations, and goes very fully into the whole matter of recovery of our foreign trade. I believe Senators and the public will be greatly interested in reading it. This is the speech of a Cabinet officer, and, under the law, is not required to have an estimate of cost.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, ladies, and gentlemen: One year ago, when I had the pleasure of addressing the general session of your twenty-third annual meeting, I took occasion to lay before you the basic idea which underlies the foreign commercial policy pursued by the Government of the United States during the gravest economic emergency within our peacetime experience. I described to you the pressing needs of this country and of the world in the domain of international commercial relations; the difficulties that stand in the way of meeting these needs; and the dangers which are inherent in failure to solve the vital problems involved. The 12 months that have elapsed have brought these needs and problems into still sharper relief and, in speaking before you today, I welcome the opportunity to discuss with you once more, especially in the light of the developments and experience of the past eventful year, the purposes and objectives sought by our Government in the field of foreign trade.

As time goes on it becomes increasingly clear that no nation can achieve a full measure of stable economic recovery so long as international trade remains in the state of collapse into which it had been plunged during the years of the depression. The whole postwar period has been characterized by an ever increasing drift toward economic nationalism, which has expressed itself in a constant growth of barriers to international trade. This drift has become enormously intensified during the past 6 years, though responsible statesmen in many countries have never ceased to deplore it. Under its impact, the international economic structure of the world has been all but shattered, and individual nations have sought economic improvement more and more by means of purely domestic measures, on the basis of a greater degree of self-containment than was ever before consciously attempted.

Such a movement toward national economic self-containment is incompatible with the reestablishment of satisfactory prosperity. The basic raw materials needed for modern ways of living and for the development of a higher civilization in the future are not evenly distributed throughout the globe. Similarly, the application of technical skill and the accumulation of financial wealth are more highly developed in some nations than in others. No nation, forced to live in isolation within its own borders, can have everything that it needs. Overabundance of some resources cannot possibly compensate for lack or insufficiency of others. Only through international trade and financial intercourse can locally concentrated natural and man-made resources be utilized in such a way as to afford all nations the indispensable foundations of modern economic well-being.

For generations, humanity has built its life upon a recognition of the primary fact that trade is the lifeblood of economic activity. This is equally true whether within or among nations. Each nation has accordingly developed far beyond domestic requirements those branches of production in which it has special endowment or aptitude. Each nation has come to regard foreign markets as the natural outlets for its surplus output, and the surplus production of other nations as the sources from which to supply its own deficiencies.

A rapid and drastic contraction of international trade of the kind that the world has witnessed during the past few years constitutes a double attack upon the economic well-being of each nation's population. The necessary materials habitually obtained in other parts of the globe become more difficult to secure. The surplus national production habitually shipped to other countries becomes more difficult to sell. Output in the surplus-creating branches of production must be curtailed, or else accumulating surpluses force prices below the level of remunerative return to the producers. In either case, the whole economic structure becomes disrupted. Vast unemployment ensues, not only in the field of production, but also in such lines of activity as transportation, banking, merchandising, and the various avocations and professions. Financial investment and other forms of savings become impaired or are wholly destroyed. Distress spreads throughout the Nation in ever-widening circles.

Economic distress quickly translates itself into social instability and political unrest. It opens the way for the demagogue and the agitator, foments internal strife, and frequently leads to the supplanting of orderly democratic government by tyrannical dictatorships. It breeds international friction, fear, envy, and resentment, and destroys the very foundations of world peace. Nations are tempted to seek escape from distress at home in military adventures beyond their frontiers. And as fear of armed conflict spreads, even peace-loving nations are forced to divert their national effort from the creation of wealth and from peaceful well-being to the construction of armaments. Each step in the armament race bristles with new menace of economic disorganization and destruction, multiplies fear for the future, dislocates normal constructive processes of economic life, and leads to greater and greater impoverishment of the world's population.

In the past few months we have witnessed a swift increase in international political tension; a recrudescence of the military spirit, which sees no goal in life except triumph by force; an expansion of standing armies; a sharp increase of military budgets; and actual warfare in some portions of the globe. Human and material resources are being shifted, on a truly alarming scale, in a military direction rather than one of peace and peace pursuits.

There is no need for me to dwell long upon the appalling implications of this tragic picture. Overwhelming evidence of it is startlingly apparent on every side. I shall rather devote the time which you have so kindly placed at my disposal to a consideration of the possibilities of turning back this rising danger of a new world catastrophe. For myself, I am firmly convinced that such possibilities exist, and that the world has at its disposal adequate remedies for overcoming the virulent disease which is now so widespread.

Only as the world's economic health is restored will individuals and nations develop again adequate resistance to the psychological madness that makes possible internal and external strife. Only as constructive economic effort once more fully engages the energies of mankind, as the machinery of production and distribution regains and expands its scale and speed of operation, as sterile unemployment is replaced by fertile toil, will the nations of the world restore and develop their economic prosperity in full and sound measure and turn their thoughts away from war and toward lasting peace.

The disease is so widespread and so all-pervasive that the attack upon it must be on a wide front. In addition to the break-down of international trade, the economic life of each nation is subjected today to the strain of many maladjustments, both internal and external. Each of the major maladjustments must be corrected, for there is little hope of adequate and stable recovery if any of the more important ones are ignored or neglected.

Many of these maladjustments can yield only to constructive domestic measures, and such measures, looking especially toward the fullest practicable development of the domestic economy, are therefore indispensable to recovery. They are being taken today in many countries. But they cannot be really and permanently effective unless they go hand in hand with appropriate action in the international field. The prospect of full and durable recovery will be bright and hopeful only as each important nation determines to go forward both on a domestic and an international program, in order that an expanding world prosperity may develop to sustain and promote the expansion of domestic recovery.

We in the United States are engaged today upon such a combined economic program. Under the influence of constructive internal measures, we have achieved a substantial recovery in production, employment, and prices. But we are also buttressing this developing economic improvement by a determined effort to reestablish international trade upon a basis that will permit it to regain its volume of a few years ago and to go forward as a process mutually beneficial to all nations.

At the time I addressed you a year ago, our foreign-trade program was still in its beginnings. Since then it has developed into what we, who are daily engaged upon the task of its execution, believe to be an accomplishment of importance and increasing promise. We have now concluded 12 trade agreements, which have opened to larger American exports such markets as those of Canada, Cuba, Brazil, the Netherlands, Belgium, Sweden, and Switzerland.

In the process of preparing and negotiating these agreements, we have been confronted with the need of deciding many questions of method and of policy. If you will bear with me for a few minutes, I should like to describe to you briefly the methods we are employing for the attainment of our objectives, the decisions we have had to make in formulating our policy, and the reasons for choosing the particular methods and decisions.

The foreign-trade program of this Government is based fundamentally upon what to us is an indisputable assumption—namely, that our domestic recovery can be neither complete nor durable unless our surplus-creating branches of production succeed in regaining at least a substantial portion of their lost foreign markets. Our production of cotton, lard, tobacco, fruits, copper, petroleum products, automobiles, machinery, electrical and office appliances, and a host of other specialties is geared to a scale of operation the output of which exceeds domestic consumption by 10 to 50 percent. In his message to Congress recommending the passage of the Trade Agreements Act, the President urged the need of restoring foreign markets in order that our surplus-producing industries may be "spared in part at least, the heartbreaking readjustments that must be necessary if the shrinkage of American foreign commerce remains permanent."

Our exports have shrunk for many reasons, among which two stand out prominently, both because of their effectiveness in reducing the volume of trade and because their removal or mitigation lies within the realm of possible action on our part. These are, first, the increase of trade barriers in those countries which constitute the normal markets for our exports, and second, the development of discriminatory practices on the part of such countries, which place our exporters at a disadvantage with respect to their foreign competitors.

Our needs are clear: We must induce foreign countries to mitigate the obstructions which they place in the way of our shipments to their markets, and we must free our export trade from disruptive discrimination directed against it. In what ways and by what means can we provide for these needs?

As regards the problem of trade barriers, it is not necessary for me to recite how, in recent years, customs duties have been raised to unprecedented heights in nearly all the countries of the world, nor how the use of new, powerfully restrictive devices has become widespread. You, as businessmen, are fully as familiar as I am with the operation of these measures and with their stifling effect upon the exchange of goods among the nations of the world. Nor is it necessary for me to emphasize the fact that our own country has contributed greatly to the rise of these barriers of trade.

Since the end of the World War, we have revised our general tariff structure upward on three different occasions. The third and most drastic of these revisions, embodied in the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, occurred at the very outset of the depression, from the devastating effects of which the world is just beginning to recover. Through that ill-starred action, we helped to set into motion a vicious spiral of retaliation and counter-retaliation, and to start a race for a forcible contraction of international trade on a stupendous scale. In this race, some nations have far outstripped us in the scope and effectiveness of restriction action. Our export trade has become the victim of the formidable array of economic armaments created by other nations, just as the export trade of other nations has likewise become the victim of our thrust into the heights of superprotectionism.

If international trade is to function again on an adequate scale, and if we are to regain our fair share of that trade, the nations of the world must retrace their steps from this supreme folly. As I said at the London Economic Conference in 1933, the nations, in the matter of tariffs, must embark upon a sound middle course between extreme economic internationalism and extreme economic nationalism. All excesses in the matter of trade barriers should be removed and all unfair trade methods and practices should be abandoned.

When we were formulating our basic policy there were two ways open to us to make our vital contribution to the process of economic demobilization. We could undertake a downward revision of our tariff by unilateral and autonomous action, in the hope that other nations would as a result also begin to move away from their present suicidal policies in the field of foreign trade. Or else we could, by the negotiation of bilateral trade agreements, attempt a mitigation of trade barriers on a reciprocal basis.

We chose the second course as offering by far the better promise of trade improvement. An autonomous reduction of our tariff would provide no assurance that our example would be followed by other nations or, if it would be followed, that the resulting mitigation of trade barriers would, in fact, apply to those commodities which are of the greatest interest to us. On the other hand, the bilateral method, combined with the principle of equality of treatment, which I shall presently discuss, contemplates simultaneous action by many countries and in its effects operates to drive down excessive trade barriers throughout the world. Moreover, it affords us an opportunity to secure in each country the relaxation of restrictions with respect to those of our export commodities, the sale of which in that country's markets is either of special importance to us or else has been particularly hard hit by recently established restrictions. It was in order to make possible the securing of such concessions for our export trade by negotiation with other countries that Congress empowered the President for a 3-year period to conclude reciprocal-trade agreements and, in connection with such agreements, to modify, within strictly defined limits, customs duties and other import restrictions operative in the United States.

The process of negotiating foreign-trade agreements of this type involves a task of enormous difficulty and complexity. In carrying it out, all appropriate divisions of the Government participate in a series of interdepartmental committees, and thus bring to bear upon the problem their specialized knowledge and judgment.

In addition, the Government seeks the fullest cooperation of the business community and the general public. Any interested person is given full opportunity to present his views to the interdepartmental committee for reciprocity information. In the case of the countries with whom negotiations have been announced, approximately 2,500 briefs and statements have been submitted by interested firms and trade associations. These statements, as well as transcripts of the oral testimony presented to the committee for reciprocity information, are placed in the hands of all the officials of the Government concerned with the preparation and negotiation of trade agreements. They are given careful study and constitute an important part of the material upon which decisions with respect to the requesting or granting of concessions are based.

In entering upon preparatory work with respect to any particular country the experts of the interdepartmental organization of which I spoke a moment ago endeavor to obtain, first of all, a picture, as comprehensive as possible, of the trade relations existing between the United States and the other country. As regards our exports to the country with which negotiations are in progress, the experts make a thorough study of each commodity from the point of view of the customs treatment which it is accorded in that country.

All this and a great deal of other information is embodied in reports dealing with the commodities under review. Together with the representations made through the committee for reciprocity information, the reports constitute the foundation upon which the decision is made as to what sort of concessions we should seek from the other country as regards duties, quotas, exchange controls, and other trade-obstructing devices. A schedule is then made up comprising our requests and is presented to the government of the other country for its consideration.

At the same time the representatives of the other country transmit to our Government a schedule of concessions which they would like to receive from us. These requests are immediately subjected to a close scrutiny by the experts of our Government, comprising the interdepartmental organization. Previously to that, these experts had already made a thorough investigation of the principal commodities imported into the United States from the other country, and they are, therefore, prepared to give early and thorough consideration to the requests made by the other country.

In connection with each request, an examination is made of our recent tariff treatment of that commodity; of the status and development of the domestic production of that or similar commodities; of the competitive factors operating as between our domestic production and the production, not only in the country with which we are negotiating but in all other countries which are actual or potential suppliers of the same commodity; of the effects—so far as they can be determined—of the present customs treatment upon trade in the particular commodity; of the probable effects of any change in the existing tariff rates; and of many other factors. The influence of possible tariff changes upon both producers and consumers in the United States is given careful consideration.

After all these studies are completed by our Government and the government of the other country, the negotiators come together, and the process of adjusting differences begins. It is inevitable, of course, that some differences of view are bound to exist and that many features of the schedule originally exchanged should become modified and adjusted.

The general aim of our negotiators is to secure concessions for those American exports the marketing of which in the other country offers the best opportunity of development and, at the same time, promises the greatest degree of revival in our export industries; and to grant the other country concessions with respect to commodities the possible increased importation of which would be beneficial to our country. The representatives of the other country are, naturally, actuated by very much the same motives. In the actual experience of negotiation it has been found possible to reconcile the desires of both sides in sufficient measure for the final agreements to embody worth-while mutual concessions and thus open the way for an increase of mutually profitable trade.

Our officials, who are concerned with carrying out this complicated process of preparation and negotiation, are actuated by only one purpose: To administer the Trade Agreements Act cautiously, conservatively, and practically, with the best interests of the country as a whole as their sole guide, and thus to carry out, scrupulously and accurately, the instructions and policy of Congress within the limits prescribed in the act. They are free, so far as is humanly possible, from partisan considerations. I do not know the politics of most of the persons engaged in this important task. I only know that some of them have had a long experience in practical business affairs; that some of them have devoted their lives to the study of industry, or agriculture, or trade, or tariffs, or economics in general. I know that each agreement, forged by their combined effort, represents an effective instrument for reopening the channels of international trade on an economic and constructive basis.

Unlike a general revision of the tariff, when Members of Congress are expected to read and digest, usually within a few weeks, many volumes of testimony and to determine how to vote on thousands of rates and classifications, each trade agreement requires the adjustment of a relatively small number of rates. These adjustments are made on the basis of tireless and earnest investigation, of constant checking and rechecking of all essential considerations, by the ablest and most practical and disinterested experts in trade and tariff matters that the State, Treasury, and Agriculture, and Commerce Departments and the Tariff Commission can secure.

These men must, of necessity, work some of the time in executive session, just as committees of Congress do when the task of tariff revision is undertaken. Congresional tariff acts are usually drafted in all their essentials in such executive sessions behind closed doors. Both political parties in Congress have almost invariably pursued this practice for the purpose of necessary deliberation as well as a matter of self-defense from day and night importunities of outsiders. Who would today attempt to label this a star-chamber procedure? Yet there are those who would carelessly apply this epithet to this identical method when practiced in connection with the negotiation of trade agreements. It must be clear to such critics that we have adopted our method on the basis of the long experience of Congress in dealing with questions of this type. It is with Congress, therefore, rather than with us, that necessity of the executive-session practice should be debated.

I come now to our second primary need in the field of foreign commerce—the freezing and safeguarding of our export trade from adverse discrimination on the part of foreign nations. It is clear that the mere mitigation of the tariff, quota, and other burdensome obstructions to our trade is not sufficient to enable us to regain our foreign markets; it is also necessary that the customs treatment accorded to our goods in each such market be at least as favorable as that accorded to the goods of our foreign competitors. In recent years our trade has suffered greatly because some of our competitors have secured in many of our most important markets exclusive advantages which have resulted in serious discrimination against us.

We could have embarked upon a similar line of policy. We, too, could have attempted to negotiate arrangements embodying exclusive advantages for our export trade. But it was clear to us from the outset that such a policy would have provided but a precarious safeguard for our trade. It would merely have served as an incentive for each of our competitors to seek further exclusive advantages, which would have immediately set up new discriminations against our trade—to be overcome by us in turn by means of new negotiations.

Generations of experience with various forms of international commercial relations have demonstrated fully that only the policy of equal treatment can secure for a nation stability of its international trade and freedom from disruptive discrimination, and that such a policy can operate only on the basis of the unconditional most-favored-nation principle. Only if the foreign country with which we enter into a trade agreement assures us the benefit of that principle can we be certain that our exports to that country's market will be able to compete with similar goods coming from other foreign countries on an equal footing, since under the most-favored-nation principle each advantage or concession granted to any other country would immediately and automatically be extended to us.

But if we were to ask of other countries a condition of complete equality for our trade—and, in justice to ourselves, we could accept nothing less—we could clearly offer other nations only a similar kind of treatment. Each exclusive concession granted by us to a foreign country would have constituted an immediate discrimination against 50 or more other countries. It would have involved us in constant negotiation and renegotiation, and would have given rise to retaliation abroad and continuing uncertainty for our business interests engaged in foreign trade. Hence, a provision was written into the Trade Agreements Act directing the President to generalize the duty adjustments effected through any trade agreement to goods coming from other countries, except those which discriminate against our trade or pursue other policies likely to defeat the aims which we seek to accomplish through the act.

Our trade-agreements program is thus a standing offer to all the nations of the world to deal with each of them in commercial matters on a basis of equal treatment. In carrying out the mandate of Congress in this respect, we have, save only in the case of a few well-recognized exceptions, steadfastly refrained from securing or granting preferential or discriminatory treatment. In generalizing the duty reductions negotiated in the individual trade agreements, we have sought to place on an equal footing those nations which, in turn, extend equality of treatment to our commerce, and to refuse such equality to those nations which refuse equality to us. Thus, all phases of our policy are on a reciprocal basis.

Here again, as in the adjustment of duties, we strive to carry out our policy cautiously, conservatively, and practically. Our rule is that the duty reductions granted to each individual country are restricted to those commodities of which the particular country is the chief supplier to the United States. If it should happen, however, that under existing abnormal conditions, some other country at any later stage profits unduly from the benefit of the concession, we retain the right, when such contingency arises, to modify the original grant.

Our interpretation of the most-favored-nation principle is sufficiently flexible to permit the negotiation of multilateral trade arrangements. We welcome such arrangements, provided they have for their object the liberalization and promotion of international trade in general rather than seek to create closed areas of special preference. At the seventh international conference of American States at Montevideo, I proposed an agreement designed to pave the way for such arrangements. This agreement, which is open to adhesion by all countries, has been ratified by our Government.

These and other practical exceptions and safeguards, which existing abnormal conditions render necessary, in no way detract from the force and importance of the unconditional most-favored-nation principle as the foundation of the rule of equality of treatment in international commercial relations. Discrimination and preference can only result in a diversion of trade from channels of economic benefit to channels of political influence and can provide but a weak and unsatisfactory basis for a restricted trade that is constantly at the mercy of political chance and change. Equality of treatment broadens and hastens the process of reduction of trade barriers. It offers the best general basis for restoring and expanding trade as an economically sound and universally beneficial process.

The firm determination on the part of the Government of the United States to reassert the rule of equality of treatment has already gone far to slow down the world's recent drift toward the chaos of discrimination and special advantage. We are doing everything in our power, through the trade-agreements program and through other channels of influence open to us, to induce the other great trading nations of the world to adopt a similar attitude toward the problem of a rehabilitation of world trade. In such rehabilitation lies the greatest single hope that the world may still be spared the tragedy of another destructive upheaval.

In brief, through our present foreign-trade program, we are attempting to increase trade by a mitigation of existing trade barriers and to restore trade to its accustomed economic channels by the reestablishment of the rule of equality of treatment in commercial relations. This twofold endeavor is directed first and foremost toward overcoming the emergency conditions which have resulted in drastic contraction and diversion of trade. The Trade Agreements Act is a temporary measure which was enacted primarily for the purpose of enabling us to deal effectively with this acute emergency.

Although experience has already demonstrated that, under existing circumstances, the negotiation of reciprocal-trade agreements represents the only constructive approach, in the field of commerce, to the problem of broad and sound economic recovery, there are some in this country who, without waiting for the economic emergency to be brought under control, demand the immediate repeal of the act and the abandonment of the trade agreements negotiated under its authority. Let us face squarely what that would mean. We would automatically go back to the Smoot-Hawley tariff and face once more the vicious discrimination against our trade which it caused and the virtually suicidal effort at economic self-containment which it represented. This futile and fatal course backward would involve a steadily increasing aggravation of regulation and regimentation in our economic life. Yet some of those who voice loudest their opposition to regimentation in general demand, at the same time, a commercial policy that would inevitably lead to such regimentation, and to a permanently increasing dole as well.

This is the real alternative to our present course of action. It would represent an inglorious surrender to the emergency that has overwhelmed us. Far from overcoming that emergency, it would deepen and widen the ravages of the maladjustments that constitute the very foundation of our present economic difficulties and of the existing threat to world peace. Our program, on the other hand, holds increasing promise of success in dealing with the grave exigency that confronts us at this time.

Through its trade-agreements program this country is furnishing its fair share of leadership in the world movement toward a restoration of mutually profitable international trade and, as a consequence, toward an improvement in the employment of labor, a fuller measure of stable domestic prosperity, and the only sound foundation for world peace. And we who are concerned with the execution of the program find special gratification in the fact that our effort in this direction has widespread support in the Nation as a whole. The press of this country, in its vast majority, has been clear-sighted enough to recognize the vital importance of the program. Great business organizations, like yours, have given us invaluable encouragement. With such inspiration to guide us, we shall go forward in our effort to bring peace and prosperity out of political tension and economic distress.

GOVERNOR LANDON—ADDRESS BY HON. GASPAR G. BACON

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an able and timely address on political subjects, delivered by former Lt. Gov. Gaspar G. Bacon, of Massachusetts, on April 26, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Why is it that Gov. Alfred M. Landon, of Kansas, is the outstanding choice in all parts of the country for the Republican nomination for President? Here are some of the reasons which have impressed me:

(1) Born in a small town in Pennsylvania, Landon went West with his family to seek greater opportunity. They settled in Kansas. There the boy grew up, and under the influence of sturdy environment, made his way in life unaided by anything except his own character. He has made himself what he is. A graduate of the University of Kansas, schooled in law, business, and the experience of life, he represents a fine example of what America can produce.

(2) There is a growing feeling that a man of his direct, straightforward, dependable type, holding fast to the fundamental principles of the American system of government, is the best bet, by way of contrast, to beat Roosevelt.

(3) Landon's friendly personality, genuineness, sound philosophy of government, and unusually successful record, have attracted the attention of a public bewildered and disillusioned by futile and damaging experimentation, and broken promises.

(4) He has captured the imagination of the rank and file. People instinctively trust him. He is not the candidate of any group of politicians. He has no political entanglements. He has no affiliations with any so-called vested interests.

(5) He is a typical product of the Middle West—the battleground of the coming campaign. He is familiar with the problems of the great agricultural section of the country. Almost unsolicited and without making any campaign, he has received the endorsement of the delegations of at least six of his neighboring States. His neighbors have thus manifested their confidence in him.

(6) He is liberal, independent, tolerant, and fair. He does not hesitate to give credit for whatever is good in the New Deal program. He is equally eager to root out the bad. He believes neither in blind partisanship nor in vindictive personalites.

(7) He appeals to youth. He is under 49 years of age himself. He represents new blood in the party, a fresh and invigorating point of view. He is progressive in thought. Young voters like him because he calls a spade a spade, hits straight from the shoulder, says what he means and does not say what he does not mean. He will not promise the millennium. His word is good.

(8) He appeals to the women voters. The women of Kansas flocked to him in his last campaign for Governor. His genuine personality, his charming wife and children and wholesome family life, are powerful political assets.

(9) His public record is unique. Elected Governor in 1932 by a 6,000 plurality, in a year when Roosevelt carried Kansas by 70,000, he was reelected in 1934 by 62,000, after an administration in which he did not hesitate to demand drastic measures of retrenchment. Under his leadership, Kansas has become a model State for sound, nonpolitical, financial management.

(10) For the accomplishments of his businesslike program, Landon has generously apportioned the credit. With the happiness of the people at stake, he has not indulged in partisanship. Politics, he has repeatedly said, have no place in the matter of relief. He has graciously referred to the devoted service rendered by the 8,000 public officials of the various Kansas cities, counties, towns, and school boards, who, under his leadership, and at a time when every unit of government in the country was struggling with increased expenditures, have succeeded in reducing the burdens imposed upon the taxpayers of Kansas.

(11) He is a firm believer in American institutions and American doctrines. He would not substitute them for any European form of centralized state. He has grown up in the school of rugged, self-reliant Americanism. Like Calvin Coolidge, he has learned his politics from the ground up. He has the innate and indispensable capacity not only of dealing with but of getting the best out of his associates and opponents.

(12) He has denounced the wrecking of the civil service under the present national administration. He would rebuild it and strengthen it so that trained and trustworthy and capable employees will feel secure in their jobs and young people offered a public career based upon merit and service.

(13) "The major task ahead", said Governor Landon, "is not more laws, or more programs, or more experimentation, but sound common-sense administration." The laws recently enacted by Congress must be digested and made to work, or amended, or repealed. The bad features must be eliminated, the good preserved. Above all, we must get rid of favoritism, fraud, and Farleyism.

(14) Landon is not a trained speaker. He has never taken lessons in the art of platform artifice. He has had no practice in the game of hyperbole. He believes in analysis rather than abuse; in sincerity rather than subterfuge. His words carry conviction.

(15) He does not pose as an intellectual giant. But, at this critical juncture in our national life, is not practical capacity more needed than intellectual superiority? The American people are looking for a leader of demonstrated ability to cope with the problems of government, and equipped with the character and judgment to choose as his associates and advisers the best talent available.

(16) Landon believes in the common people. Their combined wisdom, so he has stated, often exceeds that of their so-called intellectual superiors.

(17) Political judgment in a President is not different in kind in whatever field it is applied. The art of associating with human beings is fundamentally the same whether in domestic or foreign affairs. Landon has proven himself facile in this art. There is every reason to expect that he would use the same common sense in dealing with international as with home problems.

(18) In this campaign, which far transcends outworn party lines, those who believe in the American system of government as opposed to autocracy, in whatever form the latter may be disguised, are looking for a standard bearer who is broad-minded enough to lead new forces. Men and women of all shades of former political attachment have become impressed by Landon's qualifications.

(19) If we still have faith in a democratic form of government, we must oust those who would put in its place government by swollen bureaucrats. Landon, like Calvin Coolidge, is a champion of local self-government. He has faith in the capacity of the American people to stand on their own feet, to solve their own problems, free from compulsion from above.

(20) Landon has an inborn personal appeal. He has proved his campaigning ability. If given the opportunity, he will relentlessly drive home the truth. Without the tricks of oratory, or the blandishments of the demagogue, he will shoot straight at the target.

(21) To preserve the heritage of fair opportunity for all, and with this objective, to curb the deadening hand of government, we offer a virile leader in Alfred M. Landon, of Kansas.

BUSINESS AND TAXES—ADDRESS BY CLYDE L. KING

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address on the subject Business and Taxes, delivered by Dr. Clyde L. King, professor of political science, University of Pennsylvania, under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Economy League, on April 24, 1936, before the Society for the Advancement of Management.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Those who make money from business enterprises also pay Federal personal-income taxes. The present rate of surtaxes is, therefore, of general interest to all and of real concern to many. The rates run from 4 percent on that share of net income running from $4,000 to $6,000 per year, and runs up to 59 percent on net income over $1,000,000. The man with a net income of $1,000,000 per year pays, in addition to his normal 4 percent, a surtax each year of $553,000, or at the rate of 55.3 percent. He who has a net income of $2,000,000 per year pays $1,123,000 in Federal income surtaxes in addition to the normal tax rate of 4 percent. This is an average rate of 56½ percent on surtaxes only, or about an actual 60-percent tax, counting the normal tax, or an average of 63 percent on all income over $1,000,000. All net incomes of $90,000 or over bear a Federal personal income-tax rate of over 50 percent. These higher rates reflect more of the desire to distribute wealth through tax rates than a desire to levy rates that bring in the best net return.

In addition to these Federal rates the individual must pay personal income taxes levied by the States. The personal income-tax rates of 25 States now average 5.2 percent. Thus to a maximum Federal rate of 63 percent, including the normal 4-percent tax, one must now add 5.2 percent to get the total income tax paid as an average to the Federal Government and to the State governments. This is a total of 68.2 percent on the higher incomes. With certain States the total income tax will run much higher than this. Thus North Dakota levies a rate of 15 percent on all net incomes above $1,500. Hence, in North Dakota the total of State and Federal income taxes would take an average of 78 percent of any incomes over $1,000,000. Montana levies a rate of 25 percent on all incomes over $100,000. In Montana, therefore, the maximum rate for both Federal and State income taxes combined would run to 88 percent on the larger incomes.

The Federal rates are now so high as to make it difficult for the States to levy highly graduated personal-income taxes. The States, therefore, as a rule make lower exemptions than does the Federal Government in order to get some personal-income taxes without duplications. The Federal Government has already so preempted the income-tax field as to drive the States out of real rates on personal-income taxes. Moreover, the Federal surtax rates on the higher income brackets are so high now that future efforts must be at reducing them in order to get maximum tax returns. In any case, tax rates on the larger returns cannot be increased and be collected. Tax rates can be increased on the lower Federal returns, and Federal exemptions can be lowered. This change should have been made in 1934 as one means of advising more people how Federal expenditures were multiplying. But this change will not add over about $300,000,000 yearly to the total Federal returns. Granting higher incomes in the years just ahead, not over $500,000,000 can be secured by taxing lower incomes at higher rates and with lower exemptions. And this increase will in nowise be sufficient to take care of present Federal needs.

Businessmen who make money must also in time pay the Federal estate taxes. The Federal estate law now exempts $40,000 from the net estate subject to tax. The rates then run from 1 percent on estates having net values not in excess of $10,000 up to 60 percent on that share of any estate in excess of $10,000,000. The Federal tax on an estate worth $25,000,000 net is now $13,386,600. The British tax on a $25,000,000 estate is now $12,500,000. The British tax collects $10, or 1 percent, on an estate of $1,000. Moreover, in addition to the Federal tax rate, one must now pay the death taxes levied by the States, which is not the case in Great Britain. Our estate-tax rates total well above those in other countries.

Forty-two of the States now levy death taxes. The rates in most of the States run from 2 percent to 12 percent. The rates for collateral heirs in West Virginia and Wisconsin, however, reach 30 percent; in Arkansas, 40 percent; and in Nebraska, 50 percent. The Federal rates plus the rates in some of the States now take all the estate to pay death taxes. A more complete example of redistributing wealth through the taxing device could not be found. The rates are now confiscatory for the larger estates.

As to future trends, rates in the higher brackets cannot be increased without losing tax moneys. The pressure must be to lower exemptions and increase the rates in the lower values. This increase should have been made in 1934, but was perforce withheld for political reasons until after the next Presidential election. Such a trend in Federal taxes will again make it all the more difficult for the States to get additional income from their death taxes. The Federal Government has now preempted this field, long occupied by the States. Thus Pennsylvania has had an inheritance tax for 100 years. In 1929 one-third of this State's total revenues came from its inheritance taxes.

Many businessmen have carried heavy insurance to provide death taxes without the complete break down of their business estates.

In 1926 the Federal Government permitted any Federal estate-tax payer to deduct from Federal estate taxes due up to but not in excess of 80 percent of the Federal estate tax if so much had been paid to one or more States as death taxes. The States, most of them, at once changed their laws to take advantage of this clause. But this 80-percent clause does not apply to the heavy Federal estate rates passed in 1934. The heavier Federal and State rates now, therefore constitute double taxation.

The Congress in 1934 increased the rates on gifts in excess of $5,000 up to 52½ percent on all gifts in excess of $50,000,000. The actual net tax on a gift of $50,000,000 is now $24,271,950, or about 50 percent. To be exempt from this gift tax the gift must go for educational, charitable, or religious purposes. But to leave a gift to his son or to his widow or to his daughter, a man must now pay a gift tax that will usually run to about three-fourths of the tax on his estate of the same value.

Something could be said for these exorbitant rates as tax rates if Congress at the same time prohibited folks in the same family from dying oftener than 25 years apart. But Congress has not yet assumed jurisdiction over deaths. So a father may die 3 months after his grandfather leaves his estate to him, and his son may die 3 months after the father dies. Settling an estate three times in 6 months under present tax rates is better than a fire. Insurance can alleviate some of the business trouble if taken in time, but insurance cannot underwrite all the risks. Certain businesses must look well to the estate accounts of their major owners if they would maintain solvency.

Businessmen engaged in buying and selling intangibles, such as stocks and bonds; and businessmen engaged in the business of buying and selling tangible properties, such as real estate, before 1934 could have limited the rate on their personal income tax to 12½ percent on capital gains. Now not over $2,000 in losses can be deducted from profit and the personal gains pay the regular normal and the regular surtax rates. I was never for this change myself.

As set up in the Federal income-tax laws, the tax on capital net gains was a sort of an average tax to be levied for one or more of the following five purposes:

1. Tax on unearned increment.
2. Tax on changes in the purchasing power of the dollar.
3. Tax on speculation.
4. Tax on the business of buying or selling securities.
5. Tax on excess profits.

To be sure it was never a fair nor an accurate tax on any one of these five purposes. But it was a fairer tax by far than the piling up of the tax rates to the surtax basis as is now the case. Anyhow, these rates cannot be increased and get more net returns. They are at the maximum. The Federal Government has taken such heavy rates for itself that States have real difficulty now in adding their own rates to these exorbitant Federal rates.

Every corporate business now pays a direct Federal corporation tax on its net income ranging from 12 to 15 percent without any exemptions. Previous to 1934 the rate was a flat rate of 13¾ percent. Moreover, previous to 1932 a net income of $3,000 was exempt for those corporations having a gross income of not over $25,000. This exemption is now denied much to my personal regret, for I believe it better to exempt marginal businesses from such taxes. In addition to the rates of from 12 to 15 percent, depending upon the ratio of net income, corporations in 1934 were required to pay an excess-profits tax of 5 percent on the net income in excess of 12½ percent of the adjusted declared value of their stock.

The Congress is now also considering a proposal to tax heavily the undistributed profits of corporations in excess of stated amounts in order to force corporations to pay heavier dividends, and thus destroy their surplus funds. These dividends in many cases will fall upon individuals required to pay the higher and exorbitant surtax rates on their personal-income taxes. This policy is consistent with the general policies of those now controlling Government to pile ever heavier taxes on business units. A great deal can be said for a graduated corporate income tax in which the high rates of profit pay higher taxes. But in effect to tax out of existence the undivided profits of corporations is a sorry business, hard both on the Government on the one hand, and those who receive wages or dividends on the other. Uncle Sam himself now has on the Federal statute books security legislation which may bring security trust funds up to a total of forty-five to fifty-five billion dollars. The theory back of this Federal security fund is that laborers will put up moneys in advance of great depressions to save higher tax levies on taxpayers at depression times. If it is wise for Uncle Same to raise fifty billions for a reserve fund, to be spent in hard times, why is it wrong for corporations to hold reserve funds to keep up dividends and to maintain higher unit wages than would otherwise be possible in hard times?

Thus the Ford Motor Co. is one of a dozen corporations with a surplus at present of around a half billion dollars. Yet Henry Ford is noted for his efforts at maintaining high average earning rates among his employees. It cost Henry Ford over $200,000,000 to change his plants over from the machines, designs, and practices suitable to his old Model T to those machines, designs, and routing plans suitable to a more modern car. Is it wrong to permit Henry Ford to self-insure against such competitive risks by surplus funds? To my mind, reserve funds in private hands constitute a helpful service in hard times—a service that will make unnecessary the full use of the reserve funds Uncle Sam hopes to hold under the Federal security legislation passed a year ago.

In addition to paying existing Federal taxes on corporate incomes, corporations must now also pay the State corporate taxes. These State corporate taxes now run all the way from 2 percent or 3 percent up to 6 or 8 percent. This makes the total Federal and State corporate income tax amount to, say, 20 to 23 percent. Nearly three-fourths of the States now have such corporate income taxes. As the Federal rates grow higher, increasing of rates by the States grows evermore difficult, if not impossible. Moreover, the higher the tax the smaller amount the corporations can have for maintaining higher wage rates and the greater the pressure to lower wage rates. For under competitive conditions each corporation will not pass on to consumers all its taxes.

Another form of direct tax now levied on corporations is the tax on total pay rolls to provide the Federal funds for guaranteeing State security measures such as unemployment insurance and old-age pensions. The rate of tax for unemployment insurance is 1 percent on total annual pay rolls (when there are over eight on the pay rolls) for 1936; 2 percent for 1937; and 3 percent for 1938. The base for this tax, it must be remembered, is the total annual pay roll. The ratio of these pay rolls to gross sales differs among different kinds of businesses. Moreover, the only test of the tax is the total amount of pay rolls. Total pay rolls do not measure ability to pay taxes. They measure only the amount of wages paid. The share of total wages paid will be five times as much in the printing-publishing business as in the tobacco business. Moreover, within the same industry the amount of mechanization varies so that one competitor will have to pay a much heavier tax than others of his competitors will pay. And those with the heavier tax will usually be those with the least net income if any.

I have talked with a few folks who feel that this tax will be added to prices and be shifted to consumers. For the life of me I cannot see how that can be. For the burden of the tax is not the same on all competitors in the same industry. I think the tax in most instances will in part at least be absorbed by reducing the number of employees to a point where the total thus saved will about equal the tax. I feel confident others will pass the tax back to all wage earners by reducing wages or by not increasing wages in proportion as prices rise. In either case the burden is shifted to labor, and will be kept on labor.

Two reasons force me to this conclusion. The first reason is that not all competitors pay the same burden with reference to net income. In the corporate net income tax there is no burden unless there is net income. But this is not the case with a tax on pay rolls. If some can pass on all their burdens on pay-roll taxes, others can then pass on to consumers more than they pay out in taxes. That is not the way competition works. Competition gives to the competitor with lowest costs the chance to put his prices down so that his net profit will go up. Thus I know of folks now, and you folks know of many others, who will not reduce wages, cannot increase prices, cannot afford to pay the pay-roll tax but have the ability to borrow money to install more labor-saving machinery. This new labor-saving machinery will permit these businesses to fire enough employees to save the taxes on their pay rolls. The tax, therefore, becomes a means of insuring more unemployment and not primarily a means to provide insurance against unemployment.

My second reason for believing a pay-roll tax cannot be shifted to consumers lies in the fact that we are creditor country. A creditor country is one that loans abroad much more money than it borrows abroad. This flows from the fact that, as now in this country, most industries have plenty of capital already invested to supply domestic needs fully and, also, a surplus to use for supplying goods and services to other countries. Just because a creditor country has plenty of capital to make goods for the citizens of other countries we have a surplus of labor for domestic needs. As a rule, in the years to come labor will, therefore, perforce be on the weaker side of the bargain counter. Taxes not falling equally on the ability of competitors in identical industries to pay will, therefore, rather easily be shifted back to wage earners. What business cannot pay because of the way the tax is levied, labor must itself pay. Hence the plan forces a bitter struggle toward lower wage-earning levels.

The creation of these huge reserve funds will also raise questions of far more serious character in our next major crisis. I have no doubt that seasonal unemployment can be ironed out by reserve funds. But the larger the funds, the greater the disaster when the next big crisis comes. Things will be easier for the first months of the next crisis, possibly for the first 2 or 3 years. But the time may come when not even Federal bonds can be sold in such quantities in hard times to keep up insurance payments. Federal bankruptcy will then again be postponed only, if at all, by ever heavier taxes. But taxes, too, have their limits, though only after great hardships. Then comes the crisis. It comes quickly. It comes hard, just because the great old Federal Government itself can neither sell the bonds nor raise the taxes needed to keep up State payments. The intervening days will be easier, but the ultimate day spells grave hardship on wage earners and the gravest kind of hardship to everyone else. Those who think they have something will wake up to find some morning that they have nothing. Hence the numbers on relief will increase in great bounds, as it has already in other countries in similar crises.

Such are the only Federal taxes time permits me to discuss at this luncheon. Thus far Federal taxes have brought in in cash about half of the total expenditures made by this administration. The Federal taxes are heavy but they must get heavier. They must get heavier in the future just because the surplus of Federal expenditures over Federal income has been made up by borrowing. The total direct Federal debt by June 30 next will be about $35,000,000,000. Before we begin another Federal administration, the direct Federal debt will, under present commitments, be at least $40,000,000,000. But this is only the direct Federal debt.

It does not include other obligations, such as the Federal security reserves that may reach $50,000,000,000. It does not include the funds needed in time of crisis to insure Federal guarantee of 98 percent of all deposits as is now guaranteed by Federal law. The only way to guarantee deposits is to guarantee the income of those businesses in which the banks invest money or from which they buy stocks or bonds. The present direct Federal debt assumes no share of the obligations in underwriting rival and urban mortgages in large sums. Our Federal obligations now vastly exceed our direct Federal debt. And it is the total of obligations of all kinds that will be considered when the next showdown comes.

Some of my friends have said to me that we ought at least to be able to stand a per-capita Federal debt equal to that now being supported in England, and that is about $785 per capita. To our forty billions of direct debt, we must add twenty billions now of State and local debts. When to this $60,000,000,000 of direct debt we now add the indirect obligations already assumed not shared in other countries, we will find that we now have debts and obligations per capita quite the equal of the unprecedented per-capita debt in England.

The usual answer to the rising American debt is that our debt is not as great as that of other countries still solvent. France, we are told, is still on a gold basis. France, however, repudiated 80 percent of both her public and private bonds and stocks but a decade ago. Today she is fighting hard to maintain on a gold basis even that 20 percent. She cannot now, therefore, fight Germany, as everybody knows, without repudiating most, if not all, of both her present public and private debts of all kinds. Great Britain has repudiated, in fact, about 40 percent of her public and private obligations by depreciating the pound by that ratio. She depreciated her pound to save the formal repudiation of her public debts in part.

The United States has taken 41 cents out of the gold dollar, thereby repudiating already in fact 41 percent of the purchasing power of every bond or stock in the United States. And the President still has power to take 9 cents more out of every gold dollar without additional legislation from Congress. Germany repudiated all her public debts and all her private debts a dozen years ago, and now again today has public debts beyond her ability to put into long-term bonds. For one-third of the new Germany debt made under Hitler is still in 3 months' notes. Germany cannot make war now without repudiating in whole or in part all those debts, all her local debts, all her debts abroad, and all her private intangibles, for private debts are payable only in the same legal tender as are public debts. Japan has so inflated her currency that she can now make no substantial war except by repudiation in whole or in part of all her public debts and all her private debts payable in the present currency. Italy has set the limits as to her present war debts by her existing public debts.

Is this country to look forward to the same situation where a new crisis presents claims that cannot be met even by borrowing? Are we to go into the next crisis with public debts so heavy that more moneys can be borrowed if at all only by repudiating the old in part, if not entirely? Are we to stay in a hysteria for public spending so far beyond income that unanchored inflation must follow? Who can now tell how long it will be before faith in the American dollar starts to go down so fast that prices will rise at a rate far beyond the purchasing power of wages or of salaries or of interest or other kinds of fixed income? That is the danger we are now playing with.

The present Congress shows not the faintest evidence of understanding the present dangers. With budgets already long in excess of income, this Congress goes ahead energetically to pass appropriations far beyond any ever heretofore made in a peace year. But 20 short years ago the American people were objecting to what they then called a "billion-dollar Congress." Total Federal expenditures for 10 years before 1914 ran around three-fourths of a billion dollars per year. We now have a Congress that for 3 years has spent $10 in 1 year for every dollar that the whole Federal Government cost before the World War. Then they raise half of that enormous amount by direct long-term public debts! Certainly no one need be told that that cannot be continued forever.

On December 31, 1935, the assets of all member banks of the Federal Reserve System totaled $44,122,000,000. Of this sum 30 billion dollars ($29,984,874,000) were in loans and investments. Over one-third ($10,500,527,000) of these investments were in Federal bonds; that is, in direct Federal obligations only. On December 31, 1930, 5 years before, when the assets of these member banks totaled 47 billion dollars ($47,057,891,000) and when their loans and investments totaled 35 billion dollars ($34,859,500,000) these banks owned $4,124,776,000 in direct Federal obligations, or a little less than 12 percent of their total intangible investments. This is an increase of nearly 300 percent in 5 years in the ratio of Federal bonds held by Reserve banks to their totals in loans and investments. It is obvious that this increase cannot keep up indefinitely without making it inevitable that even a 20-percent decline in the market value of Federal bonds will throw many banks into insolvency. Indeed, it can be said now that the very solvency of the national banks already depends on the solvency of the national credit. As the present ratio of Federal bonds held by banks increases, the banks will shortly be largely dependent for good safety on the market for Federal bonds. Even now Federal bonds are not being marketed to individual owners fast enough to meet current Federal needs. The time must come, therefore, when the market for Federal bonds will be maintained only by increasing taxes or by printing more and more paper money.

The amount of taxes that can be raised will be limited to the political necessity of getting reelected and will not be based on proper principles of public finance. Under such facts inflation soon gets started. Since the real question is the question in the Congressman's mind as to how best to assure election or reelection, the date when inflation starts cannot be definitely fixed by me. But certain it is that that date cannot be indefinitely postponed under present practices. Since there is a limit to the amount of taxes a Congressman can vote for and be reelected, public expenditures ought at once to be reduced to known public income. Not to do so is to court complete destruction of all intangibles, both public and private, in the United States. Another Congress like the present one, profligate in expenditures, careless in income, must bring us very close to national bankruptcy.

Germany entered into the first phase of her inflation with moderation and with a determination not to allow inflation. She had many obligations growing out of the World War that required more money annually than the German people could or would pay out in taxes. In 1920 new marks in circulation increased by 50 percent over the marks outstanding at the beginning of the year. In 1921 new marks issued increased the amount outstanding by 50 percent. And so again in 1922. German domestic prices rose slowly during these 3 years, but yet at a rate quite as rapid as this increase in paper currency. Prices started to break away during the last 3 months of 1922. During 1922 they rose almost perpendicularly. During 1923 prices rose so fast that the mark could buy little or nothing. In December of 1923 prices were 1,262,000,000,000 times their 1913 level. By December of 1923 the number of marks issued was 81,810,000,000 times the number outstanding in 1913. In December of 1923 the currency circulation in Germany was 230,000,000 times the amount outstanding in the previous January of that same year. People had plenty of marks, but the marks bought nothing. Once inflation started it went like an old-fashioned prairie fire. To chart the rise in prices in 1923 over previous years would have required a chart 289,000 miles high.

We have as yet had no signs of such unanchored inflation in this country, save in the fact that Federal expenditures for 3 years have vastly exceeded income. Such a trend cannot continue without reaching a point where people doubt that enough taxes will be raised (not can be raised) to pay the interest, retire the bonds and meet expected public expenditures in the future. When that lack of confidence will come I do not know. But that it must come all must agree just so long as total expenditures exceed total public tax income at present rates. And when that day comes prices will rise incredibly fast, as they rose in Germany.

The taxpayer is now the forgotten man, so let me say a few technical words about his payments. Government does not and cannot "create" credit. Expenditures by Government can come only from reducing the income of private individuals. Private individuals give up their power to spend their own income to the extent they pay taxes or loan moneys to the Government by buying public bonds. When a business pays a tax—any tax, corporate or other—it provides the money to pay its taxes by reducing the amount of money it can pay individuals, whether in wages, in dividends, in interest, or in profits. A business does not make more money by paying more taxes. It makes less money by paying part of its income for public services. Those public services may not be worth more even as a public service than the same amount of income devoted to one's own private business might bring. The individual pays taxes by cutting down on his own expenditures by fully the amount of the tax. Taxes always reduce private expenditures to make public expenditures possible. Most folks feel that such collective expenditures as for schools and roads are worth the reduction in their private income made necessary by taxes. But few feel that all of present expenditures are worth more than their own personal expenditures would be to the well-being of their country.

In wartime public expenditures can be used to turn private expenditures into war purposes. Private income must then be reduced either by taxes or by purchasing war bonds so that the national income can more largely be directed toward one given end: victory through war. But such is not the case with borrowing in times of depression to regain prosperity. Private expenditures are just as essential to secure prosperity as are public expenditures, nay, more so. Public expenditures can and should provide a minimum income for those without the means of self-support. But prosperity cannot come, and never did come, from such minimum incomes. This income thus given to those unable or unwilling to work will buy food and necessities. But it cannot provide prosperity. At the very best, public expenditures form a small portion of the total national income, now, say, 15 percent. Prosperity can be best assured, therefore, by keeping down taxes so that individuals can and will spend more.

Neither is it true that present public expenditures add to total income nor will in the future. Neither is it true that present public expenditures have aided prosperity. Most of them, on the contrary, have retarded long-term prosperity. Certain business and private expenditures create the funds to reproduce themselves. Public expenditures, as a rule, do not reproduce themselves. We have the flash of the first expenditure. All following expenditures come only by reducing by an equal amount the income of individuals.

Nor does borrowing in the long run save the taxpayer money. On the contrary, public borrowing at the least costs twice as much as cash payments. For the taxpayer must pay both the interest and the principal. The interest at 4 percent will amount to the principal in 25 years, or at 3 percent will amount to the principal in 33⅓ years.

Interest cannot be less than 3 percent and assure either savings or prosperity. For people will not save at less than 3 percent. And there can be no real prosperity so long as money is worth but 3 percent. Moreover, our present Federal debt alone is already so large that it cannot be repaid in 25 or 30 or even 50 years. The Federal debt by June 1 will amount to $35,000,000,000, and shortly after that to $40,000,000,000. Three-percent interest on $40,000,000,000 is $1,200,000,000. To pay off a debt of $40,000,000,000 in 40 years will mean an average of $1,000,000,000 each year in payment on principal. The Federal debt in interest and in payments on principal will, therefore, take over $2,000,000,000 per year, or 55 percent of our present Federal-tax income of $3,700,000,000. To that we are already committed. We now must raise much heavier taxes at the very time when Congress refuses to increase taxes that may have bad political effect in most of the States at the coming election. We will be fortunate indeed if we get by without taking 60 percent of our present Federal-tax income to pay for Federal debts. The longer we keep on borrowing the greater the share of future Federal taxes that must be devoted to interest and repayments on the public debt. Present borrowing is not saving the taxpayer money. It doubles, trebles, and quadruples the money he must ultimately pay and pay by cutting down on his own purchases. And cutting down on his own purchases reduces correspondingly his own ability to buy and thus delays and decreases the possibility of real and continuing prosperity. It is unfair and inhuman for one generation to burden so heavily the youth of the next.

Two ways have been practiced for assuring communism. One is the method used in Russia. By this method you shoot all owners of property and all with large incomes. Then, through a huge spy system, you find all those who may remotely believe in incomes and those who are even remotely against the Government and kill or exile them. You then set up a despotism that continues every one of the worst methods used in the old czar system.

By the second method you get political power through granting huge sums of taxpayers' money to different groups and then tax away all real semblance of income to pay for the debts thus created. The second method is the inevitable consequence of our present policy of continuing a heavily unbalanced Budget. One does not have to pass upon the present motives of any of those now responsible for such Budgets. But no one who cares for the public interest can fail to realize the economic consequence of present debt-piling methods on the economic well-being of individuals and of public service in this country.

I wish I had time to discuss present expenditures in detail. But I must say that I believe the needs of those hungry and without work or other source of income should be met by Government. I believe that those able and willing to work should have real work in creating needed public works not beyond the future ability of taxpayers to maintain. But such expenditures should take a small part of the present total Budget. There is not a man here who cannot reduce present public expenditures and improve the public welfare by so doing.

This country has had a slower return to normal business than has any other country. The reason for this slothful delay lies in the character of public expenditures we are making. Wanton expenditures for "work" which means no effort only causes those who receive such moneys to think that Uncle Sam can be Santa Claus. Personal responsibility in those folks must be killed for years to come. Expenditures now are made in folly to compete with private business and thus again delay the return of prosperity.

Because of these expenditures and the borrowing to meet them, taxes must mount higher and higher. But higher taxes do not mean economic security; they mean economic insecurity. The only answer is to stop now useless and harmful expenditures. And that should be the first job of all who look to the future well-being of their country.

VAN A. BITTNER

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a self-explanatory letter which I have received from Hon. Van E. Bittner, president of District No. 17, United Mine Workers of America.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Charleston, W. Va., April 28, 1936.

Hon. M. M. NEELY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have read with keen interest and a feeling of humiliation the remarks of Senator RUSH D. HOLT, of West Virginia, beginning on page 5771, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Tuesday, April 21, 1936. Humiliation, because I gave every ounce of energy and influence that I possessed to nominate and elect Mr. HOLT to the United States Senate. I realize that it is a delicate position for me to answer these charges made by a United States Senator, who has taken advantage of his official position to attack me on the floor of that great legislative body—the Senate. However, I trust that the Senate will pardon me in keeping the records clear, and no man can condemn me for defending my loyalty to my union, which is dearer to me than life itself.

First. When he states that he met me on five different occasions, and each time I asked him not to fight Walter Thurmond—that statement is absolutely untrue. I talked to Senator HOLT twice on this matter, both times having witnesses to our conversations, and my only request was that he keep his pledge to me and the citizens of West Virginia, that he would support the man who had appointed Mr. Thurmond, Senator M. M. NEELY, for reelection in 1936. I hold no brief for the activities of Mr. Walter Thurmond during the mine troubles in southern West Virginia, but all I was interested in, when I talked to Senator HOLT, and all I am interested in now, is the reelection of one of the greatest friends our union has ever had in the United States Senate, Hon. M. M. NEELY. Senator HOLT knew that Walter Thurmond was collector of internal revenue during his nomination and election as United States Senator, and he knows that Walter Thurmond donated $500 to defray his campaign expenses. Therefore, it seems to me that it is poor taste for Senator HOLT to attack me over Walter Thurmond, as collector of internal revenue, when he gladly accepted from this same gentleman $500. Senator HOLT or no other man living can ever say that I accepted any money from any coal operator or any coal operator's agent, or any other man living, except that which I receive from my union, the United Mine Workers of America.

Second. Senator HOLT charges me with betraying the interests of the miners when the so-called scrip bill was pending before the last session of the Legislature of West Virginia. This bill did not abolish the issuance of scrip by coal operators, but simply made scrip legal tender. I was against this bill because all my life I have fought for the miners to be paid for their labors in United States currency. Senator HOLT knows this is true, as I explained my position to him when this bill was pending in the Legislature of West Virginia, and he fully agreed with my position.

Third. Senator HOLT attempts to interfere with the internal affairs of my union when he talks about the so-called autonomy of the district organization. The United Mine Workers of America is the most democratic labor union on the face of the earth; delegates are elected by the members of each local union to attend our great international conventions. This congress of the United Mine Workers of America assembled in the city of Washington, D. C., settled all the policies that guide the officers of the organization. The question of autonomy was thoroughly discussed and definitely settled and we resent the intrusion of Senator HOLT, for political reasons, into the affairs of our union after its policies have been settled in our international convention, as prescribed by the laws of our organization. Furthermore, let me say that Senator HOLT made no attacks on me when I was giving my money, my time, and my influence in supporting him as a candidate for the United States Senate, and while I do not want to say it boastingly, Senator HOLT knows that no one man living was more responsible for his nomination and election than I was.

Fourth. Senator HOLT says we supported Mr. C. E. Smith, of Fairmont, W. Va., for a position as member of the National Bituminous Coal Commission. Mr. C. E. Smith also gave of his time and money for the election of RUSH D. HOLT to the United States Senate, and Senator HOLT considered Mr. C. E. Smith one of his most influential supporters and confidential advisers on political matters until Mr. C. E. Smith was proposed as a member of the National Bituminous Coal Commission by Senator M. M. NEELY. Furthermore, the International Convention of the United Mine Workers of American, held in Washington, D. C., at a time when Senator HOLT was opposing the confirmation of Mr. C. E. Smith, by unanimous vote asked the United States Senate to confirm the appointment of Mr. C. E. Smith and all other members of the National Bituminous Coal Commission in order that the great coal stabilization program of our Federal Government could be made effective. If we are charged with betraying the interests of our people by conforming with the unanimous action of the delegates to our international conventions, then all we can say is that as a loyal member and officer of the United Mine Workers of America it shall ever be our purpose to carry out the policies of our international conventions.

Fifth. Senator HOLT also charges that I am trying to sacrifice labor to build up my own selfish and personal career. It seems to me that this is a complete exemplification of man's inhumanity to man. The day Senator HOLT announced his candidacy for the United States Senate I gave him every penny I had, $1,500, to help him in his campaign. If endorsing and working with all the vigor and intelligence I have for the reelection of our great humanitarian President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, is trying to sacrifice labor and build up my own selfish and personal career, then I plead guilty to the charge. If my support of Hon. M. M. NEELY, who has been endorsed by every legitimate labor organization in America for reelection, including the American Federation of Labor, the United Mine Workers of America, the 21 standard railway labor organizations, and the West Virginia State Federation of Labor, is trying to sacrifice labor and build up my own selfish and personal career, then I plead guilty to the charge.

Sixth. On August 26, 1935, just prior to the time that Senator RUSH D. HOLT entered his campaign against Senator M. M. NEELY, I received the following letter, which is self-explanatory and should prove to every Member of the United States Senate and every well-thinking American, that Senator HOLT's tirade against me is nothing but selfish political propaganda, made up of the whole cloth without foundation in fact.

The letter follows:

"UNITED STATES SENATE,
"COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS,
"August 25, 1935.

"Hon. VAN A. BITTNER,
"United Mine Workers of America, Charleston, W. Va.

"DEAR MR. BITTNER: Please express to the United Mine Workers of America meeting on Labor Day my sincere best wishes. It is through organized labor that working conditions have been improved, wages have been increased, and everyone has profited.

"You are indeed fortunate to have with you as your speaker John L. Lewis. He is an outstanding labor leader and his message will be worth hearing. It is with regret that I cannot be with you on this day, but I have already accepted an invitation to speak to the Labor Day celebration held by the trade crafts of Detroit.

"I wish also to say that in Frank Miley and yourself the labor movement has two officials who have fought vigorously and valiantly for their welfare. You are to be congratulated.

"If I can be of service to the organized labor movement, do not hesitate to call upon me.

"Sincerely,
"RUSH D. HOLT."

This is my answer to the charges of Senator RUSH D. HOLT.

Very respectfully yours,

VAN A. BITTNER.

PREVENTION OF UNFAIR PRACTICES AND MISLEADING ADVERTISING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3744) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, which the clerk will state.

The Chief Clerk stated the amendment, which was in section 3, on page 12, after line 6, to strike out—

(1) The Congress hereby confers upon the Commission so much of the auxiliary power of Congress to obtain information in aid of legislation as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out the provisions of section 6.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That section 6 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the Commission shall have power—

"(a) Upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress, or upon its own initiative, to gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business conduct, business practices, and business management of any person, partnership, or corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks, and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, and the relation of such person, partnership, or corporation to other individuals, partnerships, and corporations.

"(b) To require, by general or special orders, persons, partnerships, or corporations engaged in commerce, excepting banks, and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, or any class of them, or any of them, respectively, to file with the Commission in such form as the Commission may prescribe annual or special, or both annual and special, reports or answers in writing to specific questions, furnishing to the Commission such information as it may require as to the organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations, partnerships, and individuals of the respective persons, partnerships, and corporations filing such reports or answers in writing. Such reports and answers shall be made under oath, or otherwise, as the Commission may prescribe, and shall be filed with the Commission within such reasonable period as the Commission may prescribe, unless additional time be granted in any case by the Commission.

"(c) To investigate, from time to time, trade conditions in and with foreign countries where associations, combinations, or practices of manufacturers, merchants, or traders, or other conditions, may affect the foreign trade of the United States, and to report to Congress thereon, with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

"(d) Upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress, to investigate and report the facts relating to any alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any person, partnership, or corporation.

"(e) Upon the application of the Attorney General, to investigate and make recommendations for the readjustment of the business of any person, partnership, or corporation alleged to be violating the antitrust acts, in order that the corporation may thereafter maintain his or its organization, management, and conduct of business in accordance with law.

"(f) Whenever a final decree has been entered against any defendant person, partnership, or corporation in any suit brought by the United States to prevent and restrain any violation of the antitrust acts, to make investigations, upon its own initiative, of the manner in which the decree has been or is being carried out, and upon the application of the Attorney General it shall be its duty to make such investigation. It shall transmit to the Attorney General a report embodying its findings and recommendations as a result of any such investigation, and the report shall be made public, in the discretion of the Commission.

"(g) To make public from time to time such portions of the information obtained by it hereunder, except trade secrets and names of customers, as it shall deem expedient in the public interest; and to make annual and special reports to the Congress and to submit therewith recommendations for additional legislation; and to provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use.

"(h) From time to time to classify persons, partnerships, or corporations, and to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to; and, without objection, the bill will be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not understand what bill it was that was just passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate just adopted the committee amendment to Senate bill 3744.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think there should be an explanation of the bill. The Senator from Montana, I believe, is prepared to make a statement regarding it. I know that there are a number of Senators who would like to have the bill considered. So I suggest to the Senator from Montana that he proceed with the discussion.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry. I am fairly rapid on my feet, but I confess as I followed what has happened this morning I was very dilatory. The bill has been passed, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not. The committee amendment was agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought I heard the Chair say that the bill was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair said, without objection, the bill would be ordered engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed; but a number of Senators were on their feet, and, therefore, the bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wanted to make that clear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, in view of some statements which have been made in certain newspaper articles and propaganda which has been sent out, I wish to call attention to an article appearing in the Washington Herald of May 1 containing, among others, the following statement:

> Virtually making the Commission an arm of Congress, the Wheeler bill provides that "Congress hereby confers upon the Commission so much of the auxiliary power of Congress to obtain information in aid of legislation as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out the provisions of section 6."

That provision was stricken from the bill in the committee and is no longer in the bill. That was one of the things to which serious objection was offered, and accordingly the committee took it out of the bill.

The present bill is a reenactment of the present law upon the statute books with comparatively few amendments which the Federal Trade Commission has recommended, not for the purpose of adding to their powers but for the purpose of aiding them in carrying out their present powers.

It should be recalled that when the Federal Trade Commission was established the Federal Government entered an entirely new field of activity and undertook a form of regulation with which it had no previous experience. The legislation which was finally approved was largely a measure of compromises, emerging from a particularly long and bitter legislative controversy. This was over 20 years ago. In those 20 years the courts have examined very carefully all the provisions of the act and have interpreted it in a variety of ways.

In the early years of its existence the Commission fared rather badly in the courts and its work was hampered by many reversals and judicial restrictions. However, in recent years, with improvements in personnel and with accumulating experience, the Commission has been sustained in the circuit courts and the Supreme Court, I believe, in 31 out of 32 cases. This record has been made in spite of the language of the act which has been interpreted to invite complete judicial review not only of the legal questions but of the facts.

In the course of 20 years there are certain to crop up ambiguities and technical difficulties in the administration of such a statute. It is amazing to me that there are not more when I recall the pulling and hauling that attended its enactment. The bill under consideration is solely for the purpose of removing some of these ambiguities and technicalities which made administration difficult and costly. It does not change the fundamentals of the act in the slightest, and with the possible exception of one amendment to section 5, is addressed only to the procedural rights and duties of the Commission.

This is the first time the act has been amended since its enactment, and the bill merely attempts to smooth out a few of the kinks which must inevitably creep into 22 years of administration in a hitherto unfamiliar field.

May I invite the attention of the Senate to an editorial appearing in the Wall Street Journal, with reference to the bill. The Wall Street Journal of Wednesday, April 22, 1936, said:

[From the Wall Street Journal of Apr. 22, 1936]

CUTTING OFF A DIRTY FRINGE

> Perhaps the mills of the Federal Trade Commission gods grind slowly, but they grind not only fine but steadily. Not many a sun sets without the Commission having taken action against one to a dozen individuals, partnerships, or corporations accused by their competitors of practicing "unfair methods of competition."
> Such complaints come from sources which are palpably interested, but the proportion of them which are followed by the accused's consent to a cease-and-desist order is impressive, to put it mildly. One cannot observe the daily record of this division of the Commission's work without concluding that here the Commission is performing an extremely valuable service in cleaning up some of the alleys and side streets of American business much in need of moral sanitation.
> Most of those against whom the Commission is called upon to proceed, though not all, are comparatively small fry. Even so, one cannot see without a feeling of shame how many there are who are willing to profit, if they can, by stealing another's laboriously erected commercial repute, making baseless pretences of large-scale production or distribution and fictitious claims to extraordinarily low selling prices, or deliberately misrepresenting the specific qualities of things offered for sale.
> This record is one of individually small-scale but multitudinous attempts at gross and conscious fraud. It is vastly regrettable that American business should have this dirty fringe. Since it has, it is well that the Commission is there to cut off the soiled ravelings as they are disclosed.

That, as a matter of fact, states the situation in connection with the powers of the Commission both under the present law and as proposed under the pending bill. The bill seeks to reach only those instances of misrepresentation and fraud on the part of some business interests which seek to tear down legitimate enterprises and make it necessary oftentimes for legitimate enterprises to turn to tactics to which they would not otherwise resort.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the bill confer new powers on the Federal Trade Commission, so that no longer it will be confined in its operations to unfair competitive methods; or does it go beyond that to permit the Commission to deal with any problem where the question of gross deceit is involved?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know just the extent to which the proponents of the original legislation intended the act to apply. I do know, however, that they anticipated no restrictions as rigid as those the courts have applied to it.

In interpreting the phrase "unfair methods of competition", the Supreme Court held that notwithstanding the fact that the advertisement of some particular thing might result in injury to the general public, nevertheless the Commission was powerless to stop the advertisement or practice unless it could show that some competitor was injured in dollars and cents. Judge Davis, of the Commission, who was formerly a Member of the House of Representatives, stated before the committee that while in many cases an advertisement would be palpably unfair, fraudulent, and bad, and a competitor of the manufacturer would say to the Commission, "The man who is advertising this particular piece of goods is deceiving the public by it; he is lying about his product; as a matter of fact, the product is harmful", yet when the Commission would turn to him and say, "Can you show that you have lost money in dollars and cents as a result?" he would stand back and say, "Well, that is a pretty difficult thing for me to show. I think I have lost money by it, but to put my finger on it and to say that I have actually lost particular business is a difficult thing."

For instance, in the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co. (283 U. S. 643), the Supreme Court says:

> Findings, supported by evidence, warrant the conclusion that the preparation is one which cannot be used generally with safety to physical health except under medical direction and advice. If the necessity of protecting the public against dangerously misleading advertisements of a remedy sold in interstate commerce were all that is necessary to give the Commission jurisdiction, the order could not successfully be assailed. But this is not all.
> By the plain words of the act the power of the Commission to take steps looking to the issue of an order to desist depends upon the existence of three distinct prerequisites: (1) That the methods complained of are unfair; (2) that they are methods of competition in commerce; and (3) that a proceeding by the Commission to prevent the use of the methods appears to be in the interest of the public. We assume the existence of the first and third requisites and pass at once to the consideration of the second.

So the Supreme Court held in that case that notwithstanding it was shown that the use of the product was detrimental and injurious to the health of the general public unless it was used under the orders of a doctor, the Commission was powerless to do anything because it had not been shown that any competitor had actually lost dollars and cents as a result of the sale of the product; and so far as that is concerned, there might not be any competitor. The only change made by this bill is to remedy that condition.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, as a matter of fact, the bill does make it possible for the Commission, on its own initiative, to go further than simply to deal with the question of an unfair competitive practice?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. For example, suppose some concern put out a line of spices. We will say that they were pure, unadulterated spices, but that the package in which a given spice was packed was slack-filled, only half-filled. Suppose the concern put out a great big package, so as to give the housewife the impression that she was getting a whole lot of cinnamon or whatever the spice might be. Under the present law, as I understand, the Federal Trade Commission would be powerless to proceed against the manufacturer or merchandiser of slack-filled packages of that sort, unless some competing concern considered itself damaged by the unfair practices of the concern putting out the slack-filled packages. Under the pending bill could the Federal Trade Commission, on its own initiative, go to the concern putting out slack-filled packages of spices and order it to cease and desist a practice which was contrary to the public welfare?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; the Commission could do exactly that. They could do it at the present time providing they could show that some competitor had been injured.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I understand.

Mr. WHEELER. They could undoubtedly show that some company had been injured in the case the Senator specifies; but the complaint is that they have to spend more time and incur more expense in showing that somebody has been actually injured than in showing that the use of the product is detrimental to the public.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator, at his convenience, point out in the bill where that particular new power is conferred upon the Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I am coming to that specifically in the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the important modification lie in the fact that the original act treated the Federal Commission more as a court between private individuals, whereas the amendment recognizes the interest of the public, and recognizes the public as a party to the proceeding?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Therefore, there need not be shown any private injury in a particular case; but if the use of the product is calculated to injure the public, the Commission may intervene?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. Let me say to the Senator that a reading of the earlier debates of Congress shows that Congress, as a matter of fact, thought it was doing the very thing the Senator has just mentioned; but after the fight that was waged over the bill this particular construction was put upon the phrase "unfair methods of competition."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has raised exactly the point I have in my mind; and I will frame the question in a different way:

Can the Commission on its own initiative, in the public interest, proceed against a concern because its methods are grossly deceptive?

Mr. WHEELER. It can.

Mr. COPELAND. That is the provision I should like to have the Senator point to in the bill so that we may know where it is found.

Mr. WHEELER. It is section 2 of the present bill. If the Senator will look on page 3, he will see that section 2 reads as follows:

> That section 5 of said act—
> The act of September 26, 1914—
> be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:
> The present law reads as follows:
> That unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful.
> The amendment that we put in makes it read:
> That unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce, are hereby declared unlawful.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The new part is "and unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce"?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In connection with the example given by the Senator from New York in his interrogatory, it seemed to me he was dealing with a subject to which we gave great attention in the new Food and Drug Act. May I inquire whether this bill integrates with the Food and Drug Act?

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly. I am glad the Senator called my attention to that, for this reason: In the Food and Drug Act, as I understand, it is provided that if the advertisement on the package contains a misrepresentation or a deceitful and fraudulent statement the offender may be prosecuted criminally. I think I am correct about that. The Food and Drug Act, as I recall, reached only what was on the package or what was included in the package; but the members of the Federal Trade Commission tell me that frequently they find that there is no deceptive advertisement or misrepresentation on the package, but that in some newspaper advertisement—not advertisements in the best newspapers, but in various cheap newspapers in the country—they find all kinds of misrepresentations with reference to that particular product. What happens when that occurs?

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. GERRY. Would not the manufacturers be liable if they did that?

Mr. WHEELER. Not under the Food and Drug Act.

Mr. GERRY. But would they not be liable under the common law?

Mr. WHEELER. I doubt it.

Mr. GERRY. Why not?

Mr. WHEELER. Because of the fact that there is no common-law criminal statute under which they could be prosecuted. It is necessary to have a Federal statute in order to reach them. The only basis for a common-law fraud action is a "passing off."

Mr. GERRY. Suppose a person suffered injury as a result.

Mr. WHEELER. If he suffered injury, he probably could sue them for damages; but it is a pretty difficult thing for an individual to sue. He may not have any money. He may be located in Rhode Island, and the company which puts out the product may be located in Chicago, and the Senator's constituent in Rhode Island would have to go to Chicago to bring suit against the company. He would have to go to tremendous expense, and he never could recover. He would be tied up in court and could not reach the company.

Mr. GERRY. Would he have to go to Chicago?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course he would, because the only place where he could get service on the company would be in Chicago, where the product was manufactured.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think the Senator from Montana has been quite responsive either to the Senator from Michigan or to the Senator from Rhode Island. The distinction between the Food and Drug Act and this measure lies in the fact that the Food and Drug Act as it was passed through the Senate has to do wholly with the matter of health. If a concern is putting out a harmful product, or making fraudulent claims for it, and that product is sold in interstate commerce, the false advertiser may be proceeded against because of the fraudulent claims. This bill goes further than the Food and Drug Act, however, as I understand, because this bill deals with the economic problems involved in the distribution, we will say, of medicines and foods. The reason why the Senate smote the original food and drug bill hip and thigh—when it was called the "Tugwell bill"—was because the bill attempted to deal with economic problems as well as health problems.

Anything that was grossly deceptive carried on the wrapper of the package, or in the making of the bottle, to make it appear that it contained two ounces of an extract instead of one ounce—all those problems were dealt with in the original Food and Drugs Act. But as we passed it, we confined it strictly to those things having to do with public health, and we hardly touched the economic problems.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. We have been talking about the Food and Drugs Act, and it has been said that it is not workable in relation to some of these unfair practices. It seems to me that if that be the fact, the thing to do is to amend that act, and not amend the Federal Trade Commission Act. That is the way it appears to me from my first reading of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Food and Drugs Act, as the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has pointed out, merely applies to food and drugs. This bill may apply not only to food and drugs but it may apply, as the Federal Trade Commission law always has applied, to various other things besides food and drugs.

Mr. COPELAND. Textiles, for instance.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; to textiles and to other things—to most phases of business and industrial life.

Mr. GERRY. I understand that. The Senator is using the Food and Drugs Act as an example?

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. GERRY. What I had in mind, and what I should like to ask, is this: Under the pending bill it would not be necessary to prove damages. Is not that the difference between this amendment and the law, that the Commission would not have to prove there was any damage to anyone in order to start an investigation?

Mr. WHEELER. That is true; except damage to the general public.

Mr. GERRY. I am merely seeking information in my questions. Does not that have this effect: When it is not necessary to prove any damage, the field is left very wide open to any official in the Federal Trade Commission who has charge of a certain section to start an investigation, possibly without very much warrant, because he does not have to prove any damages, and we would be enlarging the field tremendously, would we not?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think so.

Mr. GERRY. What I have stated might lead to abuses, might it not?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there is the slightest ground for fear of that at all. We are supposed to legislate in the public interest and, after all, the courts are the final arbiters. If the Commission issues a cease-and-desist order, they do not fix any penalty, they do not put one in jail, they do not fine a man, they simply say to him, "Stop this particular practice", or "Stop this kind of advertising of these goods." If the party does not think the Federal Trade Commission has done the right thing, he may appeal to the Federal court in his particular district, and the Federal court can pass on the validity of the order, both as to questions of fact and as to questions of law.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, may I ask a further question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. Would the Federal courts have to take the findings of fact of the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. No; they do not have to take the findings of fact of the Federal Trade Commission if they feel that they are not substantially supported by evidence. The bill specifically leaves it up to the court to make findings as to the law. As a matter of fact, I have felt that when the Commission finds facts, the courts should not have the right to overturn the Commission's findings, but shall pass upon the law only. However, as the bill is now drawn, it provides that the court shall pass both upon the law and also shall determine whether the evidence supporting the findings of the Commission is "substantial."

Where the Commission makes findings of fact, the findings must be supported by substantial evidence or they will not be sustained by the courts.

Let me point out the difference between what is done in this country and what is done in England. We hear so many people claim that Great Britain deals much more fairly with the subjects of Great Britain than we deal with our citizens. A case was recently brought to my attention involving unfair and deceptive practices in England. They did not slap the accused on the wrist and say, "Cease and desist from this practice." They sent the accused to jail for a couple of years.

Some of the newspapermen have been afraid this measure might injuriously affect them. Not a single change is proposed in the present law affecting newspapers. If an advertisement appears in a paper which leads to complaint, the Federal Trade Commission calls in the officials of the paper and says to them, "Will you sign a stipulation that in the event the Federal Trade Commission finds this practice to be an unfair practice, or finds the advertisement complained of a misleading advertisement, you will stop it?"

I think in every instance the newspapers of the country have cooperated with the Federal Trade Commission, have signed stipulations, and have agreed to abide by the official decisions of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. Elisha Hanson appeared before the committee protesting against the bill, but most of his protests were not against the proposed amendment of the law. What he complained about was in the original law. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] asked him if he would draw an amendment embodying his views. He said he would, but he has not brought the amendment in, for the reason, I believe, that he must have discovered that he was complaining about something in the present law and that he had been mistaken.

Likewise, one of the leading journalists of the country sent out broadcast a statement, which was published all over the country, condemning the bill. I called him on the telephone and said to him, "What you are complaining about is in the law at the present time, and not what is in the proposed amendment of the law." He did not distinguish between what was in the present law and what was in the proposed amendment. As a result of the article sent out broadcast all over this country, a lot of people got the idea that this bill was proposing something new.

I hold in my hand a letter which is typical of many letters which have been received. It is from the National Association of Retail Meat Dealers, dated at Chicago, Ill. The writer says:

DEAR SENATOR WHEELER: I would appreciate very much receiving a copy of S. B. 3744.

He wrote this letter because he had received the propaganda to which I have referred. He represents the National Association of Retail Meat Dealers, and he thought the bill would have an effect which it really would not have. He said:

Permit me to congratulate you in behalf of this organization in your efforts to strengthen the power of the Federal Trade Commission to investigate unfair and deceptive practices as they relate to the consumer. Unfortunately heretofore the unfairness related to competitors, but you know as well as I do that it is the consumer who pays the bills and should receive first consideration, and any legislation which does not take into consideration the consumer or general public is of little value to the future posterity of our Nation.

With cordial greetings.

Yours very truly, JOHN A. KOTAL, Secretary.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I remember that years ago, when I was a medical student doing graduate work in Germany, I used to see the sign, "Das beste in der Welt", "The best in the world." Suppose a manufacturer of rayon in Cleveland, Ohio, should advertise, "My rayon is the best in the world. It is superior to any other rayon." What could the Federal Trade Commission do about that?

Mr. WHEELER. It could do nothing about it.

Mr. COPELAND. Why not?

Mr. WHEELER. If he said in his advertisement that it was the best in the world, and he was honestly of the opinion that it was the best in the world, the Federal Trade Commission could ordinarily not do anything about it, because it would be difficult for the Commission to convince the Supreme Court that "seller's puff" was an unfair practice. The object of the proposed legislation is not to stop the issuing of exaggerated opinions with reference to one's own articles.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator means "trade puffing"?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; trade puffing. What the Commission has tried to do is to stop the issuing of a definite statement with reference to a fact which was not true. There is a vast difference between a statement of a concrete fact with reference to some article and the mere puffing of one's own goods.

Mr. COPELAND. There may be, but I fail to see it.

Mr. WHEELER. The law recognizes a vast difference. In my experience in dealing with prosecutions of the use of the mails to defraud, I have found that a man will, for instance, say, "I have the best automobile in the world," or "I have the best something else in the world, and I expect it will do this and that." We could not prosecute him for using the mail to defraud for such a statement as that. But if one went out and misrepresented, made an actual misstatement as to a definite, positive fact, knowing that the statement was incorrect, then we could prosecute him for fraud.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I understand the Senator, he suggests there is quite a distinction between the assertion of an alleged fact where differences of opinion may arise and a misrepresentation of facts that are calculated to mislead the uninformed.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, Mr. President. I thank the Senator for that statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. For instance, if an automobile manufacturer said, "This car is capable of being operated at 225 miles per hour", that would be a statement of fact which could be demonstrated as to its truthfulness or untruthfulness.

Mr. WHEELER. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. However, if the automobile manufacturer said, "This is the best automobile at the price for which it is sold", there would be undoubtedly many differences of opinion about it, but it would hardly be calculated to impose upon the public and would perhaps not be such an instance as one in which the Federal Trade Commission would proceed.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I should think that if the advertiser of the automobile said, "This is the best automobile sold at the price", he would come directly under the bill, because all his competitors who dealt in automobiles selling at a similar price could say, "That is unfair competition."

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that the courts have recognized the difference between simply puffing one's own product in a general statement by saying, for example, "It is the best car manufactured", and misrepresenting a definite fact with reference to the product. If an automobile manufacturer said, "This automobile has a self-starter on it", when as a matter of fact the automobile did not have a self-starter on it, that statement would be a definite, positive misrepresentation of a provable fact. However, if the manufacturer said, "My car is the best car on the market for the money", there would be a vast difference of opinion in the general public's mind as to whether it was or not, and a great many persons might say it was the best, whereas a great many persons might say it was not. It would be a very difficult thing to prove that the car was not just what the manufacturer said it was. Those are things which are generally recognized by the courts as not capable of being reached by any law.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. It would seem to me that the burden of proof is on the Senator in charge of the bill to show why and how the proposed change in the law is going to be of benefit to the public. I am interested in it if it is going to do away with fraudulent and deceptive practices. However, every time we have used an illustration here, the Senator from Montana has said, "No; that case would not come under the bill, because that is 'trade puffing', or it is this, or it is that." Let us now hear exactly how the public would benefit under the proposed law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator answers that question, will he yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am greatly interested in the questions which have been propounded by the Senator from New York. At first blush they seem to have merit.

Let us take the illustration the Senator has used, of an advertiser saying, "My automobile is the best automobile in the world." The Senator from New York thinks such a statement would clearly bring the automobile manufacturer under the provisions of the bill. From the viewpoint which the Senator from Montana has been trying to give us, which is a legal viewpoint, it is clear that while such a statement, if it could be disproved, might be a technical violation of the law, yet as a lawyer the Senator from Montana knows that if he were called upon to prosecute a case of that kind he would not commence the action, because of his knowledge of the practical difficulty which would confront him in convicting the defendant and proving that his statement was not true. As a lawyer he knows that one manufacturer could get an unlimited number of witnesses to testify that in their opinion the automobile was not the best car, and probably an unlimited number of witnesses could be obtained who would testify that it was the best car in the world. The result would be that the lawyer never would be able to obtain a conviction under the law.

So I think the statement of the Senator from Montana should be somewhat modified, and it should be agreed that technically the proposition laid down by the Senator from New York may be right. As a practical proposition, however, it is of no consequence, because any man of experience knows that he never could obtain the enforcement of a cease-and-desist order, nor the imposition of a penalty for the making of such a statement as we have been discussing.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly why I am asking these questions, Mr. President. It was my duty for a great many years as commissioner of health in New York to enforce the food and drug law, and I know how extremely difficult it is to sustain such charges of violation in court. I have always believed in the Federal Trade Commission's activity, because there are so many trade practices which are wrong. Many honest concerns have been hurt by unfair competition. However, the new thought in the bill that worries me is just how far the Federal Trade Commission can go on its own initiative in the public interest in dealing with problems which have to do with methods of deception. That is the thing which worries me.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, Judge Davis, whom the Senator knows very well——

Mr. COPELAND. And admires.

Mr. WHEELER. And admires and respects, I am sure—testified before the committee. I introduced the bill at the request of the Federal Trade Commission. Commissioners Davis and Freer appeared before the committee and testified in respect to it, and Commissioner Ferguson wrote a letter concerning it. They said that in most cases which came before the Federal Trade Commission, if they spent enough money and did enough research work, they probably could show that someone had actually been injured.

They said, however, the difficulty was that the Commission spent most of its time and most of the money allotted to it by the Congress, in running down the question of whether or not one man has lost some money by reason of unfair trade practices on the part of another. After all, Congress is not interested in whether John Smith lost some money as the result of the advertising complained of, but the question is whether or not the general public has been deceived or injured by reason of it. We are here to legislate with respect to that question.

The main thing the bill seeks to do is to remedy that situation. I do not believe it should be necessary for the Federal Trade Commission to spend thousands of the few dollars which are appropriated to them in running down a case in order to show that because of certain trade practices on the part of one person, a competitor has lost a few cents. The amount involved does not need to be large in order to establish a case. However, the object of the bill is to obviate the necessity of spending thousands of dollars of Government money in running down a case to see whether or not injury has been done.

I wish to read from the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co. (283 U. S. 645):

> Among the ingredients is "desiccated thyroid", which, it is alleged, cannot be prescribed to act with reasonable uniformity on the bodies of all users, or without impairing the health of a substantial portion of them, etc., or with safety, without previous consultation with, and continuing observation and advice of, a competent medical adviser. The complaint further avers that many persons are seeking obesity remedies, and respondent's advertisements are calculated to mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the belief that the preparation is safe, effective, dependable, and without danger of harmful results.

In that case, the court held that notwithstanding the fact that the product was injurious to the general public, and notwithstanding the fact that the advertisements were misleading, the Federal Trade Commission's order was wrong, because it did not show that someone else engaged in selling that particular kind of thing was injured in dollars and cents.

A few years ago, as the Senator from New York well knows, advertisements appeared all over the country with respect to a preparation called "ginger jake", and thousands of people were affected as the result of its use.

If the Federal Trade Commission had taken action to stop the advertisement and sale of this preparation, the Commission would have had to show not only that the preparation which was advertised in newspapers was dangerous to health, but that somebody else who was engaged in a similar business was injured by reason of the advertisement and sale of the preparation in question. There might not be anyone else who was actually engaged in that business. The Commission then would have to show that the sales of someone selling some other kind of preparation, such as Coca-Cola, had been diminished by reason of the fact that "ginger jake" was sold.

I am at a loss to understand how anyone can seriously object to the bill. Its purpose is merely to remedy a situation which the Federal Trade Commission, over a long period of years, has found to have resulted in great expense to the Government, and which is really against the public interest.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. So far as "ginger jake" and other products which fall under the heading of foods and drugs are concerned, if we shall finally pass a food and drug bill such products will be taken care of. However, in the economic world and in the industrial world, outside of foods and drugs, there are many deceptive practices. I have no question about that. But for myself, I want to be sure that this bill really gives the power to the Federal Trade Commission to deal on its own initiative with these deceptions, these fraudulent claims.

As the law is now, it is the damaged competitor who calls the attention of the Federal Trade Commission to the practice complained of by him. There are, however, a great many acts which are so universal in their effect that they do not strike directly at a competitor, and, therefore, there is not any stimulation of a possible competitor to ask the Federal Trade Commission to proceed. So I should like to be assured—and I presume I am stupid or I would have been assured ere this in the debate—that there is power on the part of the Commission to go out into the field of fraud and deception and bring to book the scoundrels who are seeking to deceive and rob the American people.

In the next place, one of the great faults of the Federal Trade Commission law, as I have seen it in operation, has been the possibility of delay in securing effective action. The procedure has been something like this: A competitor says, "I am being damaged by the advertising of the claims of a certain corporation", and then the Federal Trade Commission serves notice on the offending company, and says, "You must show cause why you should not be proceeded against." By one method or another, by resort to legal measures and technicalities in one case that I know of, there was a delay from 1922—I think that was the year; I will not be exact as to the dates, although I used this illustration last year in connection with the food and drugs bill—until 1934, when the final order to cease and desist was issued.

Has the legal procedure been simplified? Is there going to be some more definite method of taking the one charged with fraud or deception by the back of the neck and saying, "You cannot do this any more"?

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say to the Senator that I agree with him thoroughly; in many instances in the proceedings under the Federal Trade Commission the delay has been very great, and one of the reasons for it has been just the condition that I have been talking about. The delay will be removed if the Commission may, when it is shown that a certain practice is against the public interest, thereupon issue a cease-and-desist order; but the Commission has said, Judge Davis has said, the reason why delay and expense have been caused has been that the Commission has had to go out and work for long periods in an effort to secure evidence to show that some competitor was injured. This bill seeks to render that unnecessary.

Again let me say to the Senator from New York—and I am very thankful to him for his suggestion—that another thing the bill seeks to do is to apply the law both to persons and partnerships the same as it applies to corporations. It was generally agreed by the United States Chamber of Commerce and everybody else that that ought to be done.

Furthermore, heretofore when the Commission has issued a cease-and-desist order, the organization against whom it was issued would go along perhaps for 5 or 10 years, and the respondent might cease and desist for a while, and then might start up and resort to the same practice again, and for an indefinite period of time it was not necessary to take the matter to court to get a final determination. This bill seeks to make it necessary for him, if he is dissatisfied with the ruling of the Commission, to appeal to the court within a period of 60 days' time. Previously he has had unlimited time. He could let the matter run along for years and years, and finally, if he wanted to do so, he could take it to the circuit court of appeals. This bill definitely limits the time. Under the stockyards act it was limited to 60 days' time, I think, and under the Interstate Commerce Commission if parties are dissatisfied they have to take the case to the courts within a limited time. We put a provision into the pending bill limiting the time within which the case may be reviewed by the court to 60 days.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from New York, in answer to his question as to a delay, that I think there will be delay under the amended bill, if it shall be enacted. I do not know how we can avoid some, perhaps, unreasonable delays in some cases. One of the reasons is the nature of the procedure in our courts, but that there will be less delay than heretofore it seems to me is perfectly apparent, because, if this bill shall be enacted into law, the Commission will not be required to go out and hunt evidence of damages that have been sustained by some individual, which as is apparent, is sometimes a very difficult thing to do and something which takes much time. Under the pending bill such procedure will be unnecessary, and, of course, it will lessen the time taken by the Commission by elimination of that necessity.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nebraska. He always does much to illuminate my dull brain. But I want the Senator in charge of the bill to know that I am not asking these questions with a view to delaying action upon it. I am heartily in favor of giving to the Federal Trade Commission all the power we properly can give them, power which, I am sure, they will not abuse. If they should abuse it, that would be frightful; but I am in favor of giving them the power to deal with these matters; and I think it is very wise that the Federal Trade Commission is going to be permitted to go outside the question of whether or not a given competitor is damaged, because, after all, the person we are thinking most about is not the owner of some commercial concern, but we are thinking about the American citizen. There is no doubt that the American housewife and the American house husband, if that is the correlative word, are being imposed upon by having forced into their possession flimsy, shoddy, unworthy stuff. If there is some way by law to prevent that sort of thing, I am for it.

I do not want to invade the factory or the business of an honest concern. As a matter of fact, in all these questions of regulation the honest concern is not the one whom we are seeking to reach; it is the hole-in-the-wall chap, the hidden manufacturer, who is placing upon the market articles that are not at all what they are represented to be.

So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to vote for this bill, and I hope that it will improve conditions.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps this is only the first bite of the cherry; in practice it may be found necessary to come here for further amendments; but I do want to say, in closing, just an additional word.

I have great respect for the Federal Trade Commission. Judge Davis has done a fine work there—and I only name him as representative of all the men making up the Commission. They have been striving for years to improve conditions, to protect the public against fraud, against imposition, to protect the pocketbooks of the American people against the encroachments and robbery of many who have sought to foist upon the public, commodities which ought not to be sold anywhere; certainly not unless they are sold for exactly what they are and not for the fine products which they are pretending to be.

So it is in that spirit that I have spoken about this bill, and I hope it may do all that its erstwhile author hopes that it may do.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I do not think by any manner of means the bill goes as far as perhaps some of us would like to have it go, but I think it is a step in the right direction, to save the Government money, on the one hand, and to speed up the actions of the Federal Trade Commission, on the other.

One other thing that causes delay is that sometimes a company, after years of fighting the Federal Trade Commission, then goes into the Federal courts and further ties up the case. We have provided in this bill that the Federal court may require obedience to the order while appeal is pending, and thus prevent the delay the Senator has rightly condemned, protecting the public through protracted legal proceedings.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNES. On an entirely different question, I wish to ask the Senator for some information. Recently I was advised that, while unfair practices were alleged to exist in the insurance business, the matter was taken up with the Federal Trade Commission. In a letter signed by Mr. Horton, the chief examiner, the writer was advised that:

> Inasmuch as it would appear from the facts presented that the situation affects only the selling of insurance, the matter would not come within the jurisdiction of this Commission, as the courts have repeatedly held that the selling of insurance does not constitute commerce. The corrective power of the Commission extends only to the prevention of unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Does the Senator know the reasoning upon which that is based?

Mr. WHEELER. No; I do not. I am not familiar with that particular phase of it.

Mr. BYRNES. I can see no reason, from the thought I have always held as to the corrective powers of the Federal Trade Commission, why it should have been excluded. I have read the act within the last few minutes. I can find no language making an exception.

Would the Senator object to an amendment in order that he might take it to conference and give us time to investigate the matter? The amendment I would offer would simply extend the powers of section 5 as it is proposed to be amended in the pending bill, so it shall be deemed to include such unfair methods and practices by companies or associations, incorporated or unincorporated, engaged in the business of selling insurance.

Mr. WHEELER. I would have no objection to it. I am not at all familiar with that ruling of the Commission.

Mr. BYRNES. Nor am I familiar with it. The information contained in the letter was surprising to me. I can see no reason why insurance should be exempted from the act.

Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation? Is there an amendment pending at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 9, after line 12, it is proposed to add a new paragraph, as follows:

> The powers vested in the Commission by this section shall be deemed to include such unfair methods and practices by companies or associations, incorporated or unincorporated, engaged in the business of selling insurance.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the amendment is acted on I think we ought to have a little light thrown on it. I am speaking entirely without knowledge of the matter because I had never before thought of insurance in connection with the Federal Trade Commission. Is there not a question involved as to the constitutionality of our authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate something which is not connected with commerce and which has been held not to be interstate commerce?

Mr. BYRNES. Under the definition of interstate commerce, certainly if it were held that under no circumstances could a contract of insurance be a matter of interstate commerce, it could not come within the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

I have suggested to the Senator from Montana the reason for the introduction of the amendment and submitted my request that he take it to conference in order that we may have opportunity to investigate it. The information upon which it is offered was the statement I have just made that where facts were presented, which upon their face, if true, would seem to constitute unfair methods of competition in the filing of contracts of insurance, the Commission stated it could not make an investigation of such matters because under the act it did not have the power to do so.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the reason why they so held is that it was not interstate commerce and for that reason they could not make the investigation. The amendment would not bring it within the definition of interstate commerce if the parties involved are not dealing in interstate commerce.

Mr. BYRNES. If that is the thought upon which it is based, that under no circumstances could a contract between a citizen of Montana and a citizen of New York be considered interstate commerce, then it would not come within the definition of the interstate commerce section, which is the first section of the bill. That is the reason why I ask that it be taken to conference, because if that be the theory upon which the decision was based, the amendment can be eliminated.

Mr. WHEELER. Would not the Senator be willing to let the amendment be pending for a short time in order that I may get in touch with the Federal Trade Commission and find out concerning it?

Mr. BYRNES. May I say to the Senator from Montana that I tried to find out, and because I had not heard from the Commission I offered the amendment?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is it not aimed at agents rather than at corporations, upon the theory that an agent puffing the wares of an insurance company which he represents says that the policy of his company has advantages which the policies of other insurance companies had not? It seems to me it is aimed at punishment of the agents.

Mr. BYRNES. Quite the contrary.

Mr. KING. It seems to me it would lead to controversy.

Mr. BYRNES. No; the purpose is quite the contrary. The statement of facts submitted to the Commission in the letter called to my attention was that credit companies are now taking the position that as to automobile insurance, for instance, contracts are entered into under which no credit can be extended to the owner of an automobile unless the owner of the automobile will agree to insure his automobile with a certain company. The effect of that combination on the part of a few companies is to put out of business all the other insurance agents.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. The point that bothers me about the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina is that insurance companies are already covered by the act as it is written. If we can give power to the Federal Trade Commission over such companies, I ask the Senator if this language does not go as far as it can:

> The Commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks, and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce.

There are only two exceptions: The first is banks, and the other is corporations regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. If it does not include insurance companies as written, I do not see how the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina could be made to include them, because the language I have quoted includes everything except the two classes which are mentioned in the act.

Mr. BYRNES. It was always my thought that it would cover any case where there was unfair competition. The letter of the Commission was, therefore, a surprise to me. I inquired a few moments ago of a member of the Commission to ascertain the reason why the Commission took the position that under no circumstances could they have jurisdiction to make an investigation of any unfair practices and unfair methods of competition involving insurance contracts. I have not yet been advised. The member of the Commission could not tell me offhand about it and was going to inquire and advise me.

I offer the amendment merely because I do not want the bill to be passed without it. The Senator from Montana has asked that the amendment be permitted to lie on the table temporarily, which is entirely satisfactory to me. I expect momentarily to be advised upon what theory the statement of the Commission is based. I want to know that, just as the Senator from Kentucky does.

Mr. LOGAN. I have very high regard for the Federal Trade Commission and all its members, but it seems to me the letter from which the Senator read extracts is simply a mistake as to the power of the Commission. They have acted upon a wrong basis somewhere because insurance companies are covered.

Mr. BYRNES. The letter was signed by the chief examiner and not by a Commissioner.

Mr. WHEELER. My judgment is that it is probably because of the fact, since it was called to their attention, that they did not deem that it came within the purview of the act.

Mr. BYRNES. That would have been entirely understandable, but the statement was made in the letter that under some decision of the court the Commission had absolutely no jurisdiction over any matter affecting the selling of insurance.

Mr. WHEELER. I am having my secretary get in touch with the Federal Trade Commission at this moment, and hope to have the report from them very promptly.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment, it would introduce a new field of investigation for the Federal Trade Commission. That being so, it is of the utmost importance that the Federal Trade Commission and the insurance companies be consulted. Certainly the subject matter does not pertain to the provisions of the pending bill or the previous power conferred upon the Federal Trade Commission. It is a new field, and I hope opportunity will be given both the Federal Trade Commission and the insurance companies to express their views.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that my secretary has just informed me that in an old case of Paul against Virginia the Supreme Court of the United States held that insurance is not interstate commerce, and the letter was based upon that decision. Consequently, if that is so, then the amendment would not be effective at all and would have no weight. I should dislike very much to incorporate it in the bill at this time without very serious investigation of the matter.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. Is there not also the added reason that I think in every State of the Union now insurance companies are under State regulation, so that their practices are under the supervision of some State agency?

Mr. WHEELER. That is my understanding. In my State they are very strictly regulated.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator says his opposition to the amendment is based upon the decision of the Supreme Court to which he has referred, I will withdraw the amendment. I have no desire to embarrass the Senator. I know he is particularly interested in the bill, and I myself have not had time to investigate the matter. I will do so, however.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Has this measure the unanimous support of the Interstate Commerce Committee?

Mr. WHEELER. As reported out, there was no objection at all to the bill in the committee. One provision which was in the original print of the bill was eliminated from it by an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I observe that there is one committee amendment striking out a provision which probably would be objectionable to a good many persons. As I understand the measure, it simply relates to difficulties and limitations and misunderstandings which the Commission has experienced during the years since the passage of the original act.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. The bill seeks to clarify the Commission's powers, and perhaps to make more effective its decisions, and to promote the administration of the law in a way which the Commission believes to be more in the public interest?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. In one instance the original act is amended in a particular as to which two courts have rendered conflicting decisions. One of the courts of the District of Columbia has rendered a decision one way, and one of the circuit courts of appeals has rendered a decision the other way. The bill simply tries to clear up that situation so that there may not be any question on that point. Then it deals with several other technical matters, largely matters of procedure.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose the bill was introduced at the request of the Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. It was introduced at the request of the Commission, and was presented to me as chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee for introduction.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me to be desirable legislation, from the study I have been able to make of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, it has been suggested to me that as a member of the minority of the Committee on Interstate Commerce I ought to say a brief word about the bill. I do so, not in opposition to the proposed legislation but out of a desire to bring to the attention of the Senate some changes in the present law which I think give to the proposed legislation vastly greater importance than has been suggested by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

I have for the personnel of the Federal Trade Commission very profound respect. For Mr. Davis, to whom reference has heretofore been made, I have great admiration. I served with him in the House of Representatives for, I think, 12 years; and never have I known a public servant of greater industry and with higher ideals than Mr. Davis. I think, too, that the work of the Federal Trade Commission throughout the years has been salutary.

I suppose if I were to make a confession of political faith I should say that I am a rebel against government. I instinctively resist all of the purposes—and there are many of them in these days—to impress government more and more upon the individual and the business life of the Nation; but that seems to be the tendency of the times, and an individual is almost impotent before it.

I said I wished to call attention, and I shall do so in a rambling sort of way, to some of the amendments of the present law which give to the proposed legislation very real importance. I call attention to an amendment which is of some special concern, perhaps, to Massachusetts. That is the amendment appearing on page 2, in line 9, which enlarges the definition of a corporation so as to include within it what are known as Massachusetts trusts. I do not know just what is the legal set-up of these trusts, or what are their functions; but the pending bill in terms makes reference to them and includes them in the definition of a corporation.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that a Massachusetts trust is in the nature of a corporation. It is a device which is neither a corporation nor a person, but comes in between. Most certainly it should be included in the bill, because it is a device by which there are performed practically the same functions as those of a corporation; and there was no objection to that particular provision from the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection to the provision, either. As a matter of fact, whatever its precise nature is, I agree that the Massachusetts trust ought to be brought within the terms of the bill. I mentioned the matter only because I thought it would have some special interest for the Massachusetts Members.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to say that the term "Massachusetts trust" has no geographical signification at all. Such trusts are created throughout the country to operate without the restrictions of the ordinary corporation law.

Mr. WHITE. Another amendment, appearing on page 2, enlarges the definition of documentary evidence so as to include books of account and financial and corporate records.

Under section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as proposed to be amended, all these documents and papers and correspondence and books of account may be examined for the purposes of the act. The purposes of the act include the investigation of persons as well as corporations. So I think, following the matter through, this amendment carries with it something of real importance, because I think it really gives, as section 9, of the original act does not now give, authority to examine the papers of an individual as well as those of a corporation. I do not complain as to this, but I do not think it is of enough consequence to note as we pass along.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator long enough to say that the reason why that amendment appears in the bill is because the matter has never gone to the courts to determine whether or not the term "documentary evidence" includes books of account. The Interstate Commerce Act contains this specific language, and there has never been any particular controversy about it; but some lawyers have made the claim that books of account are not included in the words "documentary evidence." I think they are wrong about it, but the amendment is just to clear up any question about the matter.

With reference to persons being included here as well as corporations, as a matter of fact, if I correctly recall the testimony of the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, I asked him whether he did not believe persons should be included, and he stated that he did; and quite clearly they should be included, because if a person is doing the things complained of in the bill, he should be subjected to the same laws as corporations.

Mr. WHITE. I repeat that I do not have any objection to the provision. I call attention to it only because I think it is a matter of some importance, and the chairman of the committee in his statement—I know in the interest of time—did not call it to the attention of the Senate.

The third matter to which I call the attention of the Senate is the amendment found on page 3, including the words "unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce."

Mr. President, that provision very much extends the scope of our present law. Under existing law, the Commission has no jurisdiction if the offender has no competitor, but enjoys a monopoly, or if all competitors are equally guilty.

This amendment creates an offense, even though no competitor is involved. The Federal Trade Commission, under the amendment, is no longer to be primarily concerned with insuring to all persons fair methods of competition under which they must conduct their business, but it is to have a general responsibility to all persons, an obligation, to see that no person is the victim of an unfair or deceptive act or practice in commerce.

I think one must voice his disapproval of unfair and deceptive practices and acts precisely as he would voice his disapproval of sin, for instance, but I should be very much more comfortable if I knew just what acts or practices we are making unlawful and I rather believe the citizen of the country would feel more comfortable in his mind if he knew for what acts and for what practices he might be haled before the Commission.

Something of this infirmity—and I regard this indefiniteness as an infirmity—could be cured if we deleted from the bill the reference to a deceptive act, and made unlawful only deceptive methods. A single act, not defined by the statute as unfair or deceptive, but deemed so by the Commission, is an unlawful act, however innocently committed. I would not object to making unlawful a course of conduct which might amount to a method of deception, but I shrink from a statutory provision which leaves to a commission the right to find unlawful that which in the statute is not defined as unlawful, and for the determination of which there is no real guide in the statute itself.

Another significant change appears in line 9 on page 5 of the bill. Under the existing law the Commission may apply to a court for the enforcement of its orders when there has been failure or neglect to obey an order. By this amendment the Commission may bring a person into court because of an anticipated disregard of an order. That is something entirely new, so far as I know. Certainly it is new so far as the Federal Trade Commission Act goes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that when one goes into a Federal or State court to get an injunction, he takes that action if a person is threatening to do something. This amendment would merely give the Commission the power to go into court after it has issued an order and say to the court, "These people are threatening to do this, or we believe they are." Then the court passes upon the question. This merely gives the Commission the right to go to court. I do not see that there can be very much objection to it.

Mr. WHITE. It does not say anything about threatening to do something. It says that the Commission may go into court when a person intends or is about to do something. In other words, it shifts the present practice around completely. Under the present practice a person can be haled into court when an order of the Commission has been disobeyed, or when there is a failure to obey an order of the Commission. There must be an existing and known default on the part of someone before the Commission may bring that person into court. But under this provision a person may be brought into court because, as I have said, the Commission anticipates that something is to happen in the future. Of course, I know something about the injunctive theory and the injunctive process, but I am not persuaded that this change is either necessary or desirable.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me explain just why this provision is offered. As I said to the Senator awhile ago, the courts of the District of Columbia have held that under the present law the Federal Trade Commission would have to establish, first, a violation of its order, and, second, the fact that the order was valid. This measure proposes to allow them to go into court and have the court first determine that the Commission's order is valid, and then that there is a violation.

The Federal courts in New York have held just the opposite of what has been held in this District. The only purpose of this provision is to make the law uniform, and the Commission feels that the ruling of the Federal court in New York is much fairer and much better than the ruling of the court in this District, and this provision merely adopts the procedure of the courts of New York.

Mr. WHITE. I understand what the situation is, but, unfortunately for me, perhaps, I like the present practice better than I do the proposed practice.

Mr. WHEELER. The present practice in one court is one thing and in another court it is another thing. This is simply an attempt to make it uniform, so that when the Commission goes into court, it will ask that its order be upheld as valid, in the event it believes there is about to be a violation of the order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me on a question of personal privilege?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I do not wish to be discourteous to the Senator, but from my observation, when questions of personal privilege are raised, they sometimes lead to discussion. I will conclude in 10 minutes, perhaps sooner than that.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Very well.

Mr. WHITE. On page 6 of the bill there is a change from the present law which has attracted my attention. The language I have in mind is as follows:

> The findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive.

The only change from present law in that is that in the present law the word "testimony" appears, and the word "evidence" is substituted in the pending bill. I think that is done because usually testimony refers to oral evidence, and the word "evidence" is a much more comprehensive term. It is not very important, but the purpose and effect is to make it even more certain than under the present law that the facts found by the Commission upon any sort of evidence shall bind the courts.

This is one of the practices under which I am getting somewhat restive, undertaking to give to these various bodies which are set up by the Congress a power which is really in derogation of what I think is the proper authority and function of the courts. We are giving to these various commissions the right to determine absolutely all matters of fact, and there is an effort to keep away from the courts of the land the opportunity either to hear evidence or to pass upon or to review matters of facts. I simply desire to voice my general dissent to that tendency.

On page 9 there is an amendment which would seem to be trivial, and yet to me it is a further encroachment upon the dignity and of the rights of the citizen. Provision is made on page 9 in line 6 that service may be made by mail at the residence of a person or a corporation. That, to me, simply injects further uncertainty as to whether or not a person has had proper notice of a proceeding against him. It simply minimizes a bit more, as I have said, the right of the citizen, and makes him a little more subject all the time to the power of government and the power of the agencies of government which we are constantly setting up.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I expressly asked the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission why the Commission wanted that provision in the bill. The chairman said that at the present time they serve their notices by mail, and he said that, as a matter of fact, it is much more effective to serve notices by mail than to make personal service. In many instances the persons served have no pleace of business such as defined by the courts. The provision to which the Senator refers really is not an important amendment in any way, shape, or form. If there is serious objection to it, I do not object to eliminating it.

Mr. WHITE. I agree with the Senator that it is not tremendously important. It is just one of those provisions which makes it a little easier for the Government and a little harder for the citizen, against which I am protesting rather generally.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, the provision in question makes it easier for the citizen. At least, that is the interpretation put upon it by the Federal Trade Commission. It makes it easier for the citizen, and gives him more protection.

Mr. WHITE. I cannot agree with that statement.

I desire to comment on the change made on page 9, line 16.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call to the Senator's attention another fact with reference to what he has just mentioned. At the present time the Commission feels that it would be very helpful to the Commission to make provision for service at the residence of the person, because then the Commission could serve him at his place of residence rather than at his place of business. He may have a place of business outside his home State; and if he has he would have to be served at his place of business and would have to go to another State for hearing of the case, whereas is he were served at his residence he could have the proceeding in the court in the district where he lives, which, as a matter of fact, is more beneficial to the person involved than otherwise.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, on page 9, line 16, I call attention to the fact that there we find an amendment to the present law. Under the present law the Commission itself has the power to initiate investigations. Under the proposed amendment we are providing that the Commission may do it or shall do it. I am not sure whether it is "may" or "shall." I think there is much doubt about it. However, assuming that it is "shall", then we are placing on the Commission the burden of investigating either upon the direction of the President or upon request or direction of either House of the Congress. If I could have my way about it I should leave the responsibility for investigations solely upon the Federal Trade Commission, and I would not make the Federal Trade Commission the instrumentality of investigations at the direction of either the President or of either House of Congress. I would have the Federal Trade Commission act from its own sense of responsibility and from its own knowledge of facts and conditions as they exist in any line of commerce. I do not like to see either House of Congress nor do I not like to see the President, through enlarged powers, given the opportunity to initiate harassments of individuals. I personally should like to see the law remain precisely as it is in that regard.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I invite attention to page 10, beginning in line 1, the following language:

> (b) To require, by general or special orders, persons, partnerships, or corporations engaged in commerce, excepting banks, and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, or any class of them, or any of them, respectively, to file with the Commission in such form as the Commission may prescribe annual or special, or both annual and special, reports or answers in writing to specific questions—

And so forth. I should like to ask the Senator whether he subscribes to the wisdom of enacting legislation of that kind, and also whether or not the present law is as comprehensive as the section to which I have just called attention.

Mr. WHITE. I think the language which the Senator has quoted makes no change in the present law except—and I was about to refer to the change. Under the provision with respect to investigations there has been another change of significance. Under the existing law the power to investigate is limited to the power to investigate corporations. In the pending bill it is proposed to enlarge that power, giving the Federal Trade Commission the right, either upon its own initiative, or upon the direction of the President, or at the request of either House of Congress, to investigate not only corporations but persons as well.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to call the Senator's attention, however, to the fact that it is business conduct, not individual conduct, which is involved. Every member of the committee and every person who came before the committee said, "We are talking not about the individual's private life but about his business conduct.

The Senator will notice that there was written into the bill authority—

> To investigate from time to time the organization, business conduct, business practices, and business management of any person, partnership, or corporation. * * *

Everyone who testified before the committee stated that if the Federal Trade Commission had the power to make investigation with reference to a corporation, it should, of course, have the same power with reference to private persons who were doing the sort of thing which the bill seeks to prevent. It was contended that the Commission should have the same right with respect to persons as with respect to corporations.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to only one other matter. On page 12 of the bill, in section 9, we find what I think is a very substantial enlargement of present authority. The redraft of section 9 gives vastly greater rights of access to books and papers than the present law does. By the provisions of the pending bill records of the individual citizen as well as of the corporation may be examined almost at will. Heretofore this power of access to or of examination has been limited to the purposes of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, which made unlawful unfair methods of competition.

The Commission, by section 9 of the present law, could have access to the records of the corporation for the purpose of determining whether that corporation was engaged in unfair methods of competition, and I think that was the limit. I think we are now opening the doors very much wider.

Mr. President, I am not going to vote against this bill. I cannot quite bring myself to do that, but I desire to make it clear that I think in some of the particulars to which I have called attention we are going beyond the necessities of the case—going beyond what we probably should do.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION AND STEAMBOAT INSPECTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8599) to provide for a change in the designation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, to create a marine casualty investigation board and increase efficiency in administration of the steamboat-inspection laws, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. COPELAND, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. WHITE conferees on the part of the Senate.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN RAILWAY-MAIL EMPLOYEES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10267) to provide for adjusting the compensation of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, assistant superintendents at large, assistant superintendent in charge of car construction, chief clerks, assistant chief clerks, and clerks in charge of sections in offices of division superintendents in the Railway Mail Service, to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

MR. AND MRS. BRUCE LEE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3952) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Lee and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BAILEY, Mr. BURKE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire to say that in this morning's edition of the Washington Herald, which, as the Members of the Senate know, is the Hearst newspaper in this city, there appeared a rather lengthy article in which some very lurid charges were made against me personally by that newspaper, setting forth the claim that I had maintained myself in the past as a juggler of stocks.

I wish to say, Mr. President, I fully realized a month ago when I addressed the Senate upon the question of Mr. William Randolph Hearst that I was subjecting myself to reprisals such as the article which appeared in this morning's paper. Knowing Mr. Hearst and his methods and his tactics, I fully anticipated that the reprisals would be of the nature of the article appearing in this morning's newspaper.

Mr. Hearst's reputation and the reputation of his newspapers as having no regard for the truth certainly was known to me, and I anticipated that in the attack that would be made upon me no effort would be made to stick to the truth. I further was not surprised at the article, because of the fact that I have known for the last 3 weeks that there have been sent into the State of Washington from California three investigators who have been detailed to the task of attempting to get information about me from which newspaper articles could be printed, and that the star political reporter of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer has been assigned to the one task of writing articles by way of an attack upon me.

If this article was the only one that was to be printed, I would not take the time of the Senate to discuss it. It happens, however, that it is only the opening article of a series, and I wish to assure the Members of the Senate that they will, from day to day, read articles in the Hearst newspapers—they are being printed in various parts of the country, in all Hearst newspapers throughout the country—attacking me and making charges against me. Probably, if it were not for the fact that I am a new Member of this body, and that I want the membership of the body to have a little better acquaintance with the facts, I would not take the trouble to discuss the article. I wish to assure Members of the Senate that the things that are contained in this article and the charges that will be contained in the other articles have all been matters of discussion in the city of Seattle and the State of Washington; and because of that fact, I first want, very briefly, to discuss the article appearing this morning.

It refers to a certain corporation with which I was connected. The corporation was organized in 1926. The name of the corporation was the Superior Service Laundries, Inc. I was the president of that company between 1926 and 1931, in which latter year I severed all connection with the company. The company was involved between 1927 and 1930 in a very considerable amount of litigation, and as a result of that litigation a man by the name of Vaughn Tanner, a former attorney general of the State of Washington, and a very reputable member of the bar of the State of Washington, was engaged by a group of security holders of that corporation to represent them.

Mr. Vaughn Tanner was and is the Pacific-Northwest representative of Mr. William Randolph Hearst. Mr. Vaughn Tanner is today and for many years has been the publisher of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, which is the Seattle Hearst newspaper.

Mr. Tanner in 1932 was more familiar with the affairs of this corporation than was any other individual outside of the officers of the corporation. He was representing a group of security holders. He made a complete and full investigation of the affairs of that corporation, and during a period of time since that date had a man from his own office, an employee of his law office, as a member of the board of directors of that corporation. So Mr. Tanner in September 1932 knew more about the Superior Service Laundries, Inc., and its affairs than did any other man outside the corporation itself. At that time Mr. Tanner was the publisher and in active charge of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

In September 1932 I was a candidate for the office of Governor of the State of Washington in the Democratic primary. Mr. Tanner, as publisher of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, printed in the Post-Intelligencer three editorials concerning me, which I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). Without objection, the articles will be printed in the RECORD.

The editorials referred to are as follows:

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer, of Sept. 10, 1932]

SCHWELLENBACH HAS BEEN TRAINED IN LEADERSHIP

The greatest need of America in these critical times is leadership.

An erratic and petulant man cannot be a leader, because he cannot establish a direction for social and economic movements.

A reactionary man cannot be a leader, because he has to be dragged along by the people who are searching a way out of difficult situations.

Washington needs a Governor who is a natural leader, who has proved by his record that he possesses the qualities of leadership, and who knows and is courageous enough to tell in unequivocal terms where he wants to go.

LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH is such a man.

As soon as the World War released him to civil life he started a record of leadership which is not often equaled by a man his age.

He was chosen as one of the early commanders of Rainier-Noble Post of the American Legion, largest in the State. From this position he advanced to that of department commander of the Legion. During his incumbency his diplomacy, his common sense, his grasp of social problems and broad humanities enabled him to accomplish the seemingly impossible in closing and healing the breach between organized labor and organized veterans.

The full meaning of this will never be known, simply because the things which might have happened had the breach continued to widen were not permitted to happen, thanks to Commander SCHWELLENBACH's leadership.

About this time Mr. SCHWELLENBACH allied himself with another broad civic movement when he worked with the municipal league in a program of governmental betterment.

Somewhat later, as president of the alumni association of the University of Washington, he again demonstrated his ability to direct important activities, this time in the interest of public education.

When the so-called McNear plan for refinancing Seattle's streetcar system was advanced, finally reaching the legislature, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, sensing it as a piece of high-pressure legerdemain for further milking the city and the streetcar riders, led a fight against it with resource and determination, which accomplished its defeat.

He called the first State-wide power conference.

And so his busy life goes—busy in leading or working in the ranks of worth-while movements charged with a public nature; busier still, studying, delving, weighing facts, before setting his course.

In his fine record of disinterested public service he has never held a position carrying pay, and he has never before been a candidate for public office.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH's life has been a struggle upward, well calculated to develop those qualities which are invaluable in government. The progress of his career has been marked by working and fighting. He has never side-stepped a job because it was tough. He has never remained on the side lines when a fight for the public good was being waged, even though the position of noncombatant might have left him with more friends.

This is the type of man those acquainted with LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH's life and his public activities know him to be. It is the kind of man this State needs in the Governor's chair.

He is a candidate for that high position in the Democratic primary.

The Post-Intelligencer believes that a vote for him is a vote for enlightened, progressive, economical government at Olympia.

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer, Sept. 8, 1932]

SCHWELLENBACH WOULD MAKE A GOOD GOVERNOR

Strictly within the sphere of State politics, the most important job for the voters this year is choice of a Governor.

They should choose a new Governor.

For the last 8 years the present occupant of the office has demonstrated to them in every way the kind of Governor they do not want.

But an unusually large field of candidates in both major parties leaves them somewhat bewildered and in a state of indecision as to just who among the several contestants would most nearly measure up to the demands and responsibilities of the high office.

The Post-Intelligencer believes that LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH, candidate in the Democratic primary, is best fitted to succeed to the governorship of Washington.

He is young, able, courageous, dignified, well grounded in the science of government, and has made a deep study of this State's particular needs in the way of a better and more enlightened administration of public affairs.

He tells what he plans to do about reducing taxes, not in generalities, but in one, two, three, four, five order.

His personal platform is neither indecisive nor vague in a single particular.

His plans for attacking unemployment are as definite and understandable as his tax program.

He is a veteran of the World War, he recognizes the importance of veteran problems, made more acute by unemployment, and can be depended upon to work intelligently for immediate relief and ultimate constructive solution.

He also believes the State has power and the obligation to aid thousands of shareholders and depositors whose funds are frozen in closed financial institutions.

He is sympathetic to the principle of public power, and believes the State should use its utmost authority not only to husband the water-power resources of the State but to keep firmly under control all privately owned utilities serving the public.

Voters of Seattle who have not had the opportunity to hear Mr. SCHWELLENBACH discuss these issues and propose his plans to meet them will be given the opportunity at the Eagles' Auditorium tonight.

If elected, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH would restore dignity and intelligence to the office of Governor. He would break up the political machine which has fastened itself upon the State and which seeks to tighten its hold by returning its head to power.

The only hope for economical State government lies in setting up a new administration at Olympia.

The Post-Intelligencer believes that of all candidates LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH is best fitted to head such an administration. This newspaper also believes a careful study of his record and program will convince citizens of Washington that they should enter the Democratic primary next Tuesday, nominate him, and in November send him to the Governor's chair.

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer of Sept. 13, 1932]

SCHWELLENBACH CAN WIN IN NOVEMBER ELECTION

An unusually large vote is expected in the Democratic primaries today. This means that thousands of voters normally Republican are taking a hand in selection of candidates in a party to which they have habitually supplied the opposition.

Some of these are actuated by the strategy of picking the easiest Democrats for Republicans to beat in the finals.

Most of them, however, dissatisfied with Republican rule, will vote in the Democratic primaries for candidates whom they hope to nominate and expect to support in November.

They should, therefore, vote today for men who by their abilities and their records are most likely to be able to win in November.

This is particularly true in the race for Governor of Washington.

Among voters of both parties there is quite general agreement that the Republican incumbent has mismanaged State affairs; that he is erratic, ruled by whim, and has few qualities to recommend him even if his obvious weaknesses were left out of the unattractive picture he presents.

If, as seems likely to happen, he is nominated for reelection by the Republicans, what Democrat can beat him?

If he is defeated in his party's primary by the other principal Republican contender—who has little more in his favor than the present Governor—what Democrat could be relied upon with greatest expectation to defeat this contender?

In either case the answer is LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH is the best—probably the sole—hope for Democratic victory in the gubernatorial race. He has a record of leadership unsurpassed by any man in either party in the State.

He has definite plans for reorganizing the State government in the interest of greater efficiency, economy, and honesty.

He has advanced understandable and workable proposals for revising our taxation system, not only to reduce the over-all tax load but to establish the principles of equity in tax incidence.

He has announced a specific plan for ameliorating the hardships and vast economic loss of unemployment.

He has made public an equally specific legislative program for thawing out and making productive the frozen deposits of shareholders in closed financial institutions of the State.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH is young, vigorous, forward looking—a thinking executive of established abilities and accomplishments.

He is a veteran of the World War, and as soon as service of his country in its armed forces was ended he entered the people's service in the battles of peace.

The list of causes in which he has been an outstanding leader includes every popular, progressive movement in which the State's people have had an interest in recent years—public power, public education, liberal legislation, labor, veterans' protection, and other activities.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH has the personal force and character, the professional and educational qualifications, entitling him to first consideration among all candidates for the chief executive's chair in this State.

He should be nominated in the Democratic primaries today and elected in November.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I think that the reading of these editorials very definitely will show the attitude of Mr. Hearst's representatives, who, as I say, knew more about the facts of this particular case than did anybody else.

All the questions raised in the present series of articles—there have been three of them in the Post-Intelligencer that I have seen so far—involve matters which were very definitely in issue in my campaign in 1934. My Republican opponent took advantage of the opportunity afforded him and made a series of charges against me. Those charges were submitted to me in the form of a questionnaire which was printed in 11 of the leading newspapers of the State in the form of an advertisement. The questionnaire asked me to answer the questions submitted. In order that the Members of the Senate may know that the charges which Mr. Hearst is making and will make during the next few weeks against me were matters which have been threshed out in the State of Washington, I desire to have printed in the RECORD an answer to the questionnaire which was printed not by me but by the editors of the 11 newspapers that printed the advertisements asking me the questions. Eleven different newspapers in the State of Washington apologized for having submitted the questions, and I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the statement of the Tacoma Sunday Ledger for November 4, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Tacoma (Wash.) Ledger of Nov. 4, 1934]

ABOUT THAT QUESTIONNAIRE

This newspaper in its issue of Friday, November 2, accepted an advertisement submitting a series of questions to LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH, Democratic nominee for the United States Senate, involving his relations with certain corporations, namely, the Superior Service Laundries, Inc., Brotherhood Bank & Trust Co., and the Pilsener Brewing Co.

This advertisement purported to have been signed by stockholders' committees of the Superior Service Laundries, Inc., and the Pilsener Brewing Co.

We are advised by officers of Superior Service Laundries, Inc., that the company is in no way responsible for the advertisement or the questions therein contained, and that Mr. SCHWELLENBACH's connection with the company was purely that of attorney, and that he was not responsible for the policies or the business affairs of the company. We are also advised by them that they know of no stockholders' committees among the stockholders of their company.

The paid advertisement was a political advertisement, and the Ledger has nothing to do with either the questions or the answers which might be made thereto.

Our readers must understand that with respect to the affairs of the companies, no inferences are to be drawn from the questions by reason of such paid advertisement.

The Superior Service Laundries, Inc., is actively engaged in business in Seattle, and while its stock may have suffered depreciation in value during the last few years in common with other securities, its stock is still of value and is actively traded through security channels. The company has always paid the interest on its bonds when due and has never operated at a loss.

With respect to the Pilsener Brewing Co., we are advised that this company has been reorganized with the approval of more than two-thirds of its stockholders and creditors and the judge of the Federal court. We are advised that it will be doing business in the near future and that 94 percent of the stock agreed to the reorganization plans. They also advise that they know of no stockholders' committee.

THE TACOMA LEDGER.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I wish to say to the Members of the Senate that after these various charges had been submitted to the people of the State of Washington, in November 1934, the people of the State, by the largest percentage of total votes that any Democratic candidate for the United States Senate has ever received in the State of Washington, elected me to the United States Senate, and the various charges which Mr. Hearst is making today have all been presented to the people of the State of Washington and were the issue in my campaign in 1934.

PREVENTION OF UNFAIR PRACTICES AND MISLEADING ADVERTISING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3744) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, referring to the enforcement clause of section 5 of Senate bill 3744, we find on page 6, lines 4, 5, and 6, the following:

The findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive.

That phrase is repeated several times afterward in the bill. It presents a question with respect to a claim made by a person against whom the Federal Trade Commission seeks to enforce a cease-and-desist order in advance of any overt act, in advance of and without any damage to any competitor and solely upon the Commission's having reason to believe that such person "has failed or neglected to obey or intends or is about to disobey" the order.

The question that occurs to me is this: Assuming that the person against whom this enforcement through the court considers that obedience by him would mean the destruction of his property or his liberty; in other words, assuming that his claim is that by the order of the Commission his property has been confiscated, or that by the order the security of his house and his papers against unreasonable searches and seizures is being violated, or assuming that his reason for not obeying is, as he claims, that the order has been obtained without due process of law; in other words, assuming that there is a constitutional right of liberty or of property involved in the order of the Commission, the question is, Are the findings of the Federal Trade Commission final, or can the respondent or the defendant go into the courts and obtain that remedy which the Constitution vouchsafes to him by testing the acts of the Federal Trade Commission against these guaranties to the people and against these guaranties to persons by thoroughly investigating de novo the facts in spite of the findings of the Commission? I address that question to the sponsor of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I shall be glad to answer the question. Of course, we cannot by this proposed legislation provide that the findings of fact shall be conclusive upon the court so as to take away any constitutional right which any individual may have, either as to the law or as to the facts; it will be impossible for us to do it; I would not attempt to advocate that the constitutional rights of any citizen should be taken away in that respect; and there is not any attempt to do it by this bill, let me say to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. That does not quite answer directly the question whether——

Mr. WHEELER. Then, perhaps, I did not understand the question.

Mr. AUSTIN. That does not quite answer the question whether the sponsor of the bill regards the words "the findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive", as binding the court in considering a constitutional question.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course not. They could not possibly do so.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a direct answer, and one I am very happy to have in the RECORD.

Mr. WHEELER. In one case, let me say to the Senator, that has been called to my attention, the case of the Federal Trade Commission against Curtis Publishing Co., the Court, under similar language, looked into additional facts and circumstances in that particular case, and held that it had a right to do so.

Mr. AUSTIN. Without taking too much time I wish to make a brief reference to the treatment of that question by the Supreme Court in the stockyards case. The Stockyards Act of 1921 was not identical in language. With respect to evidence—and I am reading from section 202 (b) of the Stockyards Act, which can be found in Forty-second Statutes at page 161—it provided as follows:

(b) If, after such hearing, the Secretary finds that the packer has violated or is violating any provisions of this title covered by the charges, he shall make a report in writing in which he shall state his findings as to the facts, and shall issue and cause to be served on the packer an order requiring such packer to cease and desist from continuing such violation. The testimony taken at the hearing shall be reduced to writing and filed in the records of the Department of Agriculture.

Turning to subsection (d) of section 202 we find this language:

The evidence so taken or admitted, duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case. The proceedings in such cases in the circuit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall be expedited in every way.

Although that is not the identical phraseology used in the pending bill, nevertheless the district court, on considering the matter, believed that it was bound thereby to accept that evidence exactly as it was, and to accept the findings of fact of the Secretary of Agriculture and not to review them even on the constitutional question. The Supreme Court denied this right, saying, among other things:

The district court thought that the action was still an open one under the Packers and Stockyards Act and expressed the view that, even though the issue is one of confiscation, the court is bound to accept the findings of the Secretary if they are supported by substantial evidence and that it is not within the judicial province to weigh the evidence and pass upon the issues of fact.

After discussing the matter the Court said that the court below having taken that view of the matter, the Supreme Court felt bound to pass upon it, to consider it, and declare the principle, which it did, as follows:

When the legislature appoints an agent to act within that sphere of legislative authority it may endow the agent with the power to make findings of fact which are conclusive, provided the requirements of due process which are specially applicable to such agency are met, as in according a fair hearing and acting upon evidence and not arbitrarily.

Again, the Court said later:

Under our system there is no warrant for the view that the judicial power of a competent court can be circumscribed by any legislative arrangement designed to give effect to administrative action going beyond the limits of constitutional authority. This is the purport of the decisions above cited with respect to the exercise of an independent judicial judgment upon the facts where confiscation is alleged. The question under the Packers and Stockyards Act is not different from that arising under any other act, and we see no reason why those decisions should be overruled.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point that part of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which begins on page 4, paragraph 3, ending on page 8.

There being no objection, the excerpt from the opinion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Third. The scope of judicial review upon the issue of confiscation: The question is not one of fixing a reasonable charge for a mere personal service subject to regulation under the commerce power, as in the case of market agencies employing but little capital. (See Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States, supra, pp. 438, 439.) Here, a large capital investment is involved, and the main issue is as to the alleged confiscation of that investment.

A preliminary question is presented by the contention that the district court, in the presence of this issue, failed to exercise its independent judgment upon the facts (11 F. Supp., pp. 326–328). (See Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U. S. 287, 289; Prendergast v. New York Telephone Co., 262 U. S. 43, 50; Bluefield Company v. Public Service Commission, 262 U. S. 679, 689; United Railways v. West, 280 U. S. 234, 251; Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States, supra, pp. 443, 444; Phillips v. Commissioner, 283 U. S. 589, 600; Crowell v. Benson, 285 U. S. 22 60; State Commission v. Wichita Gas Co., 290 U. S. 561, 569.) The district court thought that the question was still an open one under the Packers and Stockyards Act, and expressed the view that, even though the issue is one of confiscation, the court is bound to accept the findings of the Secretary if they are supported by substantial evidence and that it is not within the judicial province to weigh the evidence and pass upon the issues of fact. The Government points out that, notwithstanding what was said by the court upon this point, the court carefully analyzed the evidence, made many specific findings of its own, and in addition adopted, with certain exceptions, the findings of the Secretary. The Government insists that appellant thus had an adequate judicial review and, further, that the case is in equity and comes before the court on appeal, and that from every point of view the clear preponderance of the evidence shows that the prescribed rates were in fact just and reasonable. Hence, the Government says that the decree should be affirmed irrespective of possible error in the reasoning of the district court. (See West v. Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., 295 U. S. 662, 680.)

In view, however, of the discussion in the Court's opinion,[1] the preliminary question should be considered. The fixing of rates is a legislative act. In determining the scope of judicial review of that act there is a distinction between action within the sphere of legislative authority and action which transcends the limits of legislative power. Exercising its rate-making authority, the legislature has a broad discretion. It may exercise that authority directly or through the agency it creates or appoints to act for that purpose in accordance with appropriate standards. The Court does not sit as a board of revision to substitute its judgment for that of the legislature or its agents as to matters within the province of eiher (San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 439, 446; Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 433; Los Angeles Gas Co. v. Railroad Commission, 289 U. S. 287, 304). When the legislature itself acts within the broad field of legislative discretion its determinations are conclusive. When the legislature appoints an agent to act within that sphere of legislative authority it may endow the agent with power to make findings of fact which are conclusive, provided the requirements of due process which are specially applicable to such an agency are met, as in according a fair hearing and acting upon evidence and not arbitrarily (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., 227 U. S. 88, 91; Virginian Railway Co. v. United States, 272 U. S. 658, 663; Tagg Bros. & Moorehead v. United States, supra, p. 444; Florida v. United States, 292 U. S. 1, 12). In such cases the judicial inquiry into the facts goes no further than to ascertain whether there is evidence to support the findings, and the question of the weight of the evidence in determining issues of fact lies with the legislative agency acting within its statutory authority.

But the Constitution fixes limits to the rate-making power by prohibiting the deprivation of property without due process of law or the taking of private property for public use without just compensation. When the legislature acts directly, its action is subject to judicial scrutiny and determination in order to prevent the transgression of these limits of power. The legislature cannot preclude that scrutiny or determination by any declaration or legislative finding. Legislative declaration or finding is necessarily subject to independent judicial review upon the facts and the law by courts of competent jurisdiction, to the end that the Constitution as the supreme law of the land may be maintained. Nor can the legislature escape the constitutional limitation by authorizing its agent to make findings that the agent has kept within that limitation. Legislative agencies, with varying qualifications, work in a field peculiarly exposed to political demands. Some may be expert and impartial, others subservient. It is not difficult for them to observe the requirements of law in giving a hearing and receiving evidence. But to say that their findings of fact may be made conclusive where constitutional rights of liberty and property are involved, although the evidence clearly establishes that the findings are wrong and constitutional rights have been invaded, is to place those rights at the mercy of administrative officials and seriously to impair the security inherent in our judicial safeguards. That prospect, with our multiplication of administrative agencies, is not one to be lightly regarded. It is said that we can retain judicial authority to examine the weight of evidence when the question concerns the right of personal liberty. But if this be so, it is not because we are privileged to perform our judicial duty in that case and for reasons of convenience to disregard it in others. The principle applies when rights either of person or of property are protected by constitutional restrictions. Under our system there is no warrant for the view that the judicial power of a competent court can be circumscribed by any legislative arrangement designed to give effect to administrative action going beyond the limits of constitutional authority. This is the purport of the decisions above cited with respect to the exercise of an independent judicial judgment upon the facts where confiscation is alleged. The question under the Packers and Stockyards Act is not different from that arising under any other act, and we see no reason why those decisions should be overruled.

But this judicial duty to exercise an independent judgment does not require or justify disregard of the weight which may properly attach to findings upon hearing and evidence. On the contrary, the judicial duty is performed in the light of the proceedings already had and may be greatly facilitated by the assembling and analysis of the facts in the course of the legislative determination. Judicial judgment may be none the less appropriately independent because informed and aided by the sifting procedure of an expert legislative agency. Moreover, as the question is whether the legislative action has passed beyond the lowest limit of the permitted zone of reasonableness into the forbidden reaches of confiscation, judicial scrutiny must of necessity take into account the entire legislative process including the reasoning and findings upon which the legislative action rests. We have said that "in a question of rate making there is a strong presumption in favor of the conclusions reached by an experienced administrative body after a full hearing" (Darnell v. Edwards, 244 U. S. 564, 569). The established principle which guides the court in the exercise of its judgment on the entire case is that the complaining party carries the burden of making a convincing showing and that the court will not interfere with the exercise of the rate-making power unless confiscation is clearly established (Los Angeles Gas Co. v. Railroad Commission, 289 U. S. 287, 305; Lindheimer v. Illinois Telephone Co., 292 U. S. 151, 169; Dayton Power & Light Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 292 U. S. 290, 298).

A cognate question was considered in Manufacturers Railway Co. v. United States (246 U. S. 457, 470, 488–490). There appellees insisted that the finding of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the subject of confiscation was conclusive, or at least that it was not subject to be attacked upon evidence not presented to the Commission. We did not sustain that contention. Nevertheless, we pointed out that correct practice required that "in ordinary cases and where the opportunity is open" all the pertinent evidence should be submitted in the first instance to the Commission. The Court did not approve the course that was pursued in that case "of withholding from the Commission essential portions of the evidence that is alleged to show the rate in question to be confiscatory." And it was regarded as beyond debate that where the Commisison after full hearing had set aside a given rate as unreasonably high, it would require a "clear case" to justify a court, "upon evidence newly adduced, but not in a proper sense newly discovered", in annulling the action of the Commission upon the ground that the same rate was so unreasonably low as to deprive the carrier of its constitutional right of compensation. With that statement the Court turned to an examinaion of the evidence. The principle thus recognized, with respect to the weight to be accorded to action by the Commission after full hearing, applies a fortiori, when the case is heard upon the record made before the Commission or, as in this case, upon the record made before the Secretary of Agriculture. It follows, in the application of this principle, that as the ultimate determination, whether or not rates are confiscatory, ordinarily rests upon a variety of subordinate or primary findings of fact as to particular elements, such findings made by a legislative agency after hearing will not be disturbed save as in particular instances they are plainly shown to be overborne.

As the district court, despite its observations as to the scope of review, apparently did pass upon the evidence, making findings of its own and adopting findings of the Secretary, we do not think it necessary to remand the cause for further consideration and we turn to the other questions presented by the appeal.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask leave also to have inserted in the RECORD at this point an article published in the Washington Star of May 1, 1936, with headlines "Vigil on Rights Shown by Court—Supreme Tribunal Guards Against Usurpation by 'Fact' Probers", written by David Lawrence. It touches upon the very principle in issue here, although it does not mention the pending bill.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star of May 1, 1936]

VIGIL ON RIGHTS SHOWN BY COURT—SUPREME TRIBUNAL GUARDS AGAINST USURPATION BY "FACT" PROBERS

By David Lawrence

The most important event of this week in national affairs was the handing down of an opinion by the Supreme Court of the United States that sets up a guide of constructive value in aiding the citizen and the Government to steer a safe course through the mazes of new law that have been set up in recent years.

The average man probably does not realize that as government has become more and more complicated and overburdened with tasks that the legislative bodies have turned over to Executive agencies or commissions, the rights of the citizen have to be determined in a judicial fashion, especially if some question arises whether he is or is not complying with a given regulation.

The tendency on the part of Congress, and, for that matter, State legislatures, too, has been to write a law in general terms and leave it to a commission or board to proclaim regulations as to details. More than this, the right has been given to commissions to take testimony at hearings, some public and some private, and then it has been stipulated that as to "questions of fact" the decision of the commission shall be final and conclusive.

FINDINGS CAN BE COLORED

This merely means that while court review is not taken away, the opportunity for a court to look into a case to see whether a citizen's constitutional rights have been forfeited might seem to be limited. In other words, the reviewing court, if it had to accept the findings of fact by a commission or Executive department, would never be able to tell whether constitutional rights have been lost. For the so-called "findings" amount usually to an interpretation of the evidence, and hence a reviewing court would get a colored view of that evidence if the Executive agency happened to be politically minded or prejudiced with the viewpoint of a particular class in the economic struggles of today.

How, then, can a citizen be assured of court review? Congress has shown an inclination to write into the law itself some limitation on the right of appeal. The Supreme Court of the United States alone, however, can determine what is the supreme law of the land. It becomes important now to see whether Congress can limit the right of court review. Chief Justice Hughes speaking for the Supreme Court upheld the right of review where constitutional rights were jeopardized.

The case in point arose with reference to the enforcement of the Stockyards Act by the Secretary of Agriculture. It so happens that the "findings" of the Secretary were affirmed as correct by all the members of the Court. A question developed as to how far weight should be given to evidence taken by the Secretary and whether the facts themselves should be examined by the revising courts. Justice Brandeis seemed to think the decisions of these fact-finding commissions should be final. Justices Cardozo and Stone thought his reasoning was right, but conceded that the weight of precedent supported the contentions of Chief Justice Hughes, who delivered the opinion of the Court. In that opinion Mr. Hughes said:

"Legislative declaration or finding is necessarily subject to independent judicial review upon the facts and the law by courts of competent jurisdiction to the end that the Constitution, as the supreme law of the land, may be maintained. Nor can the legislature escape the constitutional limitation by authorizing its agent to make findings that the agent has kept within that limitation.

"Legislative agencies, with varying qualifications, work in a field peculiarly exposed to political demands. Some may be expert and impartial, others subservient. It is not difficult for them to observe the requirements of law in giving a hearing and receiving evidence. But to say that their findings of fact may be conclusive except where constitutional rights of liberty and property are involved, although the evidence clearly establishes that the findings are wrong and constitutional rights have been invaded, is to place those rights at the mercy of administrative officials and seriously to impair the security inherent in our judicial safeguards. That prospect, with our multiplication of administrative agencies, is not one to be lightly regarded."

The foregoing quotation will surely be of historical importance as a restatement of a doctrine or fundamental principle of constitutional law. It may take on new meaning because many New Deal laws have contained what are called legislative declarations that now become mere "declarations" and are not binding on the courts. For instance, the Securities Act of 1933 says:

"The findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive."

The Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 contained a duplication of the same provision.

OTHERS CONTAIN PROVISION

The National Labor Relations Act, after prescribing methods of filing petitions in United States Circuit Courts for enforcement of the Board's orders, says:

"The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive."

The Public Utility Act of 1935 and the Guffey Coal Act contain identical provisions stating that the findings of the Commission which enforces each act "shall be conclusive."

Many cases are pending in the lower courts touching on what are or are not the "facts" in labor disputes. If a labor board which consists of prolabor members or proemployer members should have the power to declare what are the "facts", and this declaration were to be binding, the constitutional rights of the citizen could be swept away virtually by fiat or decree of Congress, through the simple method of creating an agency or commission to hold hearings and issue findings on the alleged "facts." The Supreme Court of the United States, ever vigilant to protect the rights of the citizen, has by its pronouncement reiterated a warning to citizens as well as to Government agencies that constitutional rights cannot be thus taken away. Undoubtedly executive commissions will be more careful in the future, and when a few principles have been set up in a number of test cases the chances are the Supreme Court will not be burdened with many cases of reviewing the "facts."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have heard some criticism of that feature of the bill which provides that in no case shall it be necessary to establish a violation of an order of the Commission as a condition precedent to the affirmance, modification, or setting aside of the order or entering another order enforcing it. My view of this new provision is that it will be very beneficial.

On the whole I am inclined to favor the proposed legislation. Its purpose is preventive in character. I know from observation that the Federal Trade Commission Act has needed some amendments of this character. I am glad to observe that there has not been any effort in drafting the bill to amend the Constitution of the United States with reference to what is interstate commerce and what is intrastate commerce.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have one amendment which I should like to offer which was not taken up in the committee. It is simply a provision that upon the expiration of his term of office a commissioner shall continue to serve until his successor shall have been appointed and shall have been qualified. That is merely to provide that in the event of the expiration of the term of a Commissioner there will not be a vacancy, but that the occupant will hold until such time as his successor is appointed and qualified.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think that is the legislative practice as expressed in most statutes.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 5. That section 1 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting, immediately after the words "unexpired term of the Commissioner whom he shall succeed", the following: "Provided, however, That upon the expiration of his term of office a Commissioner shall continue to serve until his successor shall have been appointed and shall have qualified."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desires to bring before the Senate a bill relating to an organic act for the Virgin Islands. While he is getting his papers together, I suggest the absence of a quorum in order that Senators may know that the bill is being brought before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	La Follette	Overton
Ashurst	Couzens	Lewis	Pittman
Austin	Davis	Logan	Pope
Bachman	Dieterich	Lonergan	Reynolds
Barbour	Donahey	Long	Robinson
Barkley	Duffy	McAdoo	Russell
Black	Frazier	McGill	Schwellenbach
Bone	George	McKellar	Sheppard
Bulkley	Gerry	McNary	Shipstead
Bulow	Gibson	Maloney	Steiwer
Burke	Glass	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Guffey	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hale	Moore	Townsend
Capper	Harrison	Murphy	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hatch	Murray	Van Nuys
Carey	Hayden	Neely	Wagner
Chavez	Johnson	Norris	Walsh
Connally	Keyes	Nye	Wheeler
Coolidge	King	O'Mahoney	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PERMANENT GOVERNMENT FOR VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4524, Calendar No. 2070, to provide a permanent government for the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I observe that the sponsor of the bill is the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], who has advised me that the bill in every way conforms to his best judgment, which is always good. I am not sure the other members of the committee were all in attendance. As one member, I have been too much occupied elsewhere to be present at the meetings of the committee. Were other Senators present at the hearings when the bill was considered?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, most of the Senators upon the committee were present when legislation relating to the Virgin Islands, including the question of an organic act, was under consideration. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] was present on two occasions, as I recall. At the first meeting the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs considered in a general way the question of enacting an organic act for the government of the Virgin Islands. Two tentative drafts were before the committee—one submitted by the Interior Department and the other by representatives of the residents of the Virgin Islands. The draft submitted by the latter contained some of the provisions found in the bill proposed by the representatives of the Interior Department. However, there were striking differences, some of which appeared to be irreconcilable. At the meeting of the committee referred to nearly every member was present, and a general discussion ensued, followed by a rather careful examination of the proposed drafts.

I had prepared and submitted to the committee before it met a statement showing, in parallel columns, the provisions of each bill, including, of course, the agreements and disagreements between the same. Subsequently, I was asked by the chairman of the committee to examine the drafts which had been submitted and to confer with representatives of the Interior Department and representatives who had come from the Virgin Islands to represent the people residing there, with the view of preparing a measure to report to the Senate. I might add that various groups of the residents of the Virgin Islands had met and selected representatives to come to Washington and present their views, and also to submit a proposed draft for an organic act for the islands.

I had numerous conferences with Dr. E. H. Gruening, Director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions, Department of the Interior; Governor Cramer, the present Governor of the Virgin Islands; Mr. Hastings, attorney for the Department of the Interior; and the representatives who had come from the Virgin Islands to present the views of the residents of the islands, including their attorney, Mr. Jacobsen. I received information from various sources, and utilized all data that were made available. At these various conferences the differences of the respective groups were canvassed, and the information at hand utilized with a view to the formulation of an organic act that would meet all reasonable demands. As stated, there were conflicting views and I attempted to reconcile them and to secure the approval of the various groups and their representatives to a measure that would be just to the Virgin Islands and their inhabitants and, at the same time, that would recognize and protect the interests of the United States. During these negotiations and conferences, a measure was prepared which embodied some of the provisions in each of the tentative drafts first submitted, as well as others, and which represented a partial agreement upon the part of those participating in the conferences.

Some of the provisions recommended by the contending parties I rejected, but I kept in mind always the primary object sought, viz, a measure that would be just and fair to all parties concerned. As a result of the conferences, a tentative draft was suggested and it was introduced by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON]. This became the basis of further conferences and discussions. Finally the measure was so perfected that I believed it should be brought back to the committee for its approval. There were two or three questions not yet fully determined, and when I submitted the bill to the committee these undetermined questions were settled. The committee then approved the bill, and I was directed to report it to the Senate and secure favorable action at the earliest possible date. The bill which I have reported substantially meets the views of the representatives of the Interior Department and the views of the representatives of the Virgin Islands.

Mr. McNARY. Has the bill met with the unanimous approval of the committee?

Mr. KING. It has been approved by all members of the committee who were present during its consideration by the committee, and, so far as I know, by the very few who were prevented from attending the committee meetings when the questions involved were under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4524) to provide a permanent government for the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the provisions of this act, and the name "the Virgin Islands" as used in this act, shall apply to and include the territorial domain, lands and waters acquired by the United States through cession of the Danish West Indian Islands by the convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Denmark, entered into August 4, 1916, and ratified by the Senate on September 7, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 1706).

SEC. 2. The insular possession which is the Virgin Islands shall be divided into two municipalities, namely, (1) the municipality of St. Croix, and (2) the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John. The boundaries of said municipalities shall be the same as at present established in accordance with laws in force on the date of enactment of this act, and the capital and seat of the central government shall be St. Thomas. In this act the phrase "the Government of the Virgin Islands" shall include, in addition to the governing authority of the insular possession, the governing authority of the two municipalities, unless the context shall indicate a different intention.

SEC. 3. The inhabitants of the municipality of St. Croix and of the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John are hereby constituted into bodies politic and juridic, under the present name of each such municipality, and as such bodies they shall have perpetual succession and power (a) to adopt and use an official seal; (b) to sue and in cases arising out of contract to be sued; (c) to demand the fulfillment of obligations under the law and to defend and prosecute all actions at law; (d) to acquire property by purchase, exchange, donation or bequest, by virtue of proceedings for the collection of taxes, by eminent-domain proceedings, or by any other means provided by law, and to possess, administer, and govern such property; and (e) to alienate or encumber any of their property, subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. All property which may have been acquired by the United States from Denmark in the Virgin Islands under the convention entered into August 4, 1916, not heretofore or within 1 year hereafter reserved by the United States for public purposes, is hereby placed under the control of the Government of the Virgin Islands: Provided, That, except as otherwise expressly provided, all laws of the United States for the protection and improvement of the navigable waters of the United States and the preservation of the interest of navigation and commerce shall apply to the Virgin Islands: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect or impair in any manner the terms and conditions of any authorizations, permits, or other powers heretofore lawfully granted or exercised in or in respect of the Virgin Islands by any authorized officer or agent of the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to lease or to sell upon such terms as he may deem advantageous to the Government of the United States any property of the United States under his administrative supervision in the Virgin Islands not needed for public purposes.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

SEC. 5. All local legislative powers in the municipality of St. Croix, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be vested in a local legislative assembly, which shall be designated the "Municipal Council of St. Croix." Said council shall consist of nine members elected by the qualified electors of the municipality for a term of 2 years beginning the 1st day of January next succeeding the date of election. The members shall be elected in four representative districts, two of which shall be the town of Christiansted and the country district thereof, and two of which shall be the town of Frederiksted and the country district thereof, as defined by law in force on the date of enactment of this act: Provided, That two members shall be elected for each of said districts and one member at large.

SEC. 6. All local legislative powers in the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be vested in a local legislative assembly which shall be designated the "Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John." Said council shall consist of seven members elected by the qualified electors of the municipality for a term of 2 years beginning the 1st of January next succeeding the date of election. The members shall be elected in three representative districts, one of which shall be the town district and one the country district of St.

Thomas, and one the district of St. John, as defined by law in force on the date of enactment of this act: Provided, That two members shall be elected for each of the districts of St. Thomas, one member for the district of St. John, and two members at large.

SEC. 7. After January 1, 1937, joint sessions of said municipal councils shall constitute and shall be designated the "Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands." The legislative assembly shall convene in St. Thomas upon call by the Governor, and also whenever both municipal councils shall determine by resolutions passed by each of them: Provided, That the Governor shall call the legislative assembly at least once during each calendar year. The legislative assembly may enact legislation applicable to the Virgin Islands as a whole, but no legislation shall be considered other than that specified in the message by the Governor calling such a session, or in both of said resolutions: Provided further, That so long as the membership of the legislative assembly does not exceed 16 members, a quorum of the legislative assembly shall consist of not less than 10 members, and no bill shall be enacted until it shall be passed by a two-thirds majority vote of the members present: Provided further, That the legislative assembly shall have and exercise all powers and immunities within the jurisdiction of the Virgin Islands which are granted under this act to the municipal councils within their respective jurisdictions, and shall be subject to the same limitations as those imposed on the municipal councils. The municipal councils shall not enact laws or ordinances in conflict with the enactments of the legislative assembly.

SEC. 8. The present colonial councils shall continue to function until January 1, 1937. The next general election in the Virgin Islands shall be held on November 3, 1936. At such election there shall be chosen the entire membership of each municipal council as herein provided. Thereafter the elections shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, beginning with the year 1938, and every 2 years thereafter. The terms of office of members of the respective colonial councils of the municipalities of St. Thomas and St. John and of St. Croix, whose terms of office under existing law would expire prior to January 1, 1937, are hereby extended to that date.

SEC. 9. No person shall be eligible to be a member of either municipal council unless he is a citizen of the United States, over 25 years of age, is a qualified voter of the municipality in which elected, has resided in the Virgin Islands for a period of not less than 3 years next preceding the date of election, and has not been convicted of a felony or of a crime involving moral turpitude. Each municipal council may exclude from membership therein persons receiving compensation from the Government of the United States or from either of the municipal governments of the Virgin Islands.

SEC. 10. The members of each municipal council shall receive allowance for actual travel expenses and such reasonable subsistence as may be prescribed by the council.

SEC. 11. The respective municipal councils shall be the sole judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their members, shall be vested with the authority and attributes inherent in legislative bodies, and shall jointly or separately have the power to institute and conduct investigations, issue subpenas to witnesses and other parties concerned, and administer oaths. Existing rules of the colonial councils shall continue in force and effect, except as inconsistent with this act, until altered, amended, or repealed by the respective municipal councils. No member shall be held to answer before any tribunal other than the respective municipal councils themselves for any speech or debate in the municipal councils and the members shall in all cases, except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of the municipal councils and in going to and returning from the same.

SEC. 12. Each municipal council shall annually appoint from among its members, for a term of 1 year, three members to serve as a standing committee, which, under the name of the "Municipal Committee", shall advise the Governor concerning the management of the fiscal affairs of the municipality, and concerning matters relating to the municipality, in accordance with bylaws adopted by the municipal council and approved by the Governor. The municipal committee shall have power when granted by local law to recommend to the Governor transfers between items in the annual budgets, and loans from municipal funds, but no such transfers or loans shall be made by the Governor except upon the recommendation of the municipal committee.

SEC. 13. Each municipal council shall assemble for ordinary meetings on a certain day of every second month, which day shall be previously fixed by the Governor for the whole year, and for extraordinary meetings at the call of the Governor or the chairman of the council. The Governor may postpone the meetings of the municipal councils, but not for a longer period than 14 days. The Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John shall convene at St. Thomas, and the Municipal Council of St. Croix shall convene at Christiansted.

SEC. 14. The Governor may introduce bills in the respective municipal councils. The Governor shall submit to the respective municipal councils, at least 90 days before the close of each fiscal year, a budget of estimated receipts and expenditures for the respective municipalities, which shall be the basis for the annual local appropriation bills for such municipalities. He shall from time to time submit to the respective municipal councils such reports concerning the fiscal affairs of the municipalities as may be requested by resolution of either municipal council.

SEC. 15. The quorum of each municipal council shall consist of an absolute majority of all its members. No bill shall become a law until it shall be passed by a majority (yea-and-nay) vote of the members present and voting of the municipal council having jurisdiction, entered upon the journal, and approved by the Governor, except as otherwise herein provided. Each municipal council shall keep a journal of its proceedings and publish the same during the year, and the yeas and nays of the members voting on any question shall be entered on the journal.

SEC. 16. New legislation, and repeals, alterations, and amendments of local laws of the Virgin Islands by the municipal council having jurisdiction, and by the legislative assembly, shall be effective and enforced when, and to the extent, such new legislation, repeals, alterations, and amendments are approved by the Governor, and the Governor shall state specifically in each case whether his approval or disapproval is in whole or in part, and if in part only, what part is approved and what part not approved. The Governor may veto any specific item or items in any bill which appropriates money for specific purposes, but shall veto other bills, if at all, only as a whole. If any bill passed by the municipal council having jurisdiction or by the legislative assembly be disapproved in whole or in part by the Governor, the Governor shall within 30 calendar days return such bill to the said municipal council or to the legislative assembly, whether in actual session or not, setting forth his objections. If after reconsideration by the legislative body having jurisdiction two-thirds of all the members of the said body pass such bill or part of bill, it shall be sent to the Governor who, in case he shall not then approve it, shall transmit the same to the President. If the President approves such bill or part of bill, he shall sign it and it shall become law; if he does not approve such bill or part of bill, he shall return it to the Governor, so stating, and it shall not become law. If any bill shall not be returned by the Governor as herein provided within 30 calendar days after it shall have been presented to him the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it. The President shall approve or disapprove an act submitted to him under the provisions of this section within 3 months from and after its presentation for his approval; and if not acted upon within such time, it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved. All laws enacted by the Municipal Council of St. Croix, by the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John, or by the legislative assembly, shall be reported by the Governor to the Secretary of the Interior, and by him to the Congress, which hereby reserves the power and the authority to annul the same. The laws not annulled shall be published annually as a public document. If at the termination of any fiscal year the appropriation necessary for the support of the municipal government for the ensuing fiscal year shall not have been made, then the several sums appropriated in the last appropriation bills for the objects and purposes therein specified, so far as the same may be applicable, shall be deemed to be reappropriated, item by item; and until the municipal council of the municipality having jurisdiction shall act in such behalf, the Governor may make the payments and collections necessary for the purpose aforesaid.

SEC. 17. Beginning on January 1, 1938, or on such earlier date subsequent to January 1, 1937, as may be fixed by local law or ordinance for either municipality, and thereafter, the franchise shall be vested in residents of the Virgin Islands who are citizens of the United States, 21 years of age or over, and able to read and write the English language. Additional qualifications may be prescribed by the legislative assembly: Provided, however, That no property or income qualification shall ever be imposed upon or required of any voter, nor shall any discrimination in qualification be made or based upon difference in race, color, sex, or religious belief.

SEC. 18. The laws of the United States applicable to the Virgin Islands on the date of enactment of this act, and all local laws and ordinances in force on such date in the Virgin Islands, not inconsistent with this act, shall continue in force and effect: Provided, That the Municipal Council of St. Croix and the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John, and the legislative assembly, shall have power, when not inconsistent with this act and within their respective jurisdictions, to amend, alter, modify, or repeal any law of the United States of local application only, or any ordinance, public or private, civil or criminal, continued in force and effect by this act, except as herein otherwise provided, and to enact new laws and ordinances not inconsistent with this act and not inconsistent with the laws of the United States hereafter made applicable to the Virgin Islands or any part thereof, subject to the power of the Congress to annul the same. The laws of the United States relating to patents, trademarks, and copyrights, and to the enforcement of rights arising thereunder, shall have the same force and effect in the Virgin Islands as in the continental United States, and the District Court of the Virgin Islands shall have the same jurisdiction in causes arising under such laws as is exercised by United States district courts.

SEC. 19. The legislative power of the Virgin Islands shall extend to all subjects of local application not inconsistent with this act or the laws of the United States made applicable to said islands, but no law shall be enacted which would impair rights existing or arising by virtue of any treaty entered into by the United States, nor shall the lands or other property of nonresidents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents.

EXECUTIVE BRANCH

SEC. 20. The executive power of the Virgin Islands and of the municipalities thereof shall be vested in an executive officer whose title shall be "the Governor of the Virgin Islands" and shall be exercised under supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The Governor shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold office at the pleasure of the President and until his successor is chosen and qualified. The Governor shall reside in the Virgin Islands during his official incumbency. He shall have general supervision and control of all executive and administrative departments, bureaus, and offices of the government of the Virgin Islands. He shall faithfully execute the laws of the United States applicable to the Virgin Islands, and the laws and ordinances of the Virgin Islands. He may grant pardons and reprieves and remit fines and forfeitures for offenses against the local laws, and may grant respites for all offenses against the applicable laws of the United States until the decision of the President can be ascertained. He may veto any legislation as provided in this act. He shall commission all officers that he may be authorized to appoint. He may call upon the commanders of the military and naval forces of the United States in the islands, or summon the posse comitatus, or call out the militia, to prevent or suppress violence, invasion, insurrection, or rebellion; and he may, in case of rebellion or invasion, or imminent danger thereof, when the public safety requires it, suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, or place the islands, or any part thereof, under martial law, until communication can be had with the President and the President's decision thereon made known. He shall annually, and at such other times as the President or the Congress may require, make official report of the transactions of the government of the Virgin Islands to the Secretary of the Interior, and his said annual report shall be transmitted to the Congress. He shall perform such additional duties and functions as may, in pursuance of law, be delegated to him by the President, or by the Secretary of the Interior. He shall have the power to issue executive regulations not in conflict with any applicable law or ordinance. He shall attend or may depute another person to represent him at the meetings of the legislative authorities herein established, and may give expression to his views on any matter before such bodies.

SEC. 21. The President shall appoint a Government Secretary for the Virgin Islands, who shall have all the powers of the Governor in the case of a vacancy or temporary removal, resignation, or disability of the Governor, or in case of his temporary absence. He shall have custody of the seal of the Virgin Islands and shall countersign and affix such seal to all executive proclamations and all other executive documents. He shall, when practicable, attend all meetings of the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John, before which body he shall give expression to the advice of the Governor. He shall record and preserve the laws enacted by the legislative authorities herein established. He shall promulgate all proclamations and orders of the Governor and all laws enacted by said legislative authorities. He shall have all such executive powers and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law or assigned to him by the Governor.

SEC. 22. The Secretary of the Interior shall appoint an administrator for St. Croix, who shall act for the Governor in the administration of the affairs of the municipality of St. Croix. He shall, when practicable, attend all meetings of the municipal council of St. Croix, before which body he shall give expression to the advice of the Governor. He shall exercise supervision over all administrative departments in the municipality of St. Croix, subject to the direction of the Governor.

SEC. 23. The Secretary of the Interior shall appoint such other executive and administrative officers as may, in his discretion, be required. Such officers shall have such powers and duties as may be conferred or imposed upon them by law or ordinance, or by order of the Secretary of the Interior or executive regulation of the Governor not inconsistent with any such law or ordinance. The salary of all officers and employees appointed by the President or by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid from funds appropriated for the Government of the Virgin Islands by the Congress in annual appropriation bills, or as may be otherwise provided by law. The officers appointed by the Secretary of the Interior shall hold office during his pleasure, and in making such appointments the Secretary shall give due consideration to natives of the Virgin Islands.

SEC. 24. The Governor shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the municipal council having jurisdiction, all salaried officers and employees of the municipal governments whose salaries are provided for in the budgets of the municipal governments. In the event of a vacancy in any office under the Government of the Virgin Islands, or the absence, illness, or temporary disqualification of any officer, the Governor shall designate an officer or employee of the Government of the Virgin Islands to discharge the functions of such officer during such vacancy, absence, illness, or temporary disqualification.

JUDICIAL BRANCH

SEC. 25. The judicial power of the Virgin Islands shall be vested in a court to be designated "the District Court of the Virgin Islands" and in such court or courts of inferior jurisdiction as may have been or may hereafter be established by local law: Provided, That the legislative assembly may provide for the organization and conduct of a Superior Court of the Virgin Islands and may transfer from the district court to such superior court jurisdiction over any or all causes other than those arising under the laws of the United States. Appeals from the superior court shall be as provided by law in the case of appeals from the district court.

SEC. 26. The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a judge and a district attorney for the District Court of the Virgin Islands, who shall hold office for the term of 4 years and until their successors are chosen and qualified unless sooner removed by the President for cause.

The Attorney General shall appoint and fix the compensation of all other officers necessary for the transaction of the business of the district court, and the compensation of such officers and the judge of the district court and the administrative expenses of such court shall be paid from appropriations made for the Department of Justice. The duties of such officers shall be prescribed by law or ordinance and by order of the Attorney General not inconsistent therewith: Provided, That the Governor may call upon the district attorney to advise him upon any legal questions concerning the administration of the Government of the Virgin Islands.

SEC. 27. The District Court of the Virgin Islands shall consist of two divisions, one constituted by the municipality of St. Croix and one constituted by the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, as defined by local law in force on the date of enactment of this act. The judge of the district court shall hold court in each division at such time as he may designate by order, at least once in 2 months in each division. The rules of practice and procedure in such district court shall be prescribed by law or ordinance or by rules and regulations of the district judge not inconsistent with law or ordinance. The process of the district court shall run throughout the Virgin Islands.

SEC. 28. The district court shall have jurisdiction of—

(1) All criminal cases under the laws of the respective municipalities or under the laws of the United States applicable to the Virgin Islands;
(2) All cases in equity;
(3) All cases in admiralty;
(4) All cases of divorce and annulment of marriage;
(5) All cases at law involving principal sums exceeding $200;
(6) All cases involving title to real estate;
(7) All appeals from judgments rendered in the inferior courts;
(8) All matters and proceedings not otherwise hereinabove provided for which, on the date of enactment of this act, were within the jurisdiction of the District Court of the Virgin Islands, or of the judge thereof, or which may hereafter be placed within the jurisdiction of the District Court of the Virgin Islands, or of the judge thereof, by local law.

The district court shall also have concurrent jurisdiction with the inferior courts as provided in section 32.

SEC. 29. The district court shall also have jurisdiction of offenses under the criminal laws of the United States when such offenses are committed on the high seas beyond the territorial limits of the Virgin Islands on vessels belonging in whole or in part to the United States, to any citizen thereof, or to any corporation created by or under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof, and the offenders are found in the Virgin Islands or are brought into the Virgin Islands after the commission of the offense.

SEC. 30. Appeals from the District Court of the Virgin Islands shall be as provided by law in force on the date of enactment of this act: Provided, That no appeal shall be predicated upon the existence of a right of appeal under the law of Denmark.

SEC. 31. In any case, civil or criminal, originating in said district court, no person shall be denied the right to trial by jury on the demand of either party: Provided, That if no jury is demanded the case shall be tried by the court without a jury: Provided further, That the judge of the district court may, on his own motion, order a jury for the trial of any criminal action: Provided further, That the respective Municipal Councils of St. Croix and of St. Thomas and St. John may provide for trial in misdemeanor cases by a jury of six qualified persons.

SEC. 32. The inferior courts shall have jurisdiction concurrent with the district court in all civil cases in which the principal sum claimed does not exceed $200, and of all criminal cases wherein the punishment that may be imposed shall not exceed a fine of $100 or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, all violations of police regulations and executive regulations, and any cause or offense wherein jurisdiction hereafter shall have been conferred by local law. Such inferior courts shall hold preliminary investigations in charges of felony and charges of misdemeanor in which the punishment that may be imposed is beyond the jurisdiction granted to the inferior courts by this section, and shall commit offenders to the district court and grant bail in bailable cases. The rules governing said courts and prescribing the duties of inferior judges and inferior court officers, oaths, and bonds, the times and places of holding such courts, the disposition of fines, costs, forfeitures, enforcement of judgments, providing for appeals therefrom to the district court, and the disposition and treatment of prisoners shall be as established by law or ordinance in force on the date of enactment of this act or as may hereafter be established by law or ordinance by the municipal council having jurisdiction.

SEC. 33. Appeals in civil and criminal cases from the judgments and rulings of the inferior courts shall be to the district court and shall be taken in accordance with the laws and ordinances of the respective municipalities: Provided, That the right of appeal in all cases, civil and criminal, shall be as established by law or ordinance in force on the date of enactment of this act, or as may hereafter be established by law or ordinance by the municipal council having jurisdiction.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 34. No law shall be enacted in the Virgin Islands which shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or deny to any person therein equal protection of the laws.

In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to be represented by counsel for his defense, to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to have a copy thereof, to have a speedy and public trial, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, and to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor.

No person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense without due process of law, and no person for the same offense shall be twice put in jeopardy of punishment, nor shall be compelled in any criminal cause to give evidence against himself; nor shall any person sit as judge or magistrate in any case in which he has been engaged as attorney or prosecutor.

All persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for first-degree murder or any capital offense, when the proof is evident or the presumption great.

No law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be enacted.

No person shall be imprisoned or shall suffer forced labor for debt.

All persons shall have the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus and the same shall not be suspended except as herein expressly provided.

No ex-post-facto law or bill of attainder shall be enacted.

Private property shall not be taken for public use except upon payment of just compensation ascertained in the manner provided by law.

Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to limit the power of the municipal councils herein provided to enact laws for the protection of life, the public health, or the public safety.

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

The right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated.

No warrant for arrest or search shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

Slavery shall not exist in the Virgin Islands.

Involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall not exist in the Virgin Islands.

No law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the Government for the redress of grievances.

No law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference shall forever be allowed, and no political or religious test other than an oath to support the Constitution and the laws of the United States applicable to the Virgin Islands, and the laws of the Virgin Islands, shall be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the Government of the Virgin Islands.

The contracting of polygamous or plural marriages is prohibited.

No money shall be paid out of the treasury except in accordance with an act of Congress or money bill of the local legislative authority having jurisdiction and on warrant drawn by the proper officer.

The employment of children under the age of 14 years in any occupation injurious to health or morals or hazardous to life or limb is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 35. All taxes, duties, fees, and public revenues collected in the municipality of St. Croix shall be covered into the treasury of the Virgin Islands and held in account for said municipality and all taxes, duties, fees, and public revenues collected in the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John shall be covered into said treasury of the Virgin Islands and held in account for said municipality: Provided, That the proceeds of customs duties, less the cost of collection, and the proceeds of the United States income tax, and the proceeds of any taxes levied by the Congress on the inhabitants of the Virgin Islands, and all quarantine, passport, immigration, and naturalization fees collected in the Virgin Islands shall be covered into the treasury of the Virgin Island and held in account for the respective municipalities, and shall be expended for the benefit and government of said municipalities in accordance with the annual municipal budgets. The Municipal Council of St. Croix may make appropriations for the purposes of said municipality from, and to be paid out of, the funds credited to its account in the treasury of the Virgin Islands; and the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John may make appropriations for the purposes of said municipality from, and to be paid out of, the funds credited to its account in said treasury.

SEC. 36. Taxes and assessments on property and incomes, internal-revenue taxes, license fees, and service fees may be imposed and collected, and royalties for franchises, privileges, and concessions may be collected for the purposes of the government of the Virgin Islands as may be provided and defined by the municipal councils herein established: Provided, That all money hereafter derived from any tax levied or assessed for a special purpose shall be treated as a special fund in the treasury of the Virgin Islands and paid out for such purpose only, except when otherwise authorized by the legislative authority having jurisdiction after the purpose for which such fund was created has been accomplished. Until Congress shall otherwise provide, all laws concerning import duties and customs in the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John now in effect shall be in force and effect in and for the Virgin Islands: Provided further, That the President may, by Executive order, establish or alter rules and regulations for the administration of customs laws. The export duties in effect on the date of enactment of this act may be from time to time reduced, repealed, or restored by ordinance of the municipal council having jurisdiction: Provided further, That no new export duties shall be levied in the Virgin Islands except by the Congress.

SEC. 37. All judicial process shall run in the name of "United States of America, scilicet, the President of the United States", and all penal or criminal prosecutions in the local courts shall be conducted in the name of and by authority of "the Peoples of the Virgin Islands of the United States."

SEC. 38. All officials of the government of the Virgin Islands shall be citizens of the United States, and before entering upon the duties of their respective offices shall take an oath to support the Constitution and laws of the United States applicable to the Virgin Islands and the laws of the Virgin Islands.

SEC. 39. All reports required by law to be made by the Governor to any official of the United States shall hereafter be made to the Secretary of the Interior, and the President is hereby authorized to place all matters pertaining to the government of the Virgin Islands under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 40. This act shall take effect upon its enactment, but until its provisions shall severally become operative as herein provided, the corresponding legislative, executive, and judicial functions of the existing government shall continue to be exercised as now provided by law or ordinance, and the present incumbents of all offices under the government of the Virgin islands shall continue in office until their successors are appointed and have qualified unless sooner removed by competent authority.

SEC. 41. This act may be cited as the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from Utah make a general explanation of the purposes of the bill, and the way in which those purposes are met.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to do so. Perhaps I may save time by reading the report which I submitted when I offered the bill in the Senate.

Nearly 20 years have elapsed since the purchase of the Virgin Islands from Denmark. However, this possession is still governed under the act of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat. 1132)— establishing "a temporary government" for the then newly acquired Territory. The act of March 3, 1917, embodies no orderly or organized plan of government. It is essentially a makeshift designed to serve until an adequate body of fundamental law should be incorporated in an organic act for the Virgin Islands.

Which I have here before me—

Senators will recall that for a time the islands were governed by the Navy Department. That is to say, they were under the control of the Navy Department, and a naval officer was the chief administrative and executive officer of the islands.

The experience of the past 20 years has revealed the basic governmental needs of this insular possession. A proposed organic act, similar to the present bill in many particulars, was the subject of committee hearings during the Seventy-third Congress. From time to time the local municipal councils—

And I may say that there are two—have drafted proposals for an organic act and have conducted public hearings for the discussion of such proposals in the Virgin Islands. Very soon after the government of the Virgin Islands was placed under supervision of the Department of the Interior—

And that is within the past few years—

that Department addressed itself to the problem of a permanent local government with a view to making such recommendations to Congress as would provide for a responsible and adequate government, consistent with American democratic ideals and satisfactory to the people of the Virgin Islands.

Thus, when the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs held hearings upon the present bill (S. 4524) the Governor of the Virgin Islands, representatives of the Interior Department, an official delegation from the local councils, and other informed persons were able to present pertinent data and to acquaint the committee with the views of the present governing authorities and of the people to be governed.

Detailed discussion of the bill should be prefaced further by a statement that the inhabitants of the Virgin Islands are literate and loyal citizens of the United States. It is the view of the committee that they are capable of managing their local affairs. Unfortunately, the islands are not yet economically self-supporting. Hence it has been necessary to provide for an amount of Federal control over local affairs commensurate with continuing expenditures of Federal funds to subsidize the local government.

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

The first four sections of the substitute bill reported by the committee define the territorial limits of the Virgin Islands and provide for the subdivision of the insular possession into two inferior political units, namely, the municipality of St. Croix, and the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John. Provision is also made for the division of public property between the Federal Government and the municipalities.

District Court of the Virgin Islands, who shall hold office for the | the laws.

The three inhabited islands are St. Croix, an agricultural community, and St. Thomas and St. John, two islands near to each other but some 40 miles from St. Croix, with an economy organized around the business of the harbor of St. Thomas. In accordance with the wishes of the people of the Virgin Islands and the divergent interests of the islands themselves, it has been deemed desirable to preserve the present political identity of each community as a political subdivision of the insular possession.

I digress long enough to state that it is the view of the committee, and my view, that, so far as possible and consistent with the best interests of all concerned, the desires of the islanders should be respected. Conceding that they were entitled to a larger measure of local self-government, it followed as a necessary corollary that their opportunities for participation of the government of the islands should be multiplied. Accordingly this bill gives them the franchise regardless of race, creed, or color. Those who have attained the age of 21 years may vote, but not at the election on November 1936, but at all elections which may be held thereafter.

I should add that under the Danish Government the two political or municipal subdivisions existed and the people were satisfied with the boundaries of the same. The bill presented perpetuates those two political subdivisions with the same boundaries and geographic limits.

FRANCHISE AND LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

Sections 5 to 19, inclusive, concern the franchise and the organization of the legislative branch of the local government. The only elected officers of the local government are the members of the local legislative bodies. Provision is made for 3 such bodies, a municipal council of 9 members for St. Croix, a municipal council of 7 members for St. Thomas and St. John, and a territorial legislative assembly composed of the 16 persons who are members of the municipal councils. Matters of purely local concern are placed within local legislative power. The levying of local taxes and the expenditure of local revenue are authorized. It has not been deemed wise to give the local government power to incur bonded indebtedness so long as local revenue is insufficient to pay the entire cost of local government.

Locally enacted bills may be vetoed by the Governor. A bill may be passed over the Governor's veto by a two-thirds majority of the enacting legislative body. However, in such case the measure does not become law until referred to the President whose disapproval will prevent it from becoming law.

Provision is made for universal suffrage in the islands beginning January 1, 1938, or after January 1, 1937, if the local legislative authorities shall so provide. This is a departure from present law under which property qualifications and other inequitable restrictions relating to suffrage prevent all but about one-twentieth of the population from qualifying as voters.

I might add that in the Virgin Islands there are between eight and nine hundred qualified voters, under existing law, and, as I have indicated, an important step forward is being taken in giving universal suffrage to the people of the Virgin Islands.

EXECUTIVE BRANCH

Sections 20 to 24, inclusive, provide for an executive branch of the local government of which the Governor of the Virgin Islands is the head. The Governor is to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The government secretary, who is the second ranking executive officer, is also to be appointed by the President.

Obviously, provision should be made for an executive officer authorized to act for and in the place of the Governor when he is absent from the Territory or suffers a temporary disability.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think perhaps it would answer the general question in my mind if the Senator would indicate to me to what extent under the new act the Governor would be reduced in the extent of his power and authority and responsibility.

Mr. KING. His authority is limited by the terms of the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How does that differ from the existing situation, speaking generally?

Mr. KING. He exercises only such authority, executive in character, as is conferred upon him by the bill. He may veto municipal acts in measures passed by the legislative assembly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. He would still have the veto power?

Mr. KING. He would have the veto power; but the vetoed measures may then go to the President of the United States, who may overrule the Governor. In my opinion the Governor's authority is not as great as that now possessed by that official. The bill before us divorces the United States court from the Interior Department and provides for the appointment of the district judge and the district attorney, by the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as I recall, the legislative authority could pass a measure over the Governor's veto by a two-thirds vote, but then in effect it would be subject to veto by the President.

Mr. KING. Yes; and Congress might have the final say. In the matter of legislation Congress could nullify any act of the local legislature and, of course, could withdraw any power or authority exercised by the Governor.

I have in mind, of course, as doubtless other Senators have, testimony which came before our committee a year ago, and I think the members of the committee were not quite satisfied with the existing situation and with the authority which had been exercised by officials in the islands.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator look at page 49, section 26? I believe he has just gotten to that section. It provides:

The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a judge and a district attorney.

No provision is made in that section for the appointment of a clerk and marshal. Are they provided for elsewhere in the bill?

Mr. KING. Yes. Let me read the provision:

The Attorney General shall appoint and fix the compensation of all other officers necessary for the transaction of the business of the district court, and the compensation of the judge of the district court and of the district attorney, and the administrative expenses of such court, shall be paid from appropriations made for the Department of Justice.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would that include marshals and clerks without their being provided for as such?

Mr. KING. The Attorney General would have the authority to appoint them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. KING. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the Constitution, power to appoint officers is vested in the President of the United States. I do not know what prompted our committee to vest the appointment of officers in the Attorney General. I have no objection to the Attorney General selecting officers who are to work under him, but I question the validity of an arrangement which takes the appointing power away from the President and vests it in the Attorney General.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill differentiates between what might be called executive officers and purely ministerial officers. For instance, there will be bailiffs, perhaps a court reporter, and some other minor officials needed in the proceedings of the court. Persons whose authority is purely administrative or relates to the activities of the court, are to be appointed by the Attorney General.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think the Senator caught the full significance of my suggestion. I have no objection to the Attorney General exercising power conferred on him by the bill; I think he would perform his function admirably. My point is that the Constitution makes no distinction between administrative officers, executive officers, and judicial officers. All of them, under that instrument, must be appointed by the President, and it is not competent for the legislative department to provide that officers shall be appointed by someone else than the President. I hope I have made my point clear, and I know that the Senator, as a lawyer of great ability, will recognize it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me read from the Constitution of the United States, and I think this will clarify the situation. I read from section 2 of article 2 of the Constitution:

> The President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator takes the view, then, that these officers come within the last clause he has read, that they are inferior officers, and may by express provision be appointed by the heads of the departments?

Mr. KING. Absolutely.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I think perhaps that is correct.

Mr. KING. I may say that the judges of the United States district courts, or the United States marshals appoint baliffs and inferior court officers. However, the Attorney General possesses the ultimate authority in the matter. The judges are authorized to appoint probation officers, and those probation officers perform a very important function. I have taken the view that under the provision of the Constitution to which I have referred all bailiffs of the court in the Virgin Islands, and all necessary inferior officers required in the proper conduct of the courts should be appointed by or under the direction of the Attorney General.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reason why I interrupted the Senator was that under our system we have designated clerks of courts and marshals in our own country and in the Territories as a class of officers whom the President himself appoints, and he does so in all cases. Bailiffs and other similar officers, as the Senator just said, are appointed either by the judges or by the heads of the departments; and that might well be done. However, it seems to me that if the court in the Virgin Islands is to have a marshal and a clerk, those officers should be put in the same category with all other officers whom we designate in this country.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator that the judges of the United States district courts now appoint their own clerks. They are not appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The act itself requires that the judge and the district attorney shall be appointed by the President. The plan of the bill is to permit them or the attorney general to appoint the subordinate officers. There is no question, of course, that that can be done.

Mr. KING. There is no question about that, Mr. President. I may say that I discussed the matter of creating additional positions; but that would involve much expense, and the Virgin Islands have a limited revenue. The committee was influenced by economic reasons and by a situation which does not exist in the States in the consideration of persons that would involve expenses to be paid by the local government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, if a marshal were appointed, he would be paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it the purpose of the provision of the bill under discussion that the subordinate officers shall be paid by the local government?

Mr. KING. All officers appointed by the President of the United States or by the Attorney General shall be paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that. I am a little inclined to believe that it would have been better to follow the same system we follow in this country, and to allow the marshals to be appointed by the President just as the marshals are appointed in the United States, and to permit the other officers to be appointed either by the judge or by the head of the department.

Mr. KING. We did not think it was necessary to create any other officers in the Virgin Islands, because of the lack of revenue there to meet expenses. Under the present system the expenses are paid by the local government. In the hearings we had a year ago a situation was disclosed which showed the wisdom of having the Federal court officers under the control of the Department of Justice.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish the Senator would turn to page 58 of the bill, line 11, the fifth word in the line. First, I should like to have him pronounce it, and then I should like to have him tell me what it means.

Mr. KING. "Scilicet." It is a Latin word used in connection with the processes issued by the court.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator. I asked all the lawyers I could see around me, and none of them seemed to know what it was.

Mr. KING. "Shall run in the name of the United States."

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator validates the word, does he?

Mr. KING. I validate it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thought it was a typographical error.

Mr. KING. No; Mr. President.

Mr. COPELAND. Would it not be well to consult the Library concerning that word?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President; we will consult the Senator from New York, who is a doctor of medicine and of law.

Mr. President, when interrupted, I had nearly concluded the statement I intended to make.

Section 34 contains familiar provisions found in various organic acts and in State constitutions in relation to the Bill of Rights, providing for trial by jury, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press, that there shall be no unreasonable bail, and so forth.

Section 35 confers upon each municipality control over the collection and expenditure of public revenue within its borders. That is a system which prevails under the existing law, which is the fundamental law of the Territory, and also is found in the Danish law under which the Virgin Islands were governed anterior to their acquisition by the United States.

Section 36 continues present import duties and customs, but authorizes the local legislative authorities to reduce present export duties.

Section 37 relates to the running of judicial process and the conduct of penal and criminal prosecutions in the local courts.

Section 38 provides that all officials of the government of the Virgin Islands shall be citizens of the United States.

Section 39 provides for reports by the Governor to the Secretary of the Interior, whose jurisdiction is to extend to all matters pertaining to the government of the Virgin Islands.

Section 40 empowers all present officers and agencies to continue to function until new officers shall be appointed and new agencies organized under the new organic act.

Mr. President, if there are no further questions, I shall ask for action on the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, recalling the discussions which we had in the committee on the subject, what are the restrictions or limitations, if any, on the right of suffrage as provided in the bill.

Mr. KING. Those who may vote at all elections must be 25 years of age, and citizens of the Virgin Islands and of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why is the limitation of 25 years imposed? Usually, the limitation is 21 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was in error in my previous statement. The limitation of 21 years was imposed. In the original bill the age was placed at 25 years, and I had forgotten for the moment that in my consideration of the measure I amended it to read 21 years. Those who may vote, as I said, must have been bona-fide residents of the Virgin Islands for at least 3 years prior to voting. There is no property qualification.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no property qualification or sex qualification?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President; nor any religious qualification.

Mr. ROBINSON. Nor is there any literacy qualification?

Mr. KING. The people of the islands are all literate. I wish to say, to the credit of the people of the islands, that they are all literate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the act impose a literacy test?

Mr. KING. They must be able to read and write.

Mr. ROBINSON. When does the provision relative to voting become effective?

Mr. KING. As to that there was some controversy between representatives of the islands and representatives of the Department of the Interior. The latter felt that the people of the islands should be enfranchised, so to speak, immediately, and be permitted to vote in the coming November election. The representatives of the islands did not approve of that. The poll list or registration list for the coming election has already been made up, and it contains approximately 900 names. There is a property qualification now; and, of course, those who are eligible to vote at the next election are those who measure up to the present qualifications. The compromise was that those who are entitled to vote now should be the only ones eligible to vote at the next election, but that after January 1 of next year the local legislature could put into effect provisions of the organic act, and provide universal suffrage for the inhabitants of the islands. So that, if there should be a local election next February or March or April, if, in the meantime, the legislative assembly of the island had made proper provision, all the inhabitants of the islands, if it were for the election of members of the legislature, would be permitted to vote, but if the local legislature should not make provision for universal suffrage sooner than that, automatically at the next biennial election, which will be two years from November, all would be entitled to vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. One more question. The Senator will recall that in the committee a controversy or a discussion arose regarding the authority of the local organizations or municipal councils relative to fiscal affairs. What action was taken regarding that question?

Mr. KING. I may say to the able Senator that it was rather an irritating question that was presented for consideration. The representatives of the islands urged that the local municipal councils should have greater authority and power in handling their fiscal affairs and in determining the purposes for which the expenditures should be made than they had enjoyed in the past; and they discussed a provision inserted in the organic act that they should have what amounted to managerial—they used that word—authority and power. It seemed to me, and I think to the other members of the committee, that, in view of the fact that the United States was compelled to pay perhaps $200,000 a year to aid the islands in the maintenance of their government, and, in view of the fact that the Governor was the chief executive and administrative officer, that it would be an impingement upon his authority if we placed in the legislative branch of the government the managerial power in carrying out the legislative declarations of the local councils or the legislative declarations of the assembly. So we adopted a provision in section 12, as I recall——

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; which gives the municipal committee the power, when granted such power by local law, to recommend to the Governor transfers between items in the annual budget and loans from municipal funds; but it denies to the Governor the power to make such transfers and loans, except upon the recommendation of the municipal committee.

Mr. KING. Exactly. It seemed to me that it was a happy compromise. It gives to the local councils legislative authority. They formulate the legislation; they determine whether the money shall be expended for schools, for sanitation, or for other municipal or territorial purposes, and the Governor then is charged with the enforcement of the legislation. If he wants to transfer from one fund to another fund he can do so only by the consent of the council.

I may say that the representatives of the islands, the islanders who were here, were satisfied with that provision, and the Interior Department officials likewise were satisfied.

I desire to express my appreciation of the cooperation which your committee received, both from representatives of the island and of the Interior Department in the formulation of this proposed legislation. There was a spirit of cordiality, of compromise, and good will which was pervasive in all the meetings and in the discussions—and there were many of them covering several days—that preceded the preparation of the bill as it is now before the Senate. Especially I want to express my appreciation of the services rendered by Governor Cramer, Dr. Gruening, and Mr. Jacobson, the attorney representing the Virgin Islands, who was very helpful in the formulation of the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from Utah what body in the islands under the law prescribes the qualifications of jurors, grand and petit, for service in the islands?

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean in the past or under the pending bill?

Mr. LEWIS. I mean for the future.

Mr. KING. The territorial legislature, the name of which is the legislative assembly. It performs practically the same functions as those performed by the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, or the legislatures of the other territories which were finally merged into States. But there are conditions in the Virgin Islands, as the Senator knows, that perhaps require a little more restriction than prevails in other territories. For instance, there are only about 22,000 inhabitants in the three islands, and only a limited number of the inhabitants possess any property. So considering the situation, the background of the people, living under the Danish regime for many years and then coming under the flag of the United States, nearly all of them without property, having been denied the advantages which other people have had, have to face a condition there quite different—it is sui generis—from that which we find elsewhere. We had to deal with it as we found it, but keeping in mind always the welfare and the happiness and the best interests of the 22,000 colored people who live in the Virgin Islands, doing everything we could to advance their interest, promote their welfare, and insure for them economic rehabilitation, or at least development and those advantages which will result, I feel sure, under the flag of the United States and under the jurisdiction of this Republic.

Mr. LEWIS. I am much obliged to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have a few amendments to offer which are not very important. I send them to the desk and ask action upon them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments presented by the Senator from Utah will be stated in order.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 37, line 7, after the word "assembly", it is proposed to strike out "may" and insert "shall have power to", so as to read:

The legislative assembly shall have power to enact legislation applicable to the Virgin Islands as a whole, but no legislation shall be considered other than that specified in the message by the Governor calling such a session, or in both of said resolutions.

Mr. KING. That is a perfecting amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 37, line 16, it is proposed to strike out:

Provided further, That the legislative assembly shall have and exercise all powers and immunities within the jurisdiction of the Virgin Islands which are granted under this act to the municipal councils within their respective jurisdictions, and shall be subject to the same limitations as those imposed on the municipal councils.

Mr. KING. That is to correct a typographical error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 39, line 22, it is proposed to strike out the comma and insert a period before the word "in", and in the same line to insert the words "The procedure of the Municipal Committee shall be".

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 41, line 26, it is proposed to strike out the words "of bill" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thereof."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 47, line 25, before the word "officers", it is proposed to insert the word "executive."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 48, line 14, before the word "office", it is proposed to insert the word "appointive."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On the same page, line 15, before the word "officer", it is proposed to insert the word "appointive."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 49, lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "of such officers and the judge of the district court and the administrative expenses of such court" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of the judge of the district court, and of the district attorney, and the administrative expenses of such court,".

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 54 it is proposed to strike out lines 8 to 11, inclusive, as follows:

All persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for first-degree murder or any capital offense, when the proof is evident or the presumption great.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties in the case of criminal offenses, except for first-degree murder or any capital offense when the proof is evident or the presumption great.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was very much struck by the statement made by the Senator a while ago, that practically all of the 22,000 inhabitants of the Virgin Islands can read and write; that they are all literate. What is the nature of their educational facilities and will they be interfered with in any way by the passage of this bill or will they be aided? I think if they are now able to read and write that it is a very fine thing and that nothing ought to be put in the way of continuing that very desirable situation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I agree with my able friend from Tennessee and I compliment the people of the Virgin Islands for the progress they have made. They have had good schools and under the administration of the United States the schools have been improved; a large amount has been expended for education; and under the organic act I feel sure, and I can so assure my friend, that educational opportunities larger and greater than those in the past will be afforded to the people of the Virgin Islands.

Mr. McKELLAR. Do they have a public-school system such as ours?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And what portion of their revenues are devoted to education?

Mr. KING. I am unable to state the figure. I do not recall that they were presented before the committee, but sufficient evidence was before us to show that a large portion of the revenue was devoted to education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide a civil government for the Virgin Islands of the United States."

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF INCORPORATION OF BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4229) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of Bridgeport, Conn., as a city, which were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "to exceed ten" and insert "less than twenty-five", and on page 2, line 9, to strike out all after "coins" down to and including "act" in line 12.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT OF WISCONSIN

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3842) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Territorial government of Wisconsin, and to assist in the celebration of the Wisconsin Centennial during the year of 1936, which were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "to exceed twenty" and insert "less than twenty-five", and on page 2, line 13, to strike out "five" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THREE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE LANDING OF SWEDES IN DELAWARE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 231) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Swedes in Delaware, which were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "to exceed twenty" and insert "less than twenty-five"; on page 2, line 8, after "Delaware", insert "Swedish"; and on page 2, line 10, to strike out "five" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REAL-PROPERTY TAX IN VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with the understanding that the bill will not be considered today but that its consideration will be postponed until the next session of the Senate, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8287, having to do with the establishment of a real-property tax in the Virgin Islands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8287) to establish an assessed valuation of real-property tax in the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs with amendments.

Mr. KING. I now ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside temporarily.

BATHING POOLS IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4540. It is a District measure and its passage is very important because, with the warm weather coming on, it is desirable to provide bathing-pool facilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 4540) to provide for the operation of bathing pools in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is authorized to provide for the operation of bathing pools under his jurisdiction in the District of Columbia by contract or contracts to be entered into by him with the most satisfactory bidder: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed to repeal the authority for the operation of said bathing pools contained in the acts of Congress approved February 28, 1929 (45 Stat. 1411), and July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 1007): And provided further, That in the event a bathing pool is located in the area of the East Potomac Park Golf Course, the said Secretary may, in his discretion, authorize its operation by the contract operator of said golf course for the balance of the period of the present contract under such terms and conditions as he may deem to be in the interest of the United States.

PERMISSION TO APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE TO FILE REPORTS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess of the Senate the Committee on Appropriations shall have leave to submit and have printed a report or reports to the Secretary of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OPERATION OF COMMODITY EXCHANGE BILL

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, since discussing before the Senate about a week ago the commodity exchange bill, being House bill 6772, I have received a number of inquiries concerning certain provisions of the bill.

It is my purpose today, for a very few minutes, to refer to these inquiries and to suggest answers to them.

In the first place, a question has been raised as to the effect of the amendment proposed by the Secretary of Agriculture permitting warehouses licensed under the Federal Warehouse Act to be used for storage of grain for delivery under futures contracts.

Objection has come from those interested in the operation of State licensed warehouses that the result of the proposed amendment would be a general break-down of State warehouse laws. In effect, the objection is to competition of Federal warehouses with State warehouses.

The sole purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate arbitrary and unfair discrimination against warehousemen licensed under the Federal Warehouse Act who desire their receipts to be made tenderable on future contracts and to give the advantages of additional warehouse facilities to traders in the market.

It is believed the proposed amendment will not in fact interfere with the business of State-licensed warehouses and that the advantages of putting Federal and State houses on the same basis without discrimination as to either would be fair and in the public interest. It should be made clear, also, that grain loaded out of an elevator, either against futures contracts or for interstate shipment, must be inspected by inspectors licensed under the United States Grain Standard Act. This requirement is exactly the same whether the grain is loaded out of a State licensed warehouse or a Federal licensed warehouse.

A second question has been raised as to the necessity for annual registration by commission firms and floor brokers. On page 12 of the bill, lines 16 to 18, is the following language:

All registrations shall expire on the 31st day of December of the year for which issued.

The suggestion is made that such registration be continuous until revoked for cause.

It is the judgment of most of the proponents of this bill and of the Grain Futures Administration that annual registration is essential to protect the trading public against the possible misuse of certificates by persons and firms which may have actually lost their registration rights. A great deal of difficulty is bound to be experienced by depending upon the commission firms and brokers to report their discontinuance of business on the exchange. Annual licenses are very common throughout the country. Their renewal is a matter of form so long as they have not been suspended or revoked for cause.

It seems to be assumed by opponents of the bill that the Secretary will act capriciously in granting or withholding registration certificates. They seem to fear that the Secretary will deny registration because a man's hair is red or his eyes blue. In the bill as now drawn, providing for annual registration, the Secretary of Agriculture has no discretion but to issue certificates upon application. He would have no right to withhold such certificate arbitrarily or for any reason except that set out in subsection 2 of section 8 (a) on page 25 of the bill. It is there provided that the Secretary may refuse to register any person if he has violated any of the provisions of the act for which his registration has been suspended or revoked. Such previous suspension or revocation would have been made in an orderly way after complaint had been made, hearing had been held, and conclusion had been reached for violation of the act. This conclusion is subject to judicial review as provided in section 4 (g), page 13, of the bill.

It can thus be seen that the only purpose of an annual registration is to keep the list up to date with no dead registration certificates outstanding.

Annual registration would appear to be especially desirable in the case of floor brokers. As was shown in the committee hearings, floor brokers trade and speculate for their own account while executing orders for others. In these circumstances it is absolutely necessary for the Grain Futures Administration to know at all times what persons are actively engaged as floor brokers. These floor brokers have unusual opportunities for taking advantage of their customers by reason of the practices which I pointed out last week.

A third question has been raised as to the proviso in subsection 2 of section 4 (d), appearing on page 11 of the bill, which refers to moneys deposited with commission merchants for margins. It is provided in the bill that these moneys must be deposited by the commission merchant with a bank or trust company or clearinghouse organization. It is pointed out that such commission merchants ought to have the right to invest this money in good securities. This seems a valid criticism of the bill.

The Grain Futures Administration believes that such investments may properly be made, but should be limited to investment securities of national banks as defined in and under authority of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended. The term "investment securities" as defined in the Federal statute is limited to high-grade securities and has the merit of providing uniformity, and would be applicable in all States. It would rule out questionable paper, in which many State banks are now permitted to invest their capital. The State statutes vary widely as to such securities.

An amendment to the present bill authorizing investment in such securities as are now authorized by the Federal statute for national banks would be plain, simple, workable, and would fairly protect margin deposits.

As I said a moment ago, the reason why I desired to make this statement today is that I am having numerous inquiries on the particular points raised; and in order to make a record of answers to them, I am setting them out this afternoon in this way in reply to those inquiries.

Mr. President, I desire to have printed as a part of my remarks articles from the Chicago Daily Tribune of April 29, 1936, and from the Chicago Daily News of April 28, 1936, under the following headlines: "Cutten indicted on new charge of tax evasion" and "Cutten accused of tax plot in two indictments by United States."

It will be recalled that a week ago I discussed the violation or supposed violation of the Grain Futures Act by Mr. Cutten's manipulation of the board of trade. It is in that connection that I ask that these articles be made part of my remarks today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The articles are as follows:

[From the Chicago Daily Tribune of Apr. 29, 1936]

CUTTEN INDICTED ON NEW CHARGE OF TAX EVASION—UNITED STATES CLAIMS $644,000 TOTAL OVERDUE

A second indictment charging Arthur W. Cutten, wealthy grain speculator, with evading payment of income taxes was returned yesterday in Federal court before Judge James H. Wilkerson.

On March 10 Cutten was indicted on a charge of failure to pay $414,525 in income taxes for 1929. Government officials explained this indictment was rushed through just before the deadline for prosecution under the statute of limitations.

In the indictment returned yesterday the Government charges the trader with attempting to evade income-tax payments totaling $229,944 on his income for the years 1930 and 1933. Cutten, who was stricken with a heart ailment after Christmas, is convalescing in his apartment in the Drake Hotel.

TAX CONSULTANT NAMED

Named with Cutten in both indictments is William E. Gatewood, tax consultant, with offices at 141 West Jackson Boulevard, a former revenue agent. He is charged with having aided Cutten in the alleged tax evasion.

Yesterday's indictment contains two counts. One count charges evasion of income-tax payments of $171,364.91 for the year 1933 and the second count with evasion of $58,579.75 for the year 1930.

Cutten's income for 1930 was divided as follows, according to the Government computations:

Dividends	$638,108.09
Profit on sales of real estate, stocks, bonds, etc	121,753.58
Income from trust	5,463.85
Rents and royalties	3,346.47
Interest received	101,560.12
Director's fees	200.00
Chicago Perforating Co	6,000.00

Losses were allowed of $114,031.16 from syndicates, $43,601.11 from a joint venture, and $15,949.53 from the operation of Cutten's farm.

By the Government's computations, Cutten's gross income for 1930 was $702,850.31 and the net income subject to tax was $334,598.76.

THE SECOND COUNT

In the second count of the indictment his income for 1933 is computed as follows:

Director's fees	$475.00
Interest received	4,791.76
Rents and royalties	2,723.11
Profit on sales of real estate, stocks, bonds, etc	518,542.19
Dividends received	56,561.91
Income from trust	2,700.00

After subtracting $16,902.84 loss from the operation of his farm, the Government charges that Cutten's gross income for 1933 was $568,891.13 and the net income subject to tax was $529,990.23.

Cutten posted a $35,000 surety bond under the first indictment after deputy marshals went to his bedside with the warrant for his arrest. Evidence before the grand jury was presented by United States District Attorney Michael L. Igoe and his assistants, Austin Hall and E. Riley Campbell, after efforts at a compromise settlement failed.

Another indictment charging Edgar C. Terhune, president of the Terre Paper Box Co., 1824 South Albert Avenue, and Louis E. Squire, bookkeeper for the company, with attempting to evade payment of $2,327 in income taxes for the company for 1933 was also returned before Judge Wilkerson.

[From the Chicago Daily News of Apr. 28, 1936]

CUTTEN ACCUSED OF TAX PLOT IN TWO INDICTMENTS BY UNITED STATES—ATTEMPTS TO EVADE PAYING $229,949 FOR 2 YEARS CHARGED—CONSULTANT INVOLVED

Two true bills charging Arthur W. Cutten, millionaire grain speculator, with willful attempts to evade income-tax payments of $58,579.75 and $171,364.91, respectively, for 1930 and 1933, were returned by the Federal grand jury today before Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson.

Named with Mr. Cutten was William A. Gatewood, tax consultant and former employee of the Department of Internal Revenue, who is accused of aiding and abetting Cutten.

ALREADY INDICTED FOR 1929

Cutten was indicted on March 10 on a similar charge for the year 1929. The Government alleged the amount due for that year was $414,525. The total amount alleged due for the 3 years is $644,469.66.

The true bills set up that Cutten's gross income for 1930 was $702,850.31, and his net taxable income $334,598.67. The gross income was classified as follows: From Chicago Perforating Co., $6,000; directors' fees, $200; farm income, $15,949.53 (loss); "a joint venture," $43,601.11 (loss); rents and royalties, $3,346.47; profits on sales of real estate, stocks, and bonds, $121,753.58; income from syndicates, $114,031.14 (loss); dividends, $638,108.09; income from trust fund, $5,463.85.

In 1933, the indictment alleges, Cutten's gross income was $568,891.13, and the net taxable income $529,990.90. The gross income was classified as follows: Directors' fees, $475; farm income, $16,902.84 (loss); interest received, $4,791.76; rents and royalties, $2,723.11; profits on sales of real estate, stocks, and bonds, $518,542.10; dividends, $56,561.91; income from trust fund, $2,700.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in connection with the statement just made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], I desire to say that the commodities exchange bill has been pending on the calendar for a long time. Hearings with respect to the bill have recently been conducted by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, although the bill was not recommitted to the committee. It is my understanding that the bill is ready for the consideration of the Senate. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], is absent from the city. I do not find myself in sympathy with some of the amendments relating to cotton that have been reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It seems that the measure may be reached for consideration within a few days.

WHAT SHOULD BE THE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES?—ADDRESS BY FRANCIS B. SAYRE

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, an address delivered on Saturday, April 25, 1936, at Philadelphia, Pa., by Hon. Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, at the Fortieth Annual Meeting of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, on the subject What Should Be the Position of the United States?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The theme for our discussion tonight is the question of what commercial policy the United States should follow for the protection of American interests, "What should be the position of the United States?"

In broad terms, we have two choices open to us. On the one hand, America can adopt a program of economic isolation. We can try to produce ourselves everything we need. We can promote a vigorous "buy American" movement and shut out all foreign goods which we are able to produce. We can seek to become economically self-sufficient.

The alternative is to retain and to increase our foreign markets through international trade.

The proponents of economic isolation argue that such a program would give the benefit of American markets exclusively to American business and to American labor. It would free America from dependence upon production in foreign nations over which we have no control. It would make America independent in case normal trade channels should be disrupted by war. Any one of these arguments has a ring of persuasiveness. Furthermore, "America for the Americans" fires the imagination and stirs the emotions. What could be of stronger political appeal than a program of economic independence?

Yet in an issue as this we cannot afford to act on hasty or superficial conclusions. Wise decisions can be reached only by considering as objectively as possible the fundamental facts and underlying issues. My thought this evening is to lay before you as succinctly as I can five underlying problems upon which, it seems to me, the main issue of the evening fundamentally depends and which cannot therefore be fairly disregarded or ignored. I should like to lay these naked problems before you with the hope that the two speakers who follow will elaborate upon them and discuss them.

I

At the heart of the difficulties which we are facing is the problem of unsalable surpluses. Here is the first of our underlying problems. Because of America's high productive capacity, upon which our standard of living in large part depends, this country normally produces more of certain types of goods, both agricultural and industrial, than can be profitably sold in the domestic market. These surplus products, from the very first days of the Nation, have been marketed abroad. For instance, we are normally dependent upon foreign markets for the sale of more than half of our cotton crop. Similarly, in 1929 we were selling abroad about a fifth of our wheat, two-fifths of our leaf tobacco, almost half of our Federally inspected lard, a third of our rice, almost half of our dried fruits. These are merely some of the outstanding agricultural crops whose profitable production has been geared to foreign markets. And so it is in the case of many of our most important industries. In 1929 industries producing office appliances sold abroad over 30 percent of their total production to a value of some $53,700,000; the agricultural implements and machinery producers exported 25 percent of their production at a value of $141,000,000; and the automobile industry sold abroad nearly 18 percent of its production to the amount of $345,700,000. These are but a few random illustrations of the importance of our foreign sales, which in 1929 totaled $5,157,000,000. In 1934 our income from exports had fallen to $2,101,000,000.

Unless we can export and sell abroad our surplus production, we must face a violent dislocation of our whole domestic economy.

International trade is an essential part of our national economy. The value of our cotton, our wheat, our lard, our automobiles, and the like, depends directly upon whether or not we can find markets for them. National wealth today depends upon trade. Cripple a nation's trade and you strike directly at its wealth.

It is often said that our export trade is unimportant because it comprises less than 10 percent of our total production. But general averages in a case like this are seriously misleading. It is not merely that in many of our most important industries and occupations the surpluses which we must sell abroad greatly exceed 10 percent. What is of far more vital consequence is the effect of unsalable surpluses on domestic enterprises. Unsold surpluses, by glutting home markets, demoralize the prices received for that part of the output or crop sold at home, and thereby spread havoc and cause dislocation throughout the industry or occupation. The resulting repercussions are Nation-wide and affect producers who themselves do not sell abroad. Unquestionably one of the substantial causes for the widespread suffering and unemployment which we have been experiencing since 1929 has been the loss of foreign markets.

But it is manifestly impossible for us to sell abroad if we will not buy from abroad. Trade is a two-way street. We cannot escape the broad fact that a nation's purchases are inescapably limited by its sales. Unless the people of a nation can sell, they have neither purchasing power nor foreign exchange to pay for the goods they would like to buy. In other words, there is no escape from the fact that a program of economic self-sufficiency means necessarily the sacrifice of our foreign markets and therefore disastrous economic dislocation at home. It means a body blow dealt against the very occupations and industries in which American labor can produce most effectively and secure its largest return. It means the shift at incalculable sacrifice and suffering of millions of American workers from the most rewarding occupations and industries to less rewarding ones or to the public relief rolls.

In the field of agriculture, if we should eliminate our foreign markets, speaking in round numbers we would have to retire about 6,900,000 acres of wheat land, about 22,800,000 acres of cotton land, about 665,000 acres of tobacco land, about 9,150,000 acres of corn land needed for raising hogs, and over 7,000,000 acres of land needed for feeding horses to work these lands. In other words, we would have to retire over 40,000,000 acres of average farm land and let it go back to weeds or pasture land. This land today supports a farm population of some 3,200,000 people. What would be done with these human beings? Are they to become human weeds?

In the industrial field, save for the fact that the population is somewhat more mobile, an even larger problem presents itself. Estimates indicate that the industrial population directly dependent upon export sales is more than twice as large as that engaged in agricultural work. Conservative calculations place it at about 7,500,000.

In all, a population of considerably over 10,000,000 people are dependent for their subsistence upon exports of the products of farm and factory.

If we choose to commit America to a program of economic self-sufficiency, how are we going to meet the violent economic and social dislocations which the program necessarily entails? How are we going to solve the resulting problems of staggering unemployment, of sharply reduced national income, of perilously impaired standards of living?

Take, for instance, the case of cotton. What, practically, would become of the 2,700,000 farmers in the United States who are raising cotton and who know no other employment, and of the hundreds of thousands of individuals engaged in picking, ginning, transporting, compressing, warehousing, and merchandising it?

Manifestly, they could not be supported on idle cotton land. No one has been able to advance any practicable solution for the profound social problems which would result from the loss of our foreign cotton markets. Furthermore, injury would not be confined to the South alone. If foreign cotton markets are lost, every industry which sells its products in the South will be affected.

How can this multitude of people be shifted into other occupations without starting an endless chain of dislocating repercussions?

A program of strict economic self-sufficiency, therefore, when translated into actualities, loses much of its superficial attractiveness. It would involve profound social readjustment. It would mean intense human suffering.

II

In choosing between the two alternative programs, there is a second underlying problem not to be overlooked—the problem of comparative material costs. Economic self-sufficiency can be had only at a shocking price.

In the first place there is the initial cost incurred by the loss of foreign markets. If we could not sell our surpluses abroad we would have to retire some $3,000,000,000 worth of agricultural land and render worthless some $9,000,000,000 worth of industrial "fixed assets" in the form of machinery and plant equipment whose capacity is too great for profitable employment in the home market alone.

In the second place the additional cost to consumers of products produced in "hothouse" industries protected by an embargo against foreign goods and the increased cost of substitute materials would run into appalling figures. We can best see the picture with an example taken from a foreign country.

Germany's program of self-containment has recently driven her to enlarge her own production of lard. The retail price of lard in Germany was fixed recently at 35 cents a pound, which is probably at least 10 cents higher than lard imported from the United States could be sold at retail. Since Germany in 1934 imported, roughly, 100,000,000 pounds of lard for which German consumers had to pay 10 cents a pound more than they would were trade unhampered, it is evident that the direct additional cost of lard imports to the German people amounted to some $10,000,000. This, of course, does not include the far larger excess of cost to German consumers of domestically produced hogs—a sum estimated at some $60,000,000.

In our own country we have been in the habit of dispensing high tariff protection with a liberality that assumed it cost the Nation nothing. Yet every raise of tariff which effectually bars out cheaper foreign imports must be paid for by the consumers of the Nation in higher prices for the commodity. This increased cost due to more expensive home production far exceeds the increased profits of the domestic producing interests, since the actual cost of home production may be many times greater than that of foreign production. One could cite numerous instances of existing American tariff rates procured by industries whose entire incomes are less than half of the increased cost which consumers are forced to pay by reason of the tariff.

We could grow all the olives we need in the United States, and thereby give increased employment to American workmen, if we are willing to foot the bills of heating sufficient hothouses to do so. We could perhaps produce all the manganese we need at double and triple and quadruple the prices we are now paying for it. We could make synthetic rubber, which sells today for 75 cents per pound, as compared with 16 cents which we pay for natural rubber.

All these things can be done. But the cost would run into hundreds of millions of dollars. To a moderate extent we can afford self-sufficiency. No responsible government is advocating free trade today. Suddenly, to eliminate the protection under which businesses have grown up, money has been invested, and commercial activities organized would be fantastic and unthinkable. But to go far beyond the point already reached—certainly, to go to the extent advocated by the proponents of thoroughgoing self-sufficiency—would entail so staggering a cut in our national income through increased costs of production and in consequence so sharp a reduction in the national standard of living that no government should commit itself to such a program without the gravest consideration.

To the pure theorist an economic self-sufficiency which would free America from dependence upon every foreign country is of very strong appeal. But in cold and hard reality, if one objectively figures out the prohibitive actual costs, can such a program be defended as feasible or practicable?

III

A third problem of serious magnitude directly involved in the issue before us is that of securing payment on the debts owed us by the nations and peoples of the world. Quite apart from the war debts, the world owes us huge sums. Last year we received from abroad $410,000,000 by way of interest and dividends. The fact is that other nations do not possess sufficient gold with which to pay their debts to us, nor do the circumstances permit paying more than a moderate amount in services. If our debts are to be paid we must accept goods and stimulate trade. As has been well said: "There is no alchemy of economics by which the bricks of debt payments can be made without the straw of commerce." Yet a program of economic self-sufficiency makes payments in goods impossible. Are we prepared to sacrifice American holders of foreign investments to the amount of some $12,350,000,000 on the altar of self-sufficiency? Are we ready to give up all thought of obtaining future payment, not only of those foreign investments due us which have been already defaulted but also of those which are financially sound?

IV

A fourth underlying issue is the very grave one of whether our present forms of democratic Government can survive if America gives herself completely over to a program of economic self-sufficiency. I am thinking not only of the intense strain caused by revolutionary social adjustments necessitated by the program and of the menacing financial strain caused by a sharply decreased national income and a serious impaired standard of living. I am thinking more particularly of the direct issue which the alternative programs raise between a degree of regimentation such as America has never known on the one hand and a comparative freedom of business initiative and enterprise on the other. Under a system of self-sufficiency the only alternative for unsalable surpluses is an arbitrary restriction of production; and the only practicable way to enforce restriction is thorough-going Government control.

Furthermore, the embargoing of all but a small list of imports is possible only upon the basis of arbitrary governmental selection and regulation. This means sooner or later a selective system of imports and exports, and leads to a growing governmental regimentation of all commercial enterprise throughout the Nation. Since the program also entails the shift of substantial portions of the population from industries and occupations in which they are now engaged to others presumably organized by the Government, the program leaves no escape from a gradual strait jacketing of business and a corresponding assumption of dictatorial power by the Government which would go far in revolutionizing the part played by Government in our individual lives.

If we are to choose the pathway of economic self-sufficiency we must frankly accept a system of governmental control over private business enterprise such as at present seems utterly inconsistent with American traditions and beliefs.

V

A program of economic isolation, therefore, raises well-nigh insuperable difficulties from the viewpoint of our domestic prosperity and our social and political traditions. A fifth problem—probably the gravest of all—arises out of world conditions. To what avail should we achieve economic self-sufficiency—assuming that this were possible for us—if in doing so we, along with others attempting such a program, condemn this universe to the ravages of perpetual armed conflict? The problem of peace in this respect is not one which can be resolved by mere theories. The problem arises from unescapable fact, i. e., that the nations of the world are by geography endowed with such different natural resources and by history so developed that no nation on earth can, without incalculable cost and sacrifice, make itself economically self-sufficient. It is self-evident that some 50 nations cannot attain even a tolerable degree of self-sufficiency. The peril in the present world situation is that the fortunes of all are inseparably linked together and if some great trading nations follow a policy of economic self-sufficiency other nations will be forced even against their will to attempt to do the same. Unhappily the vast majority of nations are so lacking in natural resources that self-sufficiency is physically impossible. For them there is then no alternative but to attempt to appropriate by force other portions of the earth's surface. Economic nationalism thus reaches its culmination in imperialism.

If orderly processes of trade break down as a means for securing the ready exchange of goods and the distribution of the necessary raw materials of the world, conquest and the march to imperialism is the only road left open. Yet this road leads to a dead end. Economic nationalism and its corollary, imperialistic expansion, alike lead to perpetual conflict. Nations are not so abundantly endowed with natural resources and technical skill that each can be economically sufficient unto itself and remain prosperous; neither are there enough colonial areas in the world to satisfy the needs of every nation.

The sum of the whole matter is that trade constitutes the very lifeblood of nations. If goods cannot cross frontiers, armies will.

My purpose this evening was to confine myself to a bald statement of facts and issues, and not to indicate what should be America's choice. But I must confess failure. For my own part it seems impossible to state the true underlying issues without indicating quite clearly what America's course must be if American interests are to be safeguarded, American traditions to be preserved, American people to be protected from suffering and disaster.

A policy which in its ultimate stages militates against peace cannot be American. Our country must stand ready in cooperation with other countries of the world to struggle against the throttling forces of economic nationalism in a united and determined movement for the liberalization of the trade of the world.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there are a number of committees which are very busy, particularly the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Naval Affairs. In order that those and other committees may have the opportunity of meeting and performing their labors it is my purpose, after a brief executive session, to ask the Senate to take a recess until Thursday noon.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Rear Admiral Gilbert J. Rowcliff to be Judge Advocate General of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, from the 1st day of June 1936, for a term of 4 years.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Maj. James Truman Menzie, Cavalry, to Adjutant General's Department, for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army, with rank from August 1, 1935, and also the nomination of Capt. Harry William Miller, Ordnance Department, with rank from August 1, 1935, effective June 20, 1936.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for promotion in the Regular Army, in the Medical Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, May 7, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 4 (legislative day of Apr. 24), 1936

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

I nominate Irl D. Brent, of Michigan, to be State director of the Public Works Administration in Michigan.

Claude C. Hockley, of Oregon, to be State director of the Public Works Administration in Oregon.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

To be major general

Herbert Jay Brees, United States Army, from May 2, 1936, vice Maj. Gen. Paul B. Malone, United States Army, to be retired April 30, 1936.

CHAPLAINS

To be chaplains with the rank of first lieutenant to rank from date of appointment

First Lt. Martin Carl Poch, Chaplains' Reserve.
First Lt. Wallace Irving Wolverton, Chaplains' Reserve.
First Lt. Paul Judson Maddox, Chaplains' Reserve.
Capt. William Lewis Cooper, Chaplains' Reserve.
First Lt. James Corey Bean, Chaplains' Reserve.
Rev. Charles Irving Carpenter, of Maryland.
Rev. James Thomas Wilson, of Illinois.
Rev. Silas Edward Decker, of Indiana.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

First Lt. Joseph Edward Gill, Field Artillery, with rank from August 1, 1935.

TO CORPS OF ENGINEERS

Second Lt. Howard Elwyn Webster, Cavalry, with rank from June 13, 1933.

TO FIELD ARTILLERY

Second Lt. Edwin Gantt Hickman, Infantry, with rank from June 12, 1934, effective June 12, 1936.

Second Lt. Oliver Prescott Robinson, Jr., Infantry, with rank from June 12, 1934, effective June 12, 1936.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO BE COLONELS

Lt. Col. Condon Carlton McCornack, Medical Corps, from April 23, 1936.

Lt. Col. Glenn Irving Jones, Medical Corps, from April 25, 1936, subject to examination required by law.

Lt. Col. Charles Carroll Demmer, Medical Corps, from April 27, 1936.

TO BE CHAPLAIN WITH THE RANK OF COLONEL

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Louis Augustus Carter, United States Army, from April 29, 1936.

TO BE CAPTAINS

First Lt. William Albert Todd, Jr., Medical Corps, from April 26, 1936.

First Lt. James Bowdoin Stapleton, Medical Corps, from April 26, 1936.

First Lt. Floyd Lawrence Wergeland, Medical Corps, from April 28, 1936.

First Lt. Robert Stultz Brua, Medical Corps, from April 28, 1936.

TO BE CAPTAINS WITH RANK FROM JUNE 12, 1936

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 4, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, Thou who dost bathe in noontide splendor and gladden with infinite glory the wide world, bestow upon us the treasures of knowledge and wisdom. We pray that we may be untroubled and unclouded by irregular desire and know things that are true in the daylight. Do Thou open our eyes to visions of Try truth, goodness, and promise; inspire us all to a deeper life of service and faith, until all disquietudes lose their power. We most fervently pray Thee that the laws of the land may be faithfully executed and that the affairs of state may be wisely administered; let the ties of peace and contentment be strengthened throughout our borders. And Thine shall be the praise, through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 1, 1936, was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] may have 20 minutes in which to address the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume this will be an absolutely nonpartisan address.

Mr. SNELL. I hope it will be; and judging from the gentleman who is going to make it, I think it will be. He may, however, discuss the state of the Union a little in passing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

THE ROBINSON-PATMAN BILL—PREVENTS PRICE DISCRIMINATION—INSURES EQUAL OPPORTUNITY AND FAIR PLAY IN TRADE AND COMMERCE—IT WILL LOWER PRICES TO THE CONSUMER MASSES WHO BUY FROM INDEPENDENT MERCHANTS AND SMALLER MASS DISTRIBUTORS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not often extend my remarks in the RECORD, but the above bill as reported to the House by the Committee on the Judiciary has been the subject of such misunderstanding that I feel I may be of service by presenting my views on it. The abuses which the bill seeks to correct are impossible of defense upon their merits, and if the false impressions and misunderstandings can be clarified, I feel that a bill can be passed that will be of great value to the consuming public of the Nation.

IDEALS UNDERLYING THE BILL

The bill is based upon the simple American ideals of equal opportunity and fair play. Equal opportunity expresses the right of every man to devote his own ability and efforts to his own advantage in the service of his fellow men according to the efficiency and skill with which those services are rendered and the value of their products. Fair play expresses his willingness to recognize the same rights in others. Equal treatment is merely the method by which we recognize and attempt to preserve these values among others when we have it in our power to effect in a substantial way their relative fortunes and destinies.

ITS HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

Our Government was founded upon ideals of equality. The growth of its political institutions has been one of progress toward their broader affirmation and fuller realization. Dedicated to freedom, its restrictions of law upon private conduct have been imposed, when necessary, only in the interest of a broader freedom and of the enjoyment of equality in those inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness which the founder of American democracy wrote into the Declaration of Independence. When we have found it necessary to impose governmental restraints upon the conduct of private business, it has been in response to the same ideal. If laissez faire was once our prevailing political economic philosophy, it was in the days when we were still engaged in the conquest of a continent and when we felt there was enough for all, let each take how much he might.

That day has passed, and a series of Federal laws for the regulation of business have marked the history of the last half century in recognition of the growing responsibility of business itself to this fundamental ideal of equal opportunity. Thus, the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887 required our railroads to accord equal treatment to their patrons and to refrain from discrimination between them in rates charged and service afforded. Actual fixation of railroad rates stands on a different footing, and did not come till 20 years later. It bears no relation to this bill. The Sherman Act of 1890 freed individual enterprise from the burden of oppressive agreements among competitors. The Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts of 1914 went still further, and set out certain varieties of private business conduct which, even in the absence of agreement, it condemned as oppressive to competitors and authorized their suppression.

Among these is price discrimination. Section 2 of the Clayton Act condemned in principle the practice of price discrimination in private competitive business just as the Interstate Commerce Act had done so a quarter century before in the business of public carriers.

The present bill merely carries this principle another step forward toward its more perfect and thorough application as found necessary in the light of our experience through the intervening years.

SECRECY ADMITS GUILT

So there is nothing new in the principle on which this bill is based; nothing new either to the law or to habits of popular thought and feeling. The one-price system, the practice of equal treatment of customers, is so well recognized in American business that for any merchant to announce a contrary policy would be to write in advance his business obituary. There is none of us who would not feel righteously indignant to find the occupant of the next barber chair, the diner at the next table, the customer at our elbow in the hat shop being charged 10 percent less than ourselves for the same article and service. So indelibly is this principle written in the public mind that even in the wholesale field departures from it are shrouded in secrecy. When the American Can Co. gave the Van Camp Packing Co. a price 18 percent lower than its competitors on tin cans, it kept the contract secret, even from its own sales force, and kept insisting to all its other customers that it was making the same price to all. When the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. sold tires to Sears, Roebuck & Co. at prices 16 to 22 percent lower than to its own Goodyear dealers, after allowing for all differences in cost, it bound Sears-Roebuck by that contract not to mention it, orally or in writing, guarded it in its confidential files, permitted access to it only by a few officials of the company, concealed it from its own sales force; and when its own Goodyear dealers complained that they could not possibly compete against such an arbitrary price advantage, it denied first that it was even selling tires to Sears-Roebuck; and later, it had to admit this, it still denied that it was giving Sears-Roebuck any better prices than anyone else. To deny the moral villainy of such practices and their universal recognition as such by those who grant and receive them, as well as by those who suffer from them, is as absurb as the claim that a man does not know right from wrong when he still knows enough to dodge an officer of the law.

Now, as to the particular evil at which the bill is aimed.

THE MANUFACTURER'S TEMPTATION

The one-price policy of equal treatment is automatically self-enforcing in the retail trade. The possible advantage from granting unwarranted favors to particular customers is so slight in comparison with the loss of trade inevitable when other customers discover it that the policy maintains itself automatically without the support of law. Not so in the wholesale trade. Not so in sales by manufacturers to wholesale and retail distributors. The difference is due principally to the manufacturer's large burden of overhead cost and the peculiar influence of that overhead cost upon his business behavior. Overhead costs, comprising such items as interest on investment, rent, taxes, insurance, fall due regularly and must be met regardless of the volume of production—whether a factory runs at all or not, whether it produces little or much.

The manufacturer's anxiety to meet those costs is the vital spot of his vulnerability to the methods of large mass buyers. A manufacturer running under capacity can afford to take on a large block of new business at a price below his net cost so long as it will still yield him something additional against that troublesome overhead. Even the manufacturer running at full capacity can afford to renew a large block of business at a price below his net cost rather than lose it entirely, where he will also lose with it entirely whatever it does yield against that burden of overhead; and he knows he is likely to lose it entirely unless he accepts the sacrificial price demands of the large buyer so long as there is another competitor in the field running below capacity and therefore anxious to take that business away from him for the reasons I have just described.

WHO SUFFERS?

Now what is the harm of all this? The harm is that by whatever margin that manufacturer fails to make his total net cost and a reasonable profit on that order he must make it up somehow, some way from his other customers, thus widening still further the price disadvantage between them and the customer favored with the discrimination. For every manufacturer depends upon his sales to all his customers to meet his total of business costs and yield him his required minimum of reasonable profit. He must either charge each customer a price sufficient to cover his proportionate share of that cost and profit, or if he charges some less than that, he must charge others more than that. He cannot do otherwise or he will end up with a deficit. The price favors that he grants to a few large buyers, thus mean inevitably corresponding burdens upon all the rest, and upon the consuming public who depend upon them for the supply of its needs.

SIZE THROTTLES EFFICIENCY

All this has nothing to do with questions of relative efficiency. I am dealing only with those discriminations which lie beyond differences in efficiency. No one wants a system of equality that will require selling to every customer at the same price regardless of differing costs involved in the quantities purchased or the methods of service required. When I speak of a price to all representing his proportionate share of the manufacturer's cost and profit, I mean to make allowance for any differing costs of service that may arise, as the bill says, from the differing methods or quantities in which the goods concerned are sold or delivered to such customers; and I mean to make allowance for such differences of cost, whether in the realm of manufacture, or of sale, or of delivery of the goods concerned. I am dealing only with the excessive discriminations and price favors that exceed those differences in cost. It is those discriminations which represent an insuperable advantage to the large customer to whom they are granted, and an impossible burden to the rest who must make up the deficit, and it is only those discriminations which the bill prohibits.

DISCRIMINATIONS NOURISH MONOPOLY

Such practices naturally favor the larger buyer and seller against his smaller competitor. The larger the buyer and the larger the order he controls, the less the seller can afford to lose his business, the harder it will be to find other customers to replace it, and the further he will go in making price cuts to keep it. The larger the seller, the larger his distribution of business among smaller competing customers, the easier it is for him to recover among them any losses he sustains in sacrificial prices to the favored mass distributor. Price discriminations of the character I am discussing are thus in their very nature instruments for the promotion of monopoly. They tend to make those who use them larger and larger at the expense of their competitors, and the larger and larger they grow, the more and more effectively they can use them. It is no answer to count the number of competitors now existing and scoff at the danger of monopoly because none is yet at hand. A fine field of cotton today is no answer to the danger of the boll weevil tomorrow. A standing forest is no answer to a lighted match in the dry underbrush. We are not without bitter experience in this matter, no more than the cotton planter nor the forest ranger. We know from our past antitrust experience the vicious role price discrimination has played in the promotion of monopolies and restraints of trade. Many of them have grown to full flower to be stopped only by the remedies of the Sherman Act, but leaving behind them unredressed the financial and human losses of a host of ruined competitors. The Clayton Act was a step forward in the suppression of practices by which monopolies and restraints are promoted rather than waiting to attack them in their maturity. The present bill is merely another step in the same direction.

HALFWAY MEASURES

Section 2 of the Clayton Act prohibited price discrimination, but carved so many exceptions from it, and stated them in such loose language, that it has fallen short of its purpose; and those who profit from the abuses at which it was aimed have been able to evade it. It permitted the continuance of price differences on account of differences in quantities purchased, without placing any limiting measure upon them. It permitted local price cuts to meet competition without any limitation other than the vague and elastic requirement of good faith. It dealt not at all with discriminations outside the realm of price discriminations between customers, through the perversion of the brokerage function and the myth of advertising and service allowances. Naturally it could not deal with them, for they have developed since.

THE REMEDY

The bill is designed to remedy these omissions in three principal directions. It is aimed at the three principal forms in which price discriminations and preferences are now prevalently practiced in the channels of trade. These are the excessive quantity discount, the corrupted brokerage payment or allowance, and allowances in the pretended payment of advertising and promotional services.

QUANTITY DISCOUNTS—GOOD AND BAD

First as to quantity discounts. Quantity discounts that allow only for real savings and economies, whether in the manufacture, sale, or delivery of the goods purchased, made possible by the different quantities purchased, are not disturbed. They are economically sound. They stimulate efficiency in trade and industry, and make possible lower prices to the ultimate consumer, and higher prices to the farmer and other producers of raw materials. With them this bill does not interfere. On the contrary it expressly excludes them from the prohibitions of the bill, whether they arise in the manufacturing process, in the selling process, or in the delivery process, anywhere, in fact, in the chain of manufacture and distribution that links together the producer of the raw materials and the buyer of the finished product. It excludes them and leaves them equally unhampered whether they arise from the differing quantities in which different customers purchase, or from the differing methods of sale or delivery which they require. Short of the quantity-limit proviso which I shall presently describe, I can see no field of economy in production or distribution that the wit of man could invent, the savings from which could not be expressed in price differentials between the various customers who do and do not take advantage of it. The bill only prohibits price discrimination in excess of such differences in cost, for it is there and only there, so far as we are here concerned, that the mass buyer evades his just and proportionate share of the manufacturer's burden of cost and unloads it upon the shoulders of his smaller competitor.

QUANTITY LIMITS ON POWER AND SIZE

I spoke a moment ago of the quantity-limit proviso. Sometimes a manufacturer may offer special discounts applicable only to such a large quantity order that none but one or two of the largest buyers in the whole field are able to take advantage of it. Even when supported by differences in cost, such a discount may well become in the hands of such an overshadowing purchaser a vehicle on the highway to monopoly, and the public can well afford to forego it as the price of their security from all the dangers of monopoly. Armour & Co., for example, who alone out of nearly a thousand meat packers now produces one-fourth of the Nation's meat products moving in interstate commerce, offers a special discount on fresh meats applicable only to customers who take in excess of $10,000,000 per year. At the time it was offered, no one buyer in the United States took that much fresh meat from anyone. No one buyer exceeded 75 percent of it. None except that one buyer exceeded 20 percent of it. None but two meat packers exceeded 75 percent of it to any one customer, and that was the same customer. None except those two packers sell as much as one-fourth to any one customer. It was a discount, in short, offered by an overshadowing manufacturer to an overshadowing buyer to induce him to switch business away from competitors, so as to make that manufacturer still more overshadowing, and offering in return a price advantage on which that buyer could also grow to ever greater size. To put a safe limit on this sort of thing, the bill authorizes the Federal Trade Commission to fix quantity limits, beyond which further quantity discounts shall not be allowed. But it can only fix those limits as to quantity, it cannot fix them upon the discounts themselves; and it can only fix those quantity limits with reference to entire commodity lines or industries. It cannot fix them differently for one buyer or seller from another. It cannot use this power to violate the principle of equal opportunity upon which the bill as a whole is founded.

NO BROKERS—NO BROKERAGE

Another prevalent form of discrimination now in use lies in the exaction of brokerage commissions or allowances where true brokerage services have not been rendered. As the Committee on the Judiciary said in its report—

> The true broker serves as the representative of the seller to find him market outlets or as the representative of the buyer to find him sources of supply.

If the broker is not used, the buyer or seller must perform those functions himself and sustain a corresponding cost in his own buying or selling department. Large mass buyers, however, have corrupted this function by setting up their own employees or subsidiary corporations and calling them brokers, refusing to buy except through them, compelling the manufacturer to pay them brokerage on those purchases as though they were the manufacturer's representatives, and pocketing the proceeds as another form of price advantage. In other words, the manufacturer instead of paying the broker to find a buyer, is compelled in effect to pay the buyer to find the broker. Obviously the broker renders no service in such case to the person who pays him, and his compensation merely constitutes an added burden of cost which the manufacturer must spread over his other customers. The bill prohibits the payment of brokerage direct to the buyer, or to anyone acting in fact for the buyer or under his control. In so doing, it will cleanse the streams of commerce of such violations of an important fiduciary function and prevent its prostitution to purposes of discriminatory abuse.

SHOULD THE MASS DISTRIBUTOR BE PAID FOR MAKING A PROFIT?

The third prevalent evil at which the bill is aimed lies in the grant of special allowances for so-called advertising or promotional services. Mass buyers have constructed an amazing myth around this type of allowance and are using it in an attempt to justify in the public eye another form of discrimination. Remember, please, that the business of mass distributors, like that of any other merchant, is selling to the public the goods which they have purchased at wholesale from the manufacturer or other source of supply. They make their profit on the resale of those goods. They buy them only for that purpose; and if they do not sell them, once they have them in stock, they become a dead loss. They buy those goods in large orders from the manufacturer at sacrificially low prices, as I have already described. But this is not enough. They now claim that the resale of those goods, which they must in any case resell for their own advantage and profit, is a special favor to that manufacturer, and that anything that they do to promote that resale is a special service for which they can demand an additional payment. No one but a large mass buyer—large enough to confront his manufacturer with the financial distress resulting from the loss of a large block of his business—could get away with such a chimerical claim; and the larger the buyer, the more of it they are able to get away with. For example, it was shown in the committee's hearings that the A. & P. chain, with 15,000 stores and $800,000,000 of annual sales, obtains from Standard Brands an advertising allowance of $144,000 a year on Fleischmann's yeast alone.

The Kroger chain, with more than one-fourth as many stores and one-fourth the volume of sales, gets an allowance from the same people on the same article of only $6,000 a year, or one twenty-fourth as much. Mass buyers expand this story with all sorts of grotesque embellishments. They say, for instance, "X manufacturer is paying us extra for displaying his product near the cash register, or near the door, where our customers are more likely to see it and buy it as they pay their checks and pass out"; yet our committee hearings showed so many such allowances given to different manufacturers of the same competing commodities that if this service were performed for all, the cash register would be completely buried and the door obstructed to entry or exit. They have even collected these allowances for displaying their own goods on their own shelves, and in their own show windows, something that even the country crossroads' grocer has done since time immemorial without ever getting paid for it except in the profit he makes on the sale of the goods themselves. The bill puts an end to this chicanery, and to the competitive discriminations which it makes possible by forbidding the granting of such allowances unless they are made similarly available to all competing customers who are able to furnish the same services, proportionally to those services and to their purchases of the goods concerned.

These are the important provisions of the bill. There are other minor provisions designed principally for the added protection of legitimate spheres of business, but they do not affect these underlying principles nor the importance of its immediate consideration.

MISUNDERSTANDINGS ANSWERED

But I do want to give a moment's attention to some of the gross misapprehensions that have been spread about with regard to this bill.

NO PRICE FIXING

Its opponents keep calling it at every turn a "price fixing" bill. It has nothing to do with price fixing. It leaves the seller absolutely free to fix his own level of prices in response to the usual market influences and to his costs of production. It lays him under not the slightest obligation to maintain any sort of relationship between his prices and those of his competitor. It merely requires him to maintain an equitable relation between the prices which he charges to his various customers, the measure of that equity to be based upon differences of cost in serving them.

NO LIMIT ON COMPETITION OR EFFICIENCY

It does not limit competition, except that vicious sort of competition which sells below cost in order to destroy competition. It has nothing to do with methods of production or distribution. It lays no obstacle across the path of anyone to prevent him from selecting and using the most efficient and economical methods of production, sale, or distribution that human genius can invent. There is nothing in it to prevent the translation of any economies so accomplished in the service of particular customers into corresponding price discounts, nor to prevent the consumer from reaping their ultimate benefits. It merely says to the large mass buyer and to the manufacturer who sells to him: "Superior efficiency is your only title to preference; you cannot resort to mere size and to the mere power which that size places in your hands to crush the advantage which real efficiency gives to your competitor."

WILL DECREASE LIVING COSTS

Opponents of the bill have insisted at every turn that it will result in huge increases in living costs to the consumer, with the usual emphasis upon special injuries to the housewife, the laborer, and the farmer. It can have no such effect. Living costs depend upon the actual physical costs of production and distribution. As I have already said, the bill has nothing to do with them. It does not affect production costs. It merely prevents the seller from loading an unfair portion of that cost onto part of his customers and absolving a select few from their share of it. It will, on the contrary, therefore, lower prices to those millions of people who purchase from the independent merchant and from cooperatives and smaller chains, for it will relieve them of that unjust burden of cost, which they now have to carry for the large mass buyer.

NOT AGAINST CHAIN STORES AS SUCH

I say to cooperatives and smaller chains, because it is a mistake to regard this bill as an antichain-store bill. I have shown you already that the smaller chain suffers from these abuses at the hands of their larger chain competitors just as does the independent. I have shown you that, even between the two largest chains now in existence, the smaller is discriminated against in favor of the larger. Out of some 900 or a thousand chains in the grocery field alone, I should estimate that not more than half a dozen receive the sort of excessive discounts and allowances at which this bill is aimed. It is for the protection of the other 994, and of the public who buys from them, as much as it is for the protection of their 300,000 or more independent competitors and of the millions of the public who buy from them.

EMPTY THREATS

All sorts of business disturbances have been predicted from this bill. They are fabricated by its opponents to play upon the fears of the people. They say if the bill is passed the chains will go into manufacturing themselves. They cannot do this economically for they cannot manufacture the hundreds of commodities which they sell in the limited quantities needed for their own business as cheaply as they can be manufactured in the greater quantities demanded by the whole trade; and they cannot manufacture them for the whole trade, because they cannot expect to sell them to their retail competitors. Then, it is said, if this bill is passed the chains will turn to the patronage of manufacturers who sell exclusively to them. But if they do they cannot get the price advantages at which this bill is aimed, for those are advantages which can only be granted to favored customers at the expense of the rest. If there are no others there is no one to favor and no one to absorb the corresponding burden. Such a manufacturer would have to charge that chain with his whole requirement of cost and profit, and that is precisely the end at which the bill is aimed. It is designed to bring production and distribution up to a basis of economic efficiency on the part of the favored few, and down to that basis on the part of all the rest.

NOT CLASS LEGISLATION

This bill is not class legislation. It is not limited to particular commodities, trades, or industries. It is just as broad as the present Clayton Act, which it proposes to amend. On the contrary, its opponents have attempted to have it limited to particular commodities, or to exclude particular industries from it in the hope, no doubt, that if it cannot be defeated in Congress it might then be defeated in the courts.

ITS ECONOMIC IMPORTANCE

Now, in conclusion, I want to emphasize briefly its great importance. It is important, not only to the independent businessman, commonly so called; it is important to every businessman who has competitors considerably larger than himself. For that added size enables such a competitor, under the present law, to bid for unfair price advantages of the kind at which this bill is aimed. But it is important not alone to the millions of businessmen who fall in that class; it is equally important to the still greater millions of the consuming public who depend upon them for the supply of their needs. It is important to the equally many millions of the producing public, including the farmer and the laborer who produce the raw materials and furnish the labor that go into the supply of those needs. For the more equal the competitive opportunity which we can secure to those now oppressed by the abuses against which this bill is directed, the more they will have with which to pay that laborer for his work and those farmers for their products.

ITS HUMAN IMPORTANCE

But all this has only to do with its economic importance. Human values are greater than property values. The backbone of our Nation live in smaller cities and communities and in rural districts which depend upon independent enterprise as represented in their local merchants and manufacturers for the support of their educational, social, and spiritual institutions, those institutions upon which our Nation must depend for the translation of its material welfare into the real satisfactions of life and into the moral and spiritual forces upon which the continuous growth of our civilization necessarily depends.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under the special order the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a list of organizations which have indicated their support of the repeal of the so-called "red rider" and certain other important material directly affecting the issues involved therein.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a list of certain organizations that are interested in the so-called Sisson bill, and to insert certain other data. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a list of organizations which have passed resolutions and otherwise gone on record as urging the repeal of the rider in the appropriation bill of last year for the District of Columbia with reference to the teaching of communism in the schools of the District of Columbia, and also certain important material directly bearing upon this legislation.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, it is my purpose to place in the RECORD for the information of the Members of the House a brief account of the history of this legislation and its effects upon the teachers and the students in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and its bearing upon our American institutions, including freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and academic freedom.

I shall be obliged, in the course of my remarks, to refer a few times to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I trust, however, that the House, as well as the gentleman, will understand that I do this with the greatest reluctance, and only because even a brief historical record could not be given without mentioning the gentleman a time or two.

In one of his several speeches in this House on this subject, under extension of remarks on March 30, 1936, the gentleman closed his remarks with this peroration:

> The time has come when we Democrats must weed all pinks and reds out of our Government. I have lowered my visor; I have unsheathed my sword; I have entered the lists; I am at war to the finish against all Communists and subversive enemies of good government.

I should like to have it recorded of me also and handed down to my descendants that I am now and always have been opposed to communism and to any other kind of ism or thing which is subversive of our institutions and our form of government. I cannot hope, however, to compete in the public view with the gentleman from Texas in his spectacular method of warfare. I have no visor; I carry no sword; I do not know how to conduct myself wearing helmet or armor or brandishing a sword. If I may be forgiven for a personal allusion to the reason why I am not so accoutered, as the gentleman from Texas describes himself, and, adopting the grandiose style of the gentleman, I was born of poor but honest parents, and—I trust this will not be misunderstood—I was born "a poor barefoot boy." Naturally, I have not learned to fight with any of the weapons used by the gentleman from Texas.

Neither have I learned to argue or debate by hurling epithets.

The gentleman from Texas, on numerous occasions, and with increasing frequency, in his remarks on this floor and in the many pages of matter which he has had printed in the RECORD, has sought to dispose of those who disagreed with him by calling them" Communists." Now, I would not retort in kind by calling the gentleman from Texas anything. I note, however, that the Committee on Appropriations of the other body the other day disposed of some legislation sponsored by the gentleman from Texas by striking it out on the ground that it was "communistic." However, that is their language, not mine.

The gentleman from Texas has gone to great lengths in an effort to create the impression that there is communism in the schools of the District of Columbia and thereby to justify and show the necessity of the so-called "red rider."

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 2, after having spoken on this same subject on several previous occasions in the House, the gentleman inserted in the RECORD 29 printed pages. Most of the matter in these 29 printed pages does not even remotely relate to the schools of the District of Columbia. Much of the matter is an attempt to prove that Dr. Frank W. Ballou, Superintendent of Schools, is a Communist. None of the matter could be considered, except by the most inverted and fantastic kind of reasoning, to be relevant to this legislation. Much of the matter in the 29 printed pages was printed—and, of course, at the public expense—for the third time at the instance of the gentleman from Texas. I am informed that the cost to the taxpayers of the printing of the matter contained in the 29 pages was over $1,600.

The Committee on Appropriations for the District of Columbia, of which the gentleman is chairman, held extensive hearings on appropriations for the District. Those hearings were printed and comprised 787 printed pages. It was, of course, entirely proper for the Committee on Appropriations to hold hearings on the subject of appropriations, and I am not implying any criticism of this; but several days of this subcommittee of five were devoted to hearings alleged to be held on the subject of character education, but actually devoted to an inquisition into the subject of communism in the schools in the District of Columbia, and an attempt to prove that communism was advocated in the schools and that Dr. Ballou is a Communist. The part of the hearings in this inquisition on the subject of communism in the schools occupied 268 printed pages. These 268 pages were then reprinted in a separate volume at the instance of the gentleman from Texas and at the public expense, and distributed to all of the Members of Congress. These hearings were held in executive session, and Dr. Ballou, Superintendent of Schools, Mrs. Doyle, the president of the Board of Education, and Professor Jones, head of the department of social studies, including history, were summoned before the subcommittee and ordered to answer such questions, mainly as the gentleman from Texas dictated. I join with the gentleman from Texas in the hope that the Members of this House will read these hearings. Frequently a question would be asked by the gentleman from Texas of such a witness as Mrs. Doyle or Dr. Ballou or Professor Jones which would be anywhere from one-half page to a page long in the RECORD, and then the witness was directed to answer the question categorically. Frequently the witness was not allowed to explain, qualify, or give his statement in his own words. In other words, it was like one of those star-chamber performances made infamous in other countries before freedom of speech and fair trial prevailed. It was a one-sided trial, where only the prosecution was represented.

I would not have the hardihood or gall to inflict upon this House or put in the RECORD answers in refutation to all of the insinuations, misleading inferences, and unwarranted conclusions contained either in these hearings or in the matter which the gentleman from Texas has put into the RECORD on other occasions. I would not dare to do it unless I had a suit of armor such as the gentleman has described himself as wearing. The witnesses were browbeaten and bulldosed in a manner that is certainly not creditable to the House of Representatives, and I wonder how any man with a sense of fairness and justice could have sat through it without a protest. I certainly hope that the Members of this House will examine the record made by the gentleman from Texas and permitted by the other three members of the subcommittee, who apparently sat mostly in silence and permitted it to go on. It was not a hearing; it was an inquisition such as might have been conducted by Philip of Spain or the bloody Jeffries, infamous as the hanging judge in English history in the time of James II.

And, despite all this, not one single instance was produced by any of the witnesses where they dared or ventured to name any teacher who, they claimed, had advocated communism in the schools of the District of Columbia.

Hearings were held on the Sisson repeal bill for 2½ days before the Subcommittee on Education of the District Committee, composed of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY] as chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], and the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES]. These hearings were held in open, not secret, session, where the public had access, as is the custom in America. The witnesses had full opportunity to present testimony, both pro and con. Mr. Sullivan and General Fries, who were among the star witnesses in the star-chamber proceedings held by the gentleman from Texas before his committee, appeared before this Committee on Education also, and their testimony occupied many pages of that record. Again, not one scintilla of evidence was produced where any teacher had advocated communism or had done anything contrary to his or her constitutional oath.

In his 29 pages in the RECORD which appeared on April 2 the gentleman from Texas made a great effort to prove that Dr. Ballou is a Communist. Time and space will not permit me to answer in detail all of the statements, misleading inferences, and unfounded conclusions in these 29 pages. But let me show you the gentleman's method of reasoning and of attack upon Dr. Ballou. He starts out with the assumption that certain men are well-known Communists; among these being Dr. Charles A. Beard, Prof. George S. Counts, and Dr.

W. W. Charters. His authority for the statement that Dr. Beard—probably generally recognized as our greatest living American historian—and these other gentlemen are Communists is a book called "The Red Network", written by Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling. The author of this book, Mrs. Dilling, who is cited by the gentleman from Texas as his authority as to who are Communists, attempted to get this book accepted by the D. A. R. some years ago, but when the matter was brought to the attention of the present president general of that organization it was refused. The D. A. R. organization is generally considered to be at least sufficiently conservative, rather than liberal. Mrs. Dilling lists several hundred persons in that book as Communists or dangerous radicals. Among these, besides those mentioned by the gentleman from Texas, are such well-known and dangerous characters as Jane Addams, Newton D. Baker, United States Senator William E. Borah, Mr. Justice Louis D. Brandeis and Mrs. Brandeis, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, our late beloved colleague, Hon. Anthony J. Griffin, one of the most useful and respected Members who ever sat in this House, a large proportion of the presidents of our American colleges and universities, and a considerable number of the present Members of the other body of this Congress. Dr. Ballou, unfortunately for the gentleman's contention, is not so listed, but the gentleman, by his inverted process of reason, makes Dr. Ballou a Communist. Why? Forsooth, because Dr. Ballou at sometime or other had been associated in the survey of some educational question with Dr. Beard, Dr. Counts, and Dr. Charters, and about 20 other educators.

It might at this point be profitable to inquire if it can be discovered from the gentleman's very extensive speeches and remarks in the RECORD upon this subject as the result, of course, of his very intelligent and extensive investigation, how he would define a Communist; and I am sure that the only answer that anyone could give to that question who has followed the gentleman's method of argument would be that a Communist is someone who disagrees with or disapproves of the gentleman from Texas; and based upon that definition and to the extent that the gentleman is known, that would probably include the overwhelming majority. I am sure if it were necessary for the gentleman's contention he could very easily go back to a much earlier period than his investigation has covered and prove, for example, that most of the characters who have appeared in either profane or sacred history were Communists or tainted with communism, as adjudged by Ku Klux Klan standards. Certainly neither the Master of Men nor His Twelve Apostles could escape that scathing condemnation—and least of all, Solomon, who proposed once to settle a dispute between the two women, each of whom claimed to be the mother of a child which was brought before him, by cutting the child in two and giving each one half. The gentleman spends so much time upon this floor and uses up so much space in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and costs the taxpayers incidentally so much to print what he has to say in recommending his own superior wisdom, virtue, and courage that I wonder sometimes if he could not as a result of his 20 years' service in Congress find anyone else than himself to testify for himself. It would certainly be a saving to the taxpayers if he would bear in mind the injunction of the same Solomon, "Let another man praise thee"; or, if he would paraphrase the language of Shakespeare, "not to protest his own virtue over much."

Now, I have a very great respect for the dignity of this House. I am very proud to be a Member of it. I want no action or words of mine to lower that dignity or stain or pollute the pages of its RECORD with obscenity or filth. It is only such a knight as the gentleman is who does this. I have, though, sometimes thought that what seems to be a prevalent custom here of expressing one's admiration and respect for another when one's feelings are somewhat the opposite is not entirely to be commended, and I trust that it is not unparliamentary for me to say that I cannot share the gentleman's estimation of his own wisdom, virtue, and courage.

Now, what is the record about this "red rider"? Was there any necessity or excuse for slipping it into an appropriation bill last year?

This question, in my opinion—and there is evidently a large number of people all over the country who agree with me about it—has become one of Nation-wide importance. If, therefore, you have the slightest doubt in your mind that the "red rider" ought to be repealed, I ask you to examine the record—and by the record I mean the following:

First. The manner in which the "red rider" was passed.

Second. The hearings held by the subcommittee on education of the District of Columbia Committee on February 25, March 2 and 9 on the Sisson repeal bill, H. R. 11375.

Third. The facts and data which I shall put into the record under extension of remarks on this occasion.

Fourth. And here, for once, I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], the hearings held in executive session before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the District of Columbia appropriation bill for 1937, and also the 29 pages which the gentleman from Texas put into the RECORD on April 2.

It is a great deal to ask of you, but if you will examine all of the facts you can come to but one conclusion; and that is that it is of great importance to our American teachers and the boys and girls in our schools, and to the dignity and good name of Congress, that the repeal bill should be passed.

This matter is of no personal concern to me, any more than it is of personal concern to any other Member of Congress. It will not affect my political fortunes one way or the other, whether the repeal bill reaches the floor of this House, is discussed on the merits and is passed, or not. The only thing about it that is of personal concern to me is that I discharge my own duty and fulfill my own responsibility.

An examination of the record will show, among other things, the following facts:

First. There is not, nor has there been, any indoctrination of communism by either the Board of Education, Superintendent Ballou, or the teachers in the schools of the District of Columbia; nor has there been any effort made before or since the passage of this "red rider" to advocate or secure sympathy for communism in the District of Columbia schools.

Second. There was not the slightest necessity or excuse for the slipping of this rider into an appropriation bill, or for its passage in any other manner.

Third. The "red rider" does not represent the wish or will of Congress, and not over a dozen Members of both of the bodies of Congress combined knew that it was slipped into the appropriation bill or was proposed as permanent law until after it had been done. An agreement was made last year in a conference between the gentleman from Texas and one or two of the Senate conferees on the appropriation bill to the effect that the item in the appropriation bill for so-called character education, which had been stricken out in the House, should be restored, provided that the gentleman from Texas might write into the bill a clause that—

No part of this item of appropriation for character education should be available to pay the salary of any person in the schools of the District of Columbia who advocated communism.

No one involved in that argument except the gentleman from Texas believed that it was necessary, but it was thought at that time to be harmless. The agreement was not kept, but instead, after leaving the conference the gentleman from Texas caused to be inserted the present provision, which, by the inclusion of the word "hereafter", was made permanent law, and it was made to apply to the whole appropriation for the District of Columbia schools instead of to this single item, and which, by the inclusion also of the word "teaching", was made ambiguous as to whether even the facts in a proper factual manner about the political, social, and economic system in Russia and elsewhere could be presented to students of history and social studies. The senior Member from my own State in the other body will verify my statement as to what the real agreement was and that it was not kept by the gentleman from Texas.

Fourth. No such law as this "red rider" is in existence in any of the several States. No such law compelling teachers or anyone else to take an oath each time before drawing their pay that they have not taught or advocated any doctrine subversive to their Government has, so far as quite an extensive research discloses, ever been passed before in this country, and there is no instance in recorded history where it has ever been done in any other country, even if you go back thousands of years. Its existence in a Federal statute is making Congress ridiculous in the eyes of the country.

Fifth. This law is injuring the spirit and morale of the teachers and is making them ridiculous in the eyes of their pupils. It is destroying the relation of confidence between teachers and pupils, without which the most important purposes of education cannot be secured. * * * The teachers and even the janitors and all of the other employees in the District of Columbia schools have to take an oath each pay day in the form prescribed by the Comptroller General, in substance, that they have not advocated or taught communism in the schools or elsewhere.

Sixth. This law is gaining Communists and communism free advertising and exploitation that they could not have gotten otherwise for millions of dollars. It invests Communists and communism with an appearance of strength and importance that they do not possess. That here, in the Nation's Capital, Congress should find it necessary to put such a law upon the statute books lends more strength and encouragement to communism than anything else I can imagine.

Seventh. It prevents the boys and girls in the high schools in their study of history, civics, and other social studies from learning the facts as to the system prevailing in Russia, and instead of equipping these boys and girls to think for themselves and to see the strength and fairness of our institutions and our Government by comparing our Government and its institutions with others, it attempts to put their minds in a strait jacket and to tell them what to think and not how to think. We do not expect to teach our boys and girls how to avoid contracting tuberculosis, typhoid, or other contagious, infectious, or communicable diseases, including the social diseases, by seeking to prevent them from learning that such diseases exist and how to avoid them. No teacher should be retained in our schools who would seek to advocate communism for us in this country, and no teacher in the District of Columbia schools would be retained if it were found that he or she had done that. Every teacher in the District of Columbia schools was obliged, under the law before the passage of this red rider, to take the same oath to support the Constitution of this country that we, as Members of Congress take, and if a teacher were found who had attempted to indoctrinate his or her pupils with communism or any other ism subversive of our Government and its institutions, that teacher could be and would be removed by the Board of Education.

Eighth. This "red rider" is entirely contrary to and subversive of the traditional American system of running our public schools.

What is the traditional American system of running the public schools? The traditional American way of running our public schools has been for years to have a board of education, selected from the representative citizens of the school district or city. They are not educational experts, but they determine the general policies of the schools. They employ a superintendent, principals, supervisors of teaching, who are experts to map out the courses of study and prescribe the methods of instruction. That is the American way and that is the way that has succeeded. We do not have in our States or in the various communities within our States a Congress or a legislative body to stick their noses into the courses of study. Nothing could be more vicious than for any political body or sect acting through a legislature to be able to prescribe courses of study. [Applause.] For example, I am a Democrat. I should object if the teachers in the schools attempted to make either Republicans or even Democrats of the boys and girls who are under their charge.

The members of the Board of Education in the District Columbia are not elected by the voters and taxpayers of the District, because there are no voters. They are appointed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. There are nine members of the Board of Education. The president of the Board, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, is an educated woman of fine character and exceptional ability; the mother of three fine young American citizens, who themselves are in the District schools. The other members of the Board are all educated, public-spirited, patriotic men and women, splendid, useful, American citizens, every one of them, serving without compensation, faithfully, efficiently, without praising themselves, without complaining about persecution—even such persecution as they have had, both from the Hearst newspapers and, I am sorry to say, from a Member of this House. They are serving in the cause of public education, without which this country, its Government, and institutions as we love them could not long endure.

I served 10 years on a board of education before coming to Congress. I know something of what such boards have to endure in the way of petty complaints and unjust criticism. I never met or knew nine better citizens than the members of this Board of Education here. Among their members, for example, is a lawyer, generally considered to be one of the two or three leaders of the local bar. There are, I believe, two other lawyers, both of them eminent and respected in their profession. There is a physician, respected in his profession. There is a well-known teacher of law with a national reputation as an authority on constitutional law. The others are of the same standard of character and of the highest standing in this city. Most, if not all, of the members of the Board are parents.

Is it fair to leave the imputation resting upon them that they have attempted to indoctrinate the pupils with communism and make Communists of them? That they have attempted to instill immorality and indecent ideas in the pupils of the schools here, as has been charged and put into the records of committee hearings by the gentleman from Texas and the gentlewoman from Indiana? [Applause.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not kept up with the details of this controversy. Will the gentleman state for my information and the information of the Members of the House exactly the terms of this so-called "red rider" and what limitation and prohibition it puts upon the teachers?

Mr. SISSON. I shall be glad to do so for the distinguished majority leader and the Members of the House.

The so-called "red rider" which is attached to the appropriation bill in substance provides, so far as the public schools of the District of Columbia are concerned, that for the fiscal year ending in June and thereafter no part of the appropriation shall be available to pay the salary of any person advocating or teaching communism in the schools of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is not the gentleman in error? Does not that refer to the whole appropriation bill?

Mr. SISSON. It refers to the whole appropriation for all of the public schools, although it was intended, as a matter of agreement between the gentleman from Texas and the senior Member of the other body from my own State of New York, that it should only apply to the item of appropriation for character education.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman said that "hereafter no part of the above appropriation shall be used." Does it not refer to the whole bill?

Mr. SISSON. It means the whole appropriation for all the public schools.

Mr. BOILEAU. And for all types of teaching?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, there are over 2,900 teachers in the public schools of the District. It would not be surprising if one, two, or three might be found who had been infected with some "ism" and had been guilty of airing his or her views in the District schools; but in spite of the diligence of the gentleman from Texas and the gentlewoman from Indiana and a few busybodies in the District, no such instance has been found.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. Is there not a certain implication in this communism business? For instance, one of my colleagues told me that communism consisted of the nationalization of women and the overthrow of the Government; in other words, immorality and treason. In other words, according to this concept, the effect of this is psychological, and each 2 weeks or month the teachers must swear under oath that they have not taught or advocated immorality, obscenity, or treason?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman in effect is correct, according to my understanding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out one thing which I think all Members know, and the teachers make no objection to this; neither does anybody else. Under the law today and under the old law before the passage of this "red rider" each teacher took the same constitutional oath that we Members of Congress take, and there is no objection to that. If they violated this oath and advocated communism or any other "ism" subversive of our Government, or even advocated that their pupils should be Democrats, Republicans, or anything else, they could be and would be removed by the Board of Education.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming that the teachers in the District of Columbia may explain communism or any other form of government, how much further would the gentleman care to have them go?

Mr. SISSON. How much further?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If they may explain communism or any other form of government, how much further would the gentleman ask them to go?

Mr. SISSON. I would not ask them to go any further. The point is there is a great dispute, and neither the gentleman from Texas nor any of the proponents of the red rider agree that communism in a factual way should be taught, or that the social, political, or economic system in Russia may be taught—not even in a factual way. They say it should be mentioned, if at all, by denouncing it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Has not the corporation counsel stated that they may explain communism under the "red rider"?

Mr. SISSON. Who knows what another corporation counsel may rule? The Comptroller General has ruled otherwise and has prescribed an oath that they shall not advocate or teach communism.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GASSAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object, if the gentleman is going to discuss communism.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from New York proceeding?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman's objection comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not rule that it came too late because if the gentleman was on his feet to object he has that right.

Is there objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] proceeding for 2 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. I just wanted to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] is a true friend of education and American citizenship. It takes nerve, courage, and intelligence to make this fight, and the gentleman has those qualities. The gentleman knows that our party stands for civil liberty, religious and academic freedom, and you are one of the leaders in the country in that fight.

Mr. SISSON. There are over 2,900 teachers in the public schools of the District. It would not be surprising if, in this number, a few were found—1 or 2 or 3—who were infected with a belief in some "ism" subversive of our Government and our institutions, which they might have attempted to air. I think it is remarkable that no such instance has been found, despite the diligent efforts of the gentleman from Texas, the gentlewoman from Indiana, and a few professional busybodies in the city of Washington. Yet not one instance was found of a single teacher who had attempted to do so, or who had violated his or her constitutional oath. It was a remarkable showing and speaks well for the administration of the superintendent of schools, Dr. Frank Ballou, and of this Board of Education, and it speaks well for these teachers. I suppose most of these teachers are Republicans; I hope that some of them are Democrats. Undoubtedly some are independent in their political affiliations, but no instance was shown where any teacher had even tried to make Democrats, Republicans, or Socialists, to say nothing of Communists, of their pupils.

When I was president of a board of education of nine members I took the stand that the superintendent should not be permitted to make any inquiry of prospective teachers before he hired them as to either their political affiliations or their religious affiliation. I believed that that was the American way. We have a right to find out that teachers are of good character and that they would not advocate anything which would destroy our form of government and its institutions. I think also that a teacher should believe in the rights guaranteed by the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, including freedom of speech and of the press and religious liberty. But we have no right to pry into their minds or souls and select them in accordance with political or religious affiliation. I have a great admiration and respect for our American public-school teachers. They are the salt of the earth. Upon them rests the sacred duty to awaken and inspire and strengthen the intelligence, the minds, the souls of their charges—the boys and girls. They ought not to be heckled and harassed and bullied. They ought not to be insulted by such a law as this "red rider."

Of Dr. Ballou I have already spoken. He stands among the leaders of his profession. Incidentally, I happen to know that he does not agree with me politically. Instead of being a radical, he is known in his own profession and among his associates as a conservative. I do not happen to agree with him in all of his conservatism; but if I were on a board of education, I would not hesitate for a moment to hire him as the head of a school system. He is a safe man in that kind of place. He is a scholar, a tireless worker, a sound educator, an honest Christian gentleman.

I hope you will read in the RECORD what the Association of School Superintendents of this country think of him. It is a monstrous thing for him to be unjustly charged with being a Communist, of seeking to inculcate immorality in the schools, as he has been by the gentleman from Texas and by one of the gentleman's star witnesses—this Russian Serkowich, a man of doubtful reputation; a man warned by the Better Business Bureau of this city to desist from various stock promotions. This Serkowich, the clerk of the gentlewoman from Indiana, one of the star witnesses of the gentleman from Texas in his star-chamber inquisition into the schools of this District. This Serkowich, who hid when he learned that I had asked the Subcommittee on Education to have him summoned before that committee in order that he might be questioned about his testimony and his charges in the star-chamber proceedings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations.

The chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY], very promptly ruled and ordered that Serkowich should be produced before that committee. The gentlewoman from Indiana, in whose employ he was, promised that he would be produced. He could never be found thereafter until the Subcommittee on Education had closed its hearings. He would not have had the gentleman from Texas there to protect him. In this respect Serkowich, of course, followed the example of his employer, the gentlewoman from Indiana, who came in before the committee of which she was supposed to be a member, refused to listen to any of the evidence, made her monstrous charges against the Board, in the course of which she even charged them with attempting to carry out the system prevailing in Russia of immorality, of the nationalization of women, and then refused to answer a single question, although she had put herself in the category, not of one of a tribunal to hear the testimony, but of an ordinary witness. She made her charge and ran away. And then, again following the tactics of the gentleman from Texas, she attempted to prevent a consideration of this question upon its merits. She attempted to suppress the facts and the truth by locking up her own statement in her desk and running back to Indiana so as to prevent and delay the printing of the hearings.

Now, who wants this infamous "red rider" kept on the statute books? The Hearst newspapers; General Fries, who attempted to blacken Dr. Ballou's professional reputation by withholding the truth and by willfully bearing false witness against Dr. Ballou. Read General Fries' testimony at pages 154–171 of the hearings of the Subcommittee on Education, and particularly notice where he was questioned by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY], who very effectively brought out the fact that General Fries was willfully bearing false witness and was suppressing the truth.

Who wants this "red rider" on the statute books? The Ku Klux Klan. One of its local organizations is listed as a member of General Fries' so-called federation of citizens and as having endorsed the "red rider." The gentleman from Texas, who alternately praises and denounces Hearst, depending upon whether Hearst is at that particular time with the gentleman from Texas or against him; a few busybodies who have always been for repression and suppression.

Who are demanding the repeal of the "red rider"? Look at the record, the hearings of the Subcommittee on Education. See some of the editorials from the Republican, Democrat, and Independent press of the country. Look at the list of organizations on pages 273–275 of those hearings. The whole press of the country, with practically the sole exception of the Hearst newspapers; the National Education Association, representing the hundreds of thousands of American public-school teachers; nearly every parent-teachers' organization in the city of Washington; every real civic organization in the city of Washington.

In the 29 pages which the gentleman from Texas inserted into the RECORD under date of April 2 he makes a long argument in which he assumes, as an assumption which does not need proof, that Columbia University and Teachers College, as a part of Columbia University, are both communistic. He assumes that practically everyone connected with the faculty of Teachers College and of Columbia University are Communists. I do not think he mentions Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, and he apparently did not know all of the professors by name or have a list of them, but he certainly listed a large number of writers and educators. Again he cited as his authority the Red Network, by Mrs. Dilling, of which I have already spoken. He has pestered the Board of Education, particularly since the passage of this "red rider", by demanding all kinds of information and statistics, which it has taken a great deal of time of the superintendent and his secretarial staff, as well as of the Board of Education, to supply. Sometime ago he sent a questionnaire to the Superintendent, Dr. Ballou, commanding the Superintendent to furnish complete information as to the educational training of each and every of the more than 2,900 teachers of the schools of the District of Columbia and also the number of them who were graduates of or who had taken courses at Teachers College of Columbia University. He also wanted to know if Dr. Ballou was not an associate of Dr. George F. Counts when he, Dr. Ballou, was at Teachers College in Columbia. He also wanted to know what compensation, if any, Dr. Ballou had received in the shape of expenses or honorariums for making addresses in other parts of the country on educational subjects. Dr. Ballou furnished him with all of this information, including the information as to the educational training of the more than 2,900 teachers, with the exception of about 15 of them who were away on leaves of absence for sickness and who could not be reached. The Superintendent furnished this, although he might very properly have told the gentleman from Texas that it was none of his business. The gentleman from Texas has all of this information. Down to the present time he has not made it public, although he had permission to do so. He has suppressed it. I think it is proper for me—and I intended to include it in my request—to make this correspondence between the gentleman from Texas and the Superintendent, Dr. Ballou, a part of this RECORD, and I hope also that in one way or another Members of the House will examine it. The Teachers College in Columbia is a place where teachers from all over the country not only attend for the purpose of taking the regular courses but also attend during their summer vacations. It is something that most school systems encourage teachers to do. Teachers College in Columbia University is, of course, by reason of its location, more readily available to the teachers from the Northeastern States and from the District of Columbia than most other similar teachers' professional schools.

The number of the teachers in the District of Columbia schools who have at one time or another attended or taken summer courses in Teachers College, as furnished to the gentleman from Texas by Superintendent Ballou, is 713. Of this 713, 565 took summer courses only. The total number of teachers in the schools of the District of Columbia is 2,968, so that the number of teachers in the schools of the District of Columbia who have never attended the Teachers College at Columbia University is 2,255. I do not know what the average would be, if it is a matter of any importance, of teachers from other cities in Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, New Jersey, the New England States, who have attended Teachers College. Obviously it would be, of course, much higher in New York. I do know, however, that in my own city of Utica—a city of about 100,000 population—there are more teachers who secured some part or all of their training in Teachers College than any other similar institution. There are not quite as many teachers from Columbia University in the gentleman's own State of Texas in proportion to the total number of teachers as there are in the District of Columbia schools or as there are in New York; this by reason of location and distance. But there are a large number, and for the information of the Members of the House we have prepared a little graphic map showing where there are teachers in the State of Texas, including the gentleman's own congressional district, who have taken some part or all of their training in Teachers College at Columbia. I commend it to the attention of the gentleman from Texas in order that after he gets through with his other battles he may go to work on his own State and his own district.

So after the gentleman goes up into New Jersey in the coming election and defeats the gentlewoman from New Jersey for reelection, as he has promised to do, and then after he goes up into my district in central New York and defeats me for reelection, and then after he goes out to Indiana and saves the gentlewoman from that State from being defeated—and, of course, I do not know that he has promised to do that—but inasmuch as he unquestionably had something to do with getting her into this communistic trouble, surely such a gallant knight would not refuse the lady assistance, then, after he explains to the voters down in his own district how he can spend so much of his time away from his duty of looking after his own district and so little of his time in looking after his own constituents, why, then he can go to work on Texas. Of course, after polishing his armor and grinding his sword and pulling down his visor, this Don Quixote can enter the lists against the teachers down there who have committed the crime of attending Teachers College at Columbia University.

In the gentleman's remarks which are in the RECORD under date of April 2, he called Dr. Charters, who had been called in here to advise about character education, a "pimp" for Moscow University. Dr. Charters was never in Moscow University; in fact he was never in Russia. He was listed as an exchange professor between Moscow University and the American University, with which he is connected, as every educated man knows is customary between American and European universities. Then he called another distinguished educator a "pimp" for something else. Offhand, it would seem to me that his statement with respect to those two gentlemen came pretty close to being libelous per se. Maybe so and maybe not, I never bother to examine the laws of libel; I do not have occasion to do so, so far as I am concerned, personally. Neither do I use a sword. But of course, this chivalrous knight with his visor and his sword, this Don Quixote, is protected by the constitutional immunity of a Member of Congress, not to be called to answer in any other place for what he says here; or at least he is protected so far as a suit at law is concerned.

Now, I am sorry to have been obliged to refer to the gentleman from Texas, or the gentlewoman from Indiana. I have done so most reluctantly, and only because it was necessary to do so in directing your attention to the record.

On the merits of the issue, the infamous "red rider" should be removed from the Federal statute books.

I have appended hereto, for your information, some factual data with references to the RECORD, in answer to the 29 pages which the gentleman from Texas inserted in the RECORD under date of April 2.

I have also appended hereto certain facts in answer to the hearings held before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was chairman.

I have also included a letter to me from Mr. S. D. Shankland, executive secretary of the department of superintendence, giving facts regarding the career of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, and the estimation in which he is held by the members of his own profession.

All of these things are directly in answer and directly in point to the issues raised by the gentleman from Texas, in his various remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and in his examination of witnesses in the hearings held before the subcommittee of which he was chairman.

I have also included correspondence between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], and Superintendent Ballou, regarding the number of teachers in the schools of the District of Columbia who attended Teachers College at Columbia University.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF SUPERINTENDENCE,
NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1936.

Hon. FRED J. SISSON,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have noted the recent public discussion concerning the administration of the Washington, D. C., public schools by Superintendent Frank W. Ballou. For your information I take the liberty of placing before you some facts relating thereto, particularly in connection with Dr. Ballou's national standing as an educator.

The department of superintendence of the National Education Association of the United States is the national organization of superintendents of schools. Dr. Ballou was president of the department in 1925–26. This is the highest honor which the superintendents of schools of the country have it in their power to confer on a fellow superintendent.

During Dr. Ballou's administration of the department, the annual convention was held in the city of Washington. This meeting, in February 1926, brought to this city some 10,000 visitors. Again in 1932 the department met in Washington at the invitation of Dr. Ballou. Twice at the invitation of Dr. Ballou and his staff the annual summer conventions of the National Education Association have been held in Washington, first in 1924 and again in 1934. These meetings brought to the Nation's Capital the leading educators of the country.

Some 10 years ago it became evident that the courses of study in public schools needed extensive revision. Increased enrollments, especially in the intermediate and secondary schools, made prompt action imperative. Accordingly, at a convention of the department of superintendence, it was voted to organize a commission on the curriculum, with a view to pooling the best thinking of educators and laymen on the problem. Dr. Ballou was one of 12 distinguished educators invited to undertake this task, with Supt. Edwin C. Broome, of Philadelphia, as chairman. The commission on the curriculum made exhaustive studies over a period of years, publishing their finding in four yearbooks which went far toward improving public-school courses of study. A number of outstanding contributions to this undertaking should be credited to Dr. Ballou. For example, there was prepared under the direction of Dr. Ballou and with the cooperation of the members of the staff of the Washington public schools and of scientists in the vicinity of Washington a report on elementary science and nature study which has been generally recognized as an authoritative guide to local school systems in dealing with this subject. Prompted by the success of the commission on the curriculum, the department of superintendence voted to organize a similar commission to study the entire problem of school supervision. A commission of eight members was appointed for this purpose under the chairmanship of Albert S. Cook, State superintendent of schools in Maryland. Dr. Ballou was again chosen to membership. The yearbook on Supervision, published under the direction of this commission, is still the standard authority in this field.

Again, in 1933, Dr. Ballou was chosen as one of the nine members of a commission to study the relationship of education to changing social and economic conditions. This commission, which was headed by John W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, prepared the 1935 yearbook of our organization.

So far as I can recall, no other superintendent of schools has served on as many of the yearbook commissions of the department of superintendence as Dr. Ballou. In addition to his service as an officer of the department and as a member of these important commissions, Dr. Ballou has met other calls made upon him by the department in recognition of his qualities of leadership. He was chairman of our committee on resolutions in 1930; member of the committee on school costs in 1932; chairman of the committee on financing educational research, 1933 to 1935. For several years Dr. Ballou has been one of the three delegates representing the department of superintendence on the governing organization of the American Council on Education.

Dr. Ballou has been a frequent speaker on the programs at our annual conventions. To illustrate his philosophy of education, may I quote from his remarks at the convention 2 years ago, in connection with a statement of our fundamental faith in education:

"Members of the educational profession will continue to consider themselves the spokesmen for the children now in our schools. Officers and teachers will continue to recognize and discharge their civic obligation, their professional responsibility, and their personal privilege to develop public opinion to a realization of the fact that education is 'the debt eternal' which this generation of adults owes the next generation now in our schools. It is our professional and patriotic duty to do everything within our power to see to it that the children of today shall be provided with an adequate education in order that they may meet and solve effectively the problems that will face them as citizens of the future. The Nation, the State, and the community count on the educational profession to prepare the boys and girls for the school of life, possessed of that knowledge, that power to think straight, and those ideals of citizenship that are essential to the preservation of the democracy itself. * * *

"Let us never permit ourselves to forget that what we want the citizens of the next generation to know or to be able to do or to be must be provided for in the current educational program. A system of public education founded on the principle of equal educational opportunity for all the children of all the people represents the spirit of America. It is responsible, in no small measure, for the achievements of American life. It will continue to be increasingly responsible in the future as the Nation moves out of economic demoralization and forward to new challenges and new victories. To reduce the amount and quality of our educational program is to reduce the standard of enlightenment among our people and to break down social morale."

It seems to me that all of us can stand with Dr. Ballou on such a platform. Later in the same address, in reference to "the spirit of America", Dr. Ballou spoke as follows:

"The economic depression is now challenging and threatening the established educational program by means of which this Nation has risen in a comparatively short period of years in the life of a nation, from a few struggling colonies on the Atlantic seaboard in 1776 to a place of outstanding leadership among the nations of the world at the present time. The basis of this outstanding achievement in American democracy is to be found in the unique program of American education and in the spirit of America which has stimulated and guided the American people to higher and higher success. The present crisis in education will be met in the spirit of America.

"What is the spirit of America? It is difficult to define, but we all know it when we see it.

"It is the spirit of the colonists, of the circuit riders and the missionary priests, of the colonial schoolmen, of noble women, of great judges and jurists, of the builders of our railroads, of the Empire State Building, of our subways, our airways, our steamship lines, and of our telephone and telegraph systems. It is the spirit of unselfish service for the common good. It is the spirit and glory of America that 20,000,000 people can be unemployed, and face starvation, and still hope for the arrival of the better day through the instrumentalities of organized government and not through revolt and revolution. * * *

"There are possibilities for almost unlimited hope notwithstanding the fog of today's confusion. How are those possibilities of hope to be realized? Primarily in putting first things first in our thinking and in our lives. If this be done, schools will not be allowed to close. Rather, the doors of the schools will be opened wider and truth and inspiration will be exalted. If first things are put first, love of home and family, love of country, respect and tolerance for all mankind, and unselfishness will take on a new meaning and value and permanence, and will again become the compelling ideals in the thoughts and actions of men. * * *

"The school, the home, and the church will find their places as the cornerstones of the intellectual, social, and spiritual temple which we must create in the minds and hearts of the youth of America. Then shall we exalt the spiritual over the material, truth and beauty over profit, and goodness above gold."

The devotion to American ideals, and the advancement of those ideals through public education which is expressed in the statement just quoted are typical of Dr. Ballou's entire career as a leader in the educational profession.

Very sincerely yours,

S. D. SHANKLAND,
Executive Secretary.

APRIL 30, 1936.

REPLY TO STATEMENTS MADE BY REPRESENTATIVE BLANTON AS PUBLISHED IN CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, APRIL 2, 1936, VOLUME 80, NO. 77

THE BOOK CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. BLANTON assumes that the book Conclusions and Recommendations, the final and sixteenth volume of the report of the commission on the social studies, American Historical Association, is communistic. He suggests, and nothing could be more untrue, that its purpose is to communize the teachers and through them the school children of this country. He attempts to make it appear that Dr. F. W. Ballou refused to sign the report of the commission because Conclusions and Recommendations is "too communistic" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4851). Mr. BLANTON repeats this statement (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4858), "because it was communistic he (Dr. Ballou) refused to sign it." Dr. Ballou never made the statement that Conclusions and Recommendations is communistic.

What group other than the "red rider" group led by Congressman BLANTON ever made the charge that Conclusions and Recommendations is communistic? This small book is only one of the 16 volumes in the report of the commission of the American Historical Association. The members of this commission were able and outstanding educators representing a highly respected and time-honored association. There are statements in this book relative to collectivism, but to any fair-minded reader it is perfectly clear that the writers merely suggest a collectivistic society under our democratic institutions. Fair reading of this book and also the other 15 volumes of this report reveal the patriotism and loyalty of the authors to our democracy. The authors do not even suggest communism as a form of government for this country.

Dr. F. W. Ballou never made the statement that Conclusions and Recommendations is communistic, as he is charged by Representative BLANTON. He said that he did not sign the book because he could not agree with the authors in their view of a "collectivistic society" (hearings, p. 563). Dr. Ballou made it very clear to the Subcommittee on Appropriations that he is an "individualist." He gave other reasons for not signing the report (hearings, p. 565), "the commission would not formulate some definite recommendations in that volume which I could put into the hands of the teachers and say were to be the guiding principles for the teaching of the social studies." The volume "criticizes testing and teachers' training", I disagree entirely on that point of view. Dr. Ballou's entire background and instincts are conservative, and this is known not only by his associates but also throughout the country. He showed his conservatism by declining to sign the report; he was with the conservative group on the commission. The liberal group on this commission went no further than to suggest a collectivistic society under our democratic institutions. Communism is as repugnant to them as it is to Mr. BLANTON.

Mr. BLANTON fails to show in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4858) that Dr. Ballou in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee addressed the teachers in the school system here before Conclusions and Recommendations was even published and at that time gave his views relative to the forthcoming book (hearings, p. 562). In this meeting "I gave a description of some of the things that the report covered, and some of the things I disagreed with, so that the teachers of Washington were entirely familiar with the fact that while I was secretary of the commission I did not sign the report, and they knew the reasons why I did not sign it."

Mr. BLANTON states (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4858) that Dr. Ballou has placed this book, Conclusions and Recommendations, "in his Washington schools as a textbook" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4858). This is a false statement, as Mr. BLANTON was given full information by both Mr. Jones and Dr. Ballou. This book is not now and never was used as a textbook. This book was suggested to social-studies teachers by Mr. Jones, head of department, for their personal libraries (hearings, p. 527). Mr. BLANTON failed to reveal in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that Mr. Jones told him (hearings, p. 524), in speaking of Conclusions and Recommendations: "The teachers know my attitude and my views. They get these views in meetings and through bulletins." "This book was discussed in a meeting called for the particular purpose of discussing the book."

Mr. BLANTON fails to give accurate statement of facts; to illustrate (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4855): "When Professor Jones denounces Dr. Counts' book as 'terrible' and 'damnable.'" Professor Jones, in fact, denounced certain statements taken and read from the book by Mr. BLANTON. These statements were brief and read out of the context. If preceding and following statements were read and studied, the meaning might have been entirely different (hearings, p. 530).

CHARACTER EDUCATION

Mr. BLANTON again quotes only in part:

(CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4838.) Mr. BLANTON in quoting Dr. Ballou says, "What we are trying to do is to set up a new philosophy of education." And then in reference to teachers, "Whose philosophy has got to be changed fundamentally."

The Subcommittee on Appropriations of the District of Columbia has made much with respect to quoting the partial statement of Dr. Ballou at the hearings on the 1936 appropriation, in which they left out of his context the phrase, "We are trying to set up a new philosophy of education", the inference of this being that this new philosophy is to be a philosophy of a new social order. However, the phrase, when taken in its original context, gives a real lead toward what this philosophy might be. Dr. Ballou's original statement, in answer to a question by Mr. CANNON, was as follows: "What we are trying to do is to set up a new philosophy of education which includes character development as one of the outcomes of education."

The true implication of this statement is that education needs to give greater attention to character development. It may be well to examine the background of the evolution of this statement. This we can best do by quoting a number of excerpts from a speech by the Honorable ROYAL S. COPELAND, Senator from New York, in a speech delivered before the National Education Association, department of superintendence, Cleveland, Ohio, February 28, 1934. At this time it will be noted from the excerpts that Senator COPELAND calls upon the educators of the country to examine their present philosophy, to reorganize and reinterpret that philosophy in terms of certain basic thoughts which we have a right to assume Dr. COPELAND embraced as a result of his experience as chairman of the Senate's Subcommittee on Crime.

The following are the excerpts which give the bases for Dr. Ballou's statement that we are trying to set up a new philosophy of education:

"Most of us regard character building as the primary responsibility of the home. But, if I may jump to my conclusion on this point, I am forced to recognize that there is no immediate hope of greatly improving the home conditions of those who may later follow criminal careers. To accomplish this end is a long-range process.

"What would happen to a proposal that the public schools assume the responsibility for a basic crime prevention program?

"Have not educators tended to define the job of the schools in terms of developing tool skills, and of mastering narrowly defined content? Have they not placed unduly exclusive emphasis upon 'sharpening the minds' of those who are to be the lawyers and the executives of the future, as well as the minds of the average run of us who pass through the school system?

"Has not our attention been too sharply focused on the universal mastery of scientific method to the exclusion of the personal and social needs of the masses of our children?

"Have not teachers and teachers' colleges, in their zeal for a predetermined curriculum and for a universal intellectual discipline, forgotten that their objective is good citizens rather than subject matter conformity? In all candor, I believe they are shooting over the target.

"Far be from me to criticize, but in humility of spirit I contend that there is something in education more vital than sharpening the mind.

"My purpose is to stimulate your interest and to cause you to focus your attention upon what I personally regard as important—a restudy of the objectives of education from the viewpoint of the individual child who must live in a complex and changing society.

"What I here suggest is that our pursuit of intellectual discipline shall not be so exclusive as to leave character building to chance, nor so undiscriminating with regard to individual limitations and needs as to provoke or perpetuate negative reactions and antisocial attitudes in some of our children. Let us not forget that while appropriate intellectual training may go far toward correcting antisocial attitudes, it is also true that inappropriate or wrongly motivated learning efforts may produce opposite results.

"The testimony of several leading educators at the subcommittee hearings indicates that unconstructive attitudes and the formation of antisocial groups among school children frequently originate in or are perpetuated and aggravated by academic maladjustments. Hence the importance of maintaining continuous records, both of growth in academic and intellectual achievements and extracurricular experiences, personal and social adjustments, and character development.

"Are these failures inevitable or are they due largely to the fact that our curriculum is still so rigid that many of our pupils are confronted with academic tasks which are beyond their abilities, irrelevant to their interests and needs, and which foredoom them to what our inflexible academic standards call 'failure'?

"As a first movement in a major attack let us secure from the public a new mandate. Let us have new specifications of the results expected from public education or a restatement of objectives. I believe that in drawing these specifications there must be written in large letters certain primary conditions. We expect results in character and in everything that is essential to good citizenship rather than results measured chiefly in terms of facts learned or in terms of pure intellectual activity or sharpened minds."

These excerpts give the true basis and background of the statement that a new philosophy is needed and is being evolved in public education. For the conclusion of his speech Senator COPELAND makes the following statement, which would indicate that the schools of the District of Columbia had been selected primarily by the Congress of the United States in an attempt to put this new philosophy into practice. We quote again from that address:

"To make a clinical test, to use the words of my profession, and to demonstrate the type of development proposed, Dr. Ballou, superintendent of the Washington schools, is arranging to initiate the proposed plan in the District of Columbia. This will involve evolution in many areas. You can see that he must face problems in administration, records, individual instruction, materials of instruction, training teachers in service, adult classes, and evening classes. In community contacts there will be a new relationship to the movies, the press, the facilities for recreation, the church, the juvenile courts, children organizations, and many more."

During the past 2 years the public schools have attempted to put into practice the hopes expressed by Senator COPELAND at Cleveland. An examination of the projects carried on during this time will give evidence of the sincerity of this effort, and the practices to be found are based on the philosophy of Senator COPELAND.

FRANK W. BALLOU,
SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1936.

Hon. FRED J. SISSON,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN SISSON: I hand you herewith correspondence which I have recently had with Congressman BLANTON. I do not consider this correspondence personal, but rather official. The first letters were made public because it was necessary to secure the approval of the Board of Education for circularizing the teachers. The subsequent letters from Mr. BLANTON and my answers were issued to the press by me in view of the obvious public interest in the superintendent's answers to Congressman BLANTON's questions.

I am giving you copies of this correspondence because under the circumstances I thought you would like to have the information which I have furnished Congressman BLANTON.

Yours very sincerely,

F. W. BALLOU,
Superintendent of Schools.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 25, 1936.

Dr. FRANK W. BALLOU,
Superintendent of Schools,
Franklin School, Thirteenth and K Streets NW.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR DR. BALLOU: As the chairman of the subcommittee handling the District appropriation bill and on behalf of our committee, I will ask you to please furnish me with the following information, and, if possible, I would like to have it tomorrow, to wit:

(1) What was the total amount that you received from the American Historical Association or the Commission on Social Studies, or from anyone connected with the above, covering expenses, honorariums, or fees during the 5-year period that you acted as the secretary for said Commission on Social Studies?

(2) Please advise whether or not you are a graduate of the Columbia University and how long you attended the Teachers College of Columbia University.

(3) Please advise whether or not during any period of time that you attended the Teachers College of Columbia University you were in any way associated with either Dr. George S. Counts or Dr. Charles A. Beard, and, if so, then in what relation.

(4) Do you know whether Dr. W. W. Charters ever attended Columbia University or the Teachers College of Columbia University?

(5) Please have a check-up made of the record you have on scholastic attainment of every teacher in the Washington schools and advise how many of them have at any time attended the Teachers College of Columbia University.

(6) Please advise how many of the teachers in the Washington schools are graduates of the Teachers College of Columbia University.

(7) What expense and/or honorariums did you receive in 1934 and 1935?

Thanking you in advance for furnishing the above data at the very earliest moment possible, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) THOMAS L. BLANTON.

FRANK W. BALLOU,
SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS,
FRANKLIN ADMINISTRATION BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., March 25, 1936.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on the District of Columbia Appropriation Bill, United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: I have before me your letter of March 25, 1936, sent to me by special delivery, asking me to submit to you, as chairman of the Subcommittee on the District of Columbia Appropriations Bill, and on behalf of your committee, certain information, "and if possible I would like to have it tomorrow." I am giving you such information as is available within the time limit which you have set. I shall repeat your question and reply thereto.

"(1) What was the total amount that you received from the American Historical Association or the Commission of Social Studies or from anyone connected with the above, covering expenses, honorariums, or fees during the 5-year period that you acted as the secretary for said Commission on Social Studies."

I received no honorariums or fees either from the American Historical Association or the Commission on Social Studies. During the period that I was a member of said Commission on the Social Studies I did receive the amount of money represented by the expenses incurred by me in traveling to and from the place of meeting and while in attendance during the meetings.

The amount of such expenses is not readily available, and I doubt if I can give definite information on that subject because I do not keep a record of such expenses.

"(2) Please advise whether or not you are a graduate of the Columbia University and how long you attended the Teachers College of Columbia University."

I received a bachelor of science degree from Teachers College, Columbia University, in 1904. I attended Columbia University between 1902 and 1904 and the summer session of 1903.

"(3) Please advise whether or not during any period of time that you attended the Teachers College of Columbia University you were in any way associated with either Dr. George S. Counts or Dr. Charles A. Beard; and if so, then in what relation."

At the time when I was in attendance at Teachers College, Columbia University, between 1902 and 1904, I had never heard of Dr. Counts or Dr. Beard. I find on consulting Who's Who in America that Dr. Counts was born on December 9, 1889, and, therefore, he would have been 13 years of age when I entered Teachers College in 1902.

Also, I find on consulting Who's Who that Dr. Beard was a graduate student at Columbia University (not Teachers College) between 1902 and 1904, having received his master of arts degree in 1903 and his doctor of philisophy degree in 1904. I never saw Dr. Beard during that period, and did not meet him for many years thereafter.

"(4) Do you know whether Dr. W. W. Charters ever attended Columbia University or the Teachers College of Columbia University."

I do not have personal knowledge as to whether Dr. W. W. Charters ever attended Columbia University or the Teachers College of Columbia University. The statement relative to Dr. Charters in Who's Who does not show that Dr. Charters was ever connected in any way with Columbia University or any department making up that institution.

"(5) Please have a check-up made of the record you have on scholastic attainment of every teacher in the Washington schools and advise how many of them have at any time attended the Teachers College of Columbia University."

Obviously, with a personnel of more than 2,900 teachers, it is impossible to supply you by tomorrow morning with the information requested concerning teachers who have at any time attended Teachers College of Columbia University. It is a fact that many of our teachers, in common with the teachers of the Eastern States, have attended the Teachers College of Columbia either during the regular school term or especially during the summer session. This institution is usually considered one of the outstanding schools for the preparation of teachers who take leave of absence to pursue work during the regular session or spend their summer vacation period in attendance at the summer session of that institution.

"(6) Please advise how many of the teachers in the Washington schools are graduates of the Teachers College of Columbia University."

Again, the limited time which you have indicated and the large number of teachers concerned make it impossible to furnish you with accurate information as to the number of teachers now employed in the Washington public schools who are graduates of Teachers College of Columbia University. In view of the fact that we employ between 2,900 and 3,000 teachers, it is altogether probable that a considerable number of those teachers have attended Teachers College of Columbia University in preparation for their teaching career.

"(7) What expense and/or honorariums did you receive in 1934 and 1935?"

This information is not readily available and cannot be prepared in time to reach you tomorrow morning. To prepare this information it will be necessary for me to go back over my own personal records, and the question has to do with some matters concerning which I do not keep a systematic record.

In this letter I have undertaken to furnish you as promptly as possible with the information which is available with which to answer your questions.

Yours very sincerely,

FRANK W. BALLOU,
Superintendent of Schools.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1936.

Dr. FRANK W. BALLOU,
Superintendent of Schools,
Franklin Building, Thirteenth and K Streets NW.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR DR. BALLOU: I am just in receipt of your letter of March 25 in answer to my letter of that date. I will ask you to please furnish me at the earliest date possible complete answers to questions 1, 5, 6, and 7 contained in my letter of March 25 and which in your letter you failed to answer.

Regarding question 1, while you state that you received no honorariums or fees you do admit that you received certain money representing expenses, and I will ask you to please check up and advise me the approximate total amount that you received covering expenses, or for any other purpose, during the 5 years you acted as secretary to the Commission.

Regarding questions 5 and 6, the information I requested is available, because it will be found in the files of your teachers filed with your office or the Board of Education at the time they were appointed, or in such additional data as is kept in their files since their appointment.

Regarding question 7, it ought to be a very easy matter for you to check back and ascertain the aggregate of honorariums and money covering expenses that you received in 1934 and 1935 for lectures or services rendered outside of your position as Superintendent of the Washington schools.

Thanking you to give us this information at the earliest date possible, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

FRANK W. BALLOU,
SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS,
FRANKLIN ADMINISTRATION BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1936.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on the District of Columbia Appropriation Bill, United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: Your letter of March 26, 1936, was duly received. In your letter you renew your request that I furnish you with certain information for which you ask in your letter of March 25, 1936, which I could not furnish because it was not available. In paragraphs 5 and 6 you ask for a statement indicating the number of teachers who have attended the Teachers College of Columbia University at any time and the number of teachers who are graduates of the Teachers College of Columbia University.

In connection with the hearings on the District of Columbia appropriations bill for 1936, in response to your request, I furnished you with information regarding paragraphs 5 and 6 insofar as those inquiries relate to teachers recently appointed. That information may be found on pages 515 to 519 in the testimony of the hearings.

The files of the board of examiners contain information relating to those teachers who were graduates of Teachers College when appointed. A record of information on file in the office of the board of examiners would not show the number of teachers now employed in the public schools of Washington who have since appointment secured degrees from Columbia University.

Moreover, teachers are not asked to report to this office or to any other office their attendance at summer school in any institution of higher learning. Accordingly, there is no record to show how many teachers in the Washington schools have attended Teachers College or received degrees from Teachers College since appointment.

The information necessary to answer paragraphs 5 and 6 of your letter can be secured only by formal inquiry of all teachers in the Washington schools.

In accordance with the practice in such cases, this request will be brought to the attention of the Board of Education at the meeting tomorrow afternoon for the authorization to circularize the teachers of the public schools of Washington to secure this information for you.

As soon as this information can be procured, as well as the other information for which you ask can be assembled, I shall submit that information to you.

Very cordially yours,

FRANK W. BALLOU,
Superintendent of Schools.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1936.

Dr. FRANK W. BALLOU,
Superintendent of Schools,
Franklin Building, Thirteenth and K Streets NW.
Washington, D. C.

DEAR DR. BALLOU: I have your letter of March 31 replying to my letters of March 25 and 26.

Respecting the inquiries I made, about which you yourself have the information in your own personal files, it does occur to me that you could have furnished this information within the time that has elapsed since my letter of March 25 reached you by special delivery on that date. I would like to have such information right away. I thought it would be preferable and least inconvenient to you to send us this data in a letter rather than have you come before our committee and be interrogated about it. I hope you will send it right away.

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) THOMAS L. BLANTON.

FRANK W. BALLOU, SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS,
FRANKLIN ADMINISTRATION BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., April 14, 1936.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on the District of Columbia Appropriations Bill for 1937, United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: I have before me your letter of April 1, 1936, with further reference to your letters of March 25 and 26.

In my letter to you of March 25, 1936, I answered questions (2), (3), and (4), contained in your letter of March 25, and partially answered question (1); and in my letter to you of March 31, as a partial answer to your questions (5) and (6), I called your attention to certain information as contained in the hearings on the District of Columbia appropriations bill for 1936.

This letter will answer questions (1), (5), (6), and (7), contained in your letter of March 25. I shall repeat your question and reply thereto.

"(1) What was the total amount that you received from the American Historical Association or the Commission on Social Studies or from anyone connected with the above, covering expenses, honorariums, or fees during the 5-year period that you acted as the secretary for said Commission on Social Studies?"

You have already been advised in my letter of March 25, 1936, that I did not receive any fees, honorariums, or other compensations for my services on the Commission on Social Studies of the American Historical Association either as a member of that commission or as secretary of that commission.

The information regarding the amount of money which I received for expenses attending the meetings of the commission on the social studies has now been compiled and is submitted to you in the following statement, which shows the time and place of the meeting and the amount of the expense account which I submitted to the commission on the social studies. In each case I received a check for the exact amount of the expense account submitted. I did not attend the session of the commission on November 7, 1929, and did not attend any of the sessions of March 29–31, 1930; hence there was no expense account submitted in connection with the meeting of March 29–31, 1930. No expense account was submitted by me and I did not receive any expense money for my attendance at the meetings held in Washington, D. C., in 1929 and 1931.

Attention is invited also to the fact that the amount of money which I received for expenses in connection with my attendance at the meetings of the commission covers only the expenses incurred and paid for by me. The fact is that at our meetings at the University of Chicago, at Princeton Inn, and at Briarcliffe Manor the hotel and meals were paid for by the director of the commission in my case, as in the case of other members of the commission, and the amount of such expenses was paid by the commission and is not included in the items of expense submitted by me.

List of meetings of the commission on social studies, American Historical Association, attended by the superintendent of schools, with expense items indicated

Meeting date and place:	Expense item
Feb. 16–17, 1929: New York City, N. Y., Carnegie Corporation (board of directors' room)	$30.61
Mar. 29–30, 1929: Washington, D. C., Mayflower Hotel	None
Nov. 7, 8, 9, 1929: New York City, council room—social science research council (Not present Nov. 7.)	31.15
Mar. 29–31, 1930: Asheville, N. C., Grove Park Inn (Did not attend.)	None
Apr. 8, 1930: New York City, Faculty Club—Columbia University	28.53
Oct. 16–18, 1930: Briarcliffe Manor, New York	33.50
May 7–8, 1931: Washington, D. C., Shoreham Hotel	None
Oct. 27–28, 1932: Princeton, N. J., Princeton Inn	18.17
Oct. 12, 13, 14, 1933: Judson Court—University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill	79.93
Dec. 21–22, 1933: Princeton, N. J., Princeton Inn	13.65
Total	236.54

The above tabulation represents all of the meetings of the commission which I attended, and the expense account for each meeting indicates the amount of money which I personally spent in attendance at the meetings and for which the Commission on the Social Studies reimbursed me by check. This is to certify that I received no other money in connection with my services as a member of the Commission on the Social Studies either from the commission or from any other source whatsoever.

"(5) Please have a check up made of the record you have on scholastic attainment of every teacher in the Washington schools and advise how many of them have at any time attended the Teachers College of Columbia University.

"(6) Please advise how many of the teachers in the Washington schools are graduates of the Teachers College of Columbia University."

In order to secure accurate information to answer the above two questions the superintendent circularized the teaching staff of the public schools. A tabulation of the replies to this questionnaire shows that 565 teachers attended Teachers College of Columbia University and 148 teachers graduated from Teachers College of Columbia University. The following statement is submitted herewith for your information:

Division of pay roll	Number teachers who graduated from Teachers College, Columbia University	Number teachers who attended but did not graduate	Number teachers who have never attended Teachers College	Total number teachers
Teachers College	27	31	35	93
Senior high schools	60	131	411	602
Junior-senior high school		1	21	22
Junior high schools	36	165	434	635
Vocational schools	1	22	65	88
Special subjects	4	19	44	67
Elementary schools	20	192	1,218	1,430
Annual substitutes		3	21	24
Character education research assistants		1	6	7
Total	148	565	2,255	2,968

This tabulation does not include 15 teachers who, because of ill health or other circumstances, have not sent in replies. It also does not include two salaries represented by vacant positions due to teachers leaving the service. In view of the fact that this is vacation week and the schools are not in session, it is not possible at this moment to secure the information concerning the 15 teachers who, for the reasons indicated, did not fill out the questionnaires.

"(7) What expense and/or honorariums did you receive in 1934 and 1935?"

The information for which you asked in the above question is contained in the following statement:

Service	Date	Gross allowance	Expenses	Net income
2 addresses, Twentieth Annual Conference of Superintendents of Schools, Bridgewater, Mass.	Apr. 16 and 17, 1934.	$150.00	$50.09	$99.91

1 address, Mid-Summer Institute for Superintendents and Headmasters, Keene, N. H.	Aug. 20, 1935	50.00	10.00	40.00
1 address, Twenty-seventh Annual Conference of Superintendents of Schools of Maine, Castine, Maine.	Aug. 23, 1935	60.00	10.00	50.00
1 address, Camden County Teachers' Institute, Haddonfield, N. J.	Oct. 9, 1935	57.64	7.64	50.00
Adjunct professor, George Washington University.	1935	144.00		144.00
Total		411.64	27.64	384.00

The above information is complete and accurate to the best of my knowledge and belief.

In my letter of March 31, 1936, I advised you that the information necessary to answer paragraphs 5 and 6 of your letter of March 25 could be secured only by formal inquiry of all Washington teachers, and that in accordance with the practice in such cases I would place your request for this information before the Board of Education at its meeting on April 1 for consideration and appropriate action. I advised you further that as soon as this information, together with other information for which you asked, had been assembled it would be submitted to you.

At the meeting of the Board of Education held on April 1 the following motion was made by a Board member and passed by the Board:

"I move that Dr. Ballou be advised to give the information requested in paragraphs 5 and 6 as soon as he can conveniently obtain the same, and that he accompany the information with a letter advising the chairman of the District Appropriations Committee that neither the Board of Education nor the Superintendent of Schools recommends any particular college or university for any teachers to attend, and that in the appointment of teachers no preference is given to any standard or accredited institution."

In addition to the above motion, the Board instructed the Superintendent to make a statement in this communication covering the method of appointment of teachers in the Washington schools. In accordance with the instructions of the Board, I submit the following statements:

1. In the written and oral examinations held for qualifying persons for appointment as teachers in the Washington public schools, in accordance with the provisions of law, the boards of examiners accept work done by candidates in any accredited colleges or universities at its face value, no preference whatsoever being given to the credits earned in one accredited institution as compared with credits earned in another accredited institution.

2. Neither the Board of Education, nor the boards of examiners, nor the Superintendent of Schools, nor any other officer in the school system, as far as the Superintendent knows, has advised teachers to attend one college or university rather than another, either in preparation for admission to the Washington schools or in the pursuit of further education after appointment.

3. Appointments of teachers are made from rated lists of candidates who have passed written, oral, and physical examinations, and the candidate who stands no. 1 on the appropriate list of eligible candidates is invariably appointed when a position is to be filled. The rated lists of candidates qualified for appointment as teachers by the boards of examiners and submitted to the Board of Education by the Superintendent of Schools do not contain any information as to the colleges or universities from which the individual candidates received degrees. The appointments are recommended by the Superintendent and are approved by the Board of Education without any knowledge of the college or university of which candidates are graduates.

On returning to my office late this afternoon, I was advised of your conversation with my secretary over the telephone regarding the submission of the information requested by you.

The information which you requested has been prepared for you as promptly as it was possible to prepare it. To comply with your insistence that I answer your inquiry by 9 a. m. tomorrow means that some of the information submitted must still be incomplete. As already indicated above, the information concerning 15 teachers is still incomplete and cannot be completed until after the teachers return to service from the Easter vacation period on April 20.

Yours very sincerely,

FRANK W. BALLOU,
Superintendent of Schools.

On March 30, on the floor of the House, Congressman BLANTON claimed a "great victory." He referred to a vote of the Federation of Citizens' Associations on March 28 adopting a report of their special committee on the elimination of communistic matter from the public schools of the District of Columbia.

Congressman BLANTON claims his victory by a "vote of over 2 to 1." The facts are:

At that meeting 56 delegates of a total of 130 were present. Four of the delegates did not vote.

Of the 33 voting against tabling the report of the special committee, at least 4 delegates were representing groups which had written to the School Board specifically endorsing the Sisson bill, H. R. 11375. They were Selden M. Ely, North Capitol Citizens' Association; C. D. Franks, Friendship Heights Citizens' Association; Reed F. Martin and Walter Irey, Takoma Park Citizens' Association.

Twenty-two citizens' associations wrote directly to the School Board endorsing H. R. 11375; two wrote favoring the rider; the rest voted confidence in the School Board. The School Board voted unanimously for the repeal of the "red rider."

Other organizations, not members of the federation, which have gone on record in favor of H. R. 11375 against the rider are: Professional Directors of Religious Education in the District of Columbia, Washington Newspaper Guild, Washington Teachers' Union of the American Federation of Teachers, Junior High School Teachers' Association, Elementary Principals' Association, Education Association of the District of Columbia, Board of Managers of the District of Columbia Congress of Teachers and Parents, Parent Education Lay Teachers Group of the District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers, and the Parent-Teachers Associations of the Horace Mann, Bancroft, Jackson, and Cooke Schools.

Hundreds of letters from eminent persons in various professions throughout the country have been received by the School Board commending it for its emphatic stand against "gag" legislation, and in defense of the so-called communistic textbooks used in the classrooms.

Some of these people are: Prof. Mary Wooley, president of Mount Holyoke College; William J. Bogan, superintendent of schools, Chicago; Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior under Mr. Hoover, and an endless list of persons, who, though not directly affected by this measure were sufficiently aroused by the ridiculous and dangerous violation of our constitutional rights.

The Central Labor Union, representing all organized labor in the District of Columbia, has gone on record in favor of H. R. 11375, as well as the citizens of the District of Columbia as represented through their responsible and respectable newspapers.

In view of these facts Congressman BLANTON's "victory" appears empty and his boast that Washington citizens are in favor of the absurd measure is out of harmony with the facts.

The "red rider" was condemned by a prominent lawyers' association—the Committee on Federal Legislation of New York County Lawyers' Association—in the following decision:

"The question is not one of approving or disapproving communism. It is one of good administration and constitutional liberty. This is arbitrary interference with administration. The Communist doctrines ought not to be taught with the taxpayers money, any more than the doctrines of any other party ought, but there is no reason for singling the party out for special legislative treatment. It is entitled to equality of treatment with all other political parties.

"The spirit of the Constitution, as found in the Bill of Rights, protects freedom of speech; property rights, including the right to earn a living; and, generally, guarantees to American citizens freedom of thought, expression, and action.

"The provision in the District of Columbia appropriation bill relating to the teaching of communism is not in accordance with the spirit of these constitutional provisions for orderly liberty and ought to be repealed."

Trickery and falsification have been resorted to in an effort to force the Congress of the United States to pass this legislation and every means has been used to hide from them the true facts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that much of the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] has been in criticism of me because I helped to pass what he calls the "red rider" to stop communism in schools, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes to reply thereto.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult and unpleasant to object to the gentleman's request, but we are prepared to go ahead with the Consent Calendar. Many Members have bills on that calendar, and we should like to get them disposed of; but in view of the situation, I shall not object to this request, but shall object to any further requests for time until we have disposed of the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the facts connected with what is termed the "red rider" issue are so well known to and understood by the substantial Members of this Congress that I would not deem it necessary to take this floor at this time were it not for the cowardly attack made this morning by the Washington Post on the distinguished Speaker of this House. I am not going to permit that cowardly attack to go unanswered.

The Washington Post yesterday quoted the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] as stating that he had thrown the responsibility of not taking up the Sisson bill upon the shoulders of the Speaker of the House. Then this morning, in an editorial headed "Up to the Speaker", the Washington Post said that the " 'red rider' was imposed by trickery", and then said, "To this cowardly and contemptible procedure Speaker BYRNS is now making himself a party." The Post said that "the Speaker was responsible for refusing the Sisson bill its place on the calendar of April 27", and the Post further said "the Speaker will also be responsible if this policy of sabotage is continued on May 11." The Washington Post further said, "Just why is the Frazier-Lemke farm-mortgage refinancing bill to be brought to a vote on May 11, of all days?"

The able and distinguished Speaker of this House has the respect, confidence, and warm affection of every Member of Congress. [Applause.] He has had nothing whatever to do with delaying the Sisson bill, or with setting the Frazier-Lemke bill. If the Post were possessed of even ordinary information, it would know that a bill released under the discharge rule takes its place on the calendar for the first discharge day thereafter, and May 11 happens to be the first discharge day after the said Frazier-Lemke bill went upon the discharge calendar and, under the rules of the House, it takes precedence over the Sisson bill and every bill on the calendar.

SISSON BILL IS NOT ON THE CALENDAR

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the posted Members of this House know that the Sisson bill has never yet been reported to this House and has never been on the calendar and is not now on the calendar. But the Washington Post did not know that.

WASHINGTON POST IS ADEPT IN TRICKERY

The only persons mentioned on the editorial page of the Washington Post as being connected with publishing it are "Eugene Meyer, publisher", and "Floyd R. Harrison, comptroller." This publisher is a past grand master in trickery. A few of us lately have found out all about how he got his millions, and I wish I had the time to give you the facts about it. I have already told you how he got the Washington Post. Only a few years ago when he was trying to buy it from Edward McLean he then offered $5,000,000 for it. But at that time Edward McLean was not helpless in an institution. A few years later David Lawrence executed a written contract agreeing to pay $3,000,000 for the Post. Certain manipulations prevented the sale. Then Mrs. Edward McLean offered $2,500,000 for it. Her offer was not accepted. Then Eugene Meyer, whose Post today prates about the Speaker engaging in trickery, entered into a conspiracy and collusion with parties in Washington who, through a paper company holding an account against the Post, brought an equity proceeding against it at a time when Edward McLean was afflicted, caused a receiver to be appointed, caused the Washington Post to be sold, and it was bought in by a dummy of Eugene Meyer's for $825,000, and Eugene Meyer immediately incorporated the property for $1,250,000, spent additional money on it in paying some debts and renovating it, and now renders the entire property, including intangibles of $218,456, for a total aggregate value of only $656,576, upon which he pays a total tax of only $7,663.08 per annum. Last year Eugene Meyer rendered seven automobiles for taxes—three Plymouth cars, one Witt-Will car, one Dodge car, one Chevrolet car, and one Ford, upon all of which he paid an aggregate tax of only $45.67, and for his annual registration and license tags he paid only $1 per car, or $7 for his seven cars; and because I complained about the Washington newspapers wanting Congress to contribute $5,700,000 of the people's money out of the United States Treasury to pay civic expenses here in Washington for Washington people, so that he could continue to get away with paying such a nominal tax, and because I wanted to keep communism out of the public schools, he has been paying a bunch of Bolshevik reporters to write and publish attacks upon me in his paper.

WASHINGTON POST COMPTROLLER

Mr. Eugene Meyer's comptroller for his Washington Post, Mr. Floyd R. Harrison, renders no real property for taxes, and renders no personal property for taxes, and does not pay one red cent in taxes to the District of Columbia, but he now has a mandamus suit pending against him to make him pay taxes, and because I insisted that he should pay taxes on his property, and not have the people of the States to contribute $5,700,000 for him and others here each year out of the Treasury, he and his boss cause me to be attacked regularly in the Washington Post.

ANSWERING IN THE DARK

I have heard what the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] has said here in his 22 minutes' speech, but I do not know what he is going to print in the RECORD as his extension of remarks, which he did not speak here on the floor; hence it will be impossible for me to answer all that he may put into the RECORD. I want the readers of this RECORD, wherever they may be, to determine which part of his printed remarks he spoke here where I could hear him, and which part he printed after Congress adjourned that I did not know about. I have heard of his contentions that he has made from time to time, hence I will attempt to answer some of them.

RECENT MARCH OF COMMUNISTS ON CAPITOL

Recently when a bunch of organized Communists marched on the Capitol, one of them was arrested and from his person a lot of papers were taken, and as my name was mentioned in one of them they were turned over to me. In one document it said, in substance, as I quote from memory only, that they were to stir up trouble, cause dissentions, and "concentrate against BLANTON, of Texas, as he was fighting communism, and was the Communists' worst enemy."

CONCENTRATE ON BLANTON

I will leave it to all of my colleagues here as to whether or not there later followed a communistic concentration against BLANTON, of Texas. But I was able to withstand it.

CAN WITHSTAND ALL SISSON BILL ATTACKS

I shall be able to withstand this attack the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] has made on me today. When readers of the RECORD analyze it, they will see that there was an attempt to injure me in my district. But it will not injure me. My constituents and I think alike on this question of keeping communism out of our public schools.

FIGHT FRAMED UP

In the Washington Times for April 20, 1936, under headlines, "Fight Mapped to Repeal 'Red Rider'", it was stated that there would be a conference between Mr. FRED SISSON, of New York; Mr. MAURY MAVERICK, of Texas; Mr. BYRON SCOTT, of California; and Mr. VITO MARCANTONIO, of New York; to "map out tactics they will employ" and that they would "devise plans by which they will be able to maneuver the Sisson bill through as rapidly as possible", and I have the right to presume that this speech against me today is a part of said "mapped-out tactics" and said "devised plans" and said "maneuvers."

EVEN CHICAGO PEOPLE HAVE HEARD ABOUT IT

Now, let us see what outsiders say about the bill of the gentleman from New York. He called our law to stop communism the "red rider." Here is the latest edition of a magazine that is gotten out by one of the greatest patriots in the Nation, Mr. Harry Jung, of Chicago.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute, please.

Mr. Jung has done more for American institutions in the United States than anybody else I know of except Francis Ralston Welsh, of Philadelphia.

This magazine says, "The Sisson bill is a 'sissy' bill." [Laughter.] He says it ought to be called the "sissy" bill, because it seeks to put communism back into the schools when by your unanimous vote, and the unanimous vote of the Senate, the Congress has voted to take it out.

TERM "SLIPPED IN" LAUGHABLE

I want to give you a history of how the so-called "red rider", which is the law that prevents communism from being indoctrinated in the public schools here, came to be passed by Congress.

Now, he says we have no evidence of communism. Why, way back yonder before he came to Congress—and all you who have been here know about it—there was a lady teacher in the Western High School, while teaching English, tried to indoctrinate her class with communism, and the Board of Education suspended her and the order is on the minutes of the School Board now. She was suspended from the Western High School for teaching communism.

Now, I am going to tell the gentleman from New York something. Did you know that 4 years after Dr. Ballou came to Washington one of our good former distinguished colleagues——

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not just now. I did not interrupt the gentleman; I sat patiently during his 22 minutes. Did you know that one of our former colleagues, a Republican, a splendid man, Dr. Summers, of the State of Washington, got up here on this floor on May 3, 1924, 4 years after Dr. Ballou took charge of the schools, and introduced and passed the first "red rider" against teaching communism? He said that the teachers in the Washington schools had been teaching there is no God, and that our Government was inferior to other governments. He said that the time had come to stop it, and without a vote against it he then passed the first "red rider", and it passed the Senate and was signed by the President and became law.

But to keep within the point of order he attached it as a limitation. That was on the statute books for a year. The next year he passed it again as a limitation in spite of all this hue and cry about "factual instruction" and "academic freedom"—that is the cry of the Communists and anarchists when you want to get rid of communistic teachings. "Academic freedom!"

Dr. Summers passed the first "red rider" on May 3, 1924, as I have stated and it was on the statute books for 2 next years. Then Dr. Ballou got his organization to work; they got it started. They demanded "academic freedom!"

Mr. LORD. Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LORD. We on this side should like to hear the gentleman. We can see that he is talking, but we on this side cannot hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. BLANTON. I always speak to the side where the audience is the largest. [Laughter.]

Now, just to show that the Washington Post cannot be depended upon, in an issue in April 1936 it says that Honolulu is 2,200 miles long. Why, one of our big 16-inch guns on one side of the island can shoot over the city of Honolulu and the entire island and knock a battleship out of water on the other side. Twenty-two hundred miles long!

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not just now. The Post says the city of Honolulu is 2,200 miles across it; is not that ridiculous? I quote from the Post:

It is 2,200 miles from one end of the city to the other. It takes about 4 hours to fly from Chicago to New York. To fly across Honolulu in this time you would have to travel more than 500 miles an hour.

The whole island of Oahu is only 29 miles across, and yet the Post talks about Honolulu being 2,200 miles long! You cannot believe a thing you see in that Washington Post.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am sorry I cannot. After that 1924 "red rider" and the 1925 "red rider" had expired, in 1928 there was a big investigation of the schools here about communism. I wish you would see what the Washington Star said about it—where they found three different organizations of students, communistic, in three schools trying to communize the student body—three different ones in 1928.

The gentleman asks, Who is against it? The American Legion of Washington sent its high officers before the committee that held hearings on his bill, where he was almost presiding, although he was not a member of it. He was himself conducting much of the hearings. They said, "We are against it." The American Legion is against it, and all sorts of fun was made of them. They had a crowd of pinks there to laugh the American Legion officials down every time they said anything against the "sissy" bill. In addition to that, General Fries, who had charge of our Chemical Warfare Service in France, a retired major general, who is at the head of the American Legion and also who represents a hundred different organizations in Washington, appeared there and said, "We don't want this 'red rider' repealed; we don't want this 'sissy' bill; we don't want communism back in the schools." George E. Sullivan, who was a representative of the Federation of Citizens Association—63 different organizations of citizens' associations—appeared there and testified against this "sissy" bill and said they did not want it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman means by referring to the "sissy" bill to call me a sissy, I object to his remarks, because I can take care of myself without wearing a sword or a visor.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have a right to call this the "sissy" bill. One of the greatest patriots in the United States has named it that—Mr. Harry Jung, of Chicago; and anything that Mr. Jung says about a bill being against the interest of the country, I believe. I have been following him for years on Americanism and Americanization matters.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I cannot yield. Let me tell you another thing. If you look on page 278 of this hearing on the "sissy" bill, you will see where the Communists of the District of Columbia were allowed by the chairman to express their antagonism against the "red rider", and their endorsement of the "sissy" bill. My God, has it come to pass that a committee of Congress will let Communists place their views in hearings on a bill being passed to repeal a law that stops communism in the schools?

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have only 15 minutes.

Mr. DEEN. Just one short question.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well, I yield.

Mr. DEEN. The gentleman stated that the chairman of the committee allowed Communists to place their views in the hearings. Who is the chairman?

Mr. BLANTON. He is the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY]. The chairman put that in, a statement from the Communists of the District of Columbia in favor of the "sissy" bill and against the "red rider." You will find it on page 278 of this hearing.

There was an appropriation of $78,000 that they asked for character education, and I showed that Dr. Ballou, who asked for that, for 5 years had been associating with Communists, Dr. Charles A. Beard, Dr. George S. Count, for 5 years, acting as secretary, and after spending $600,000 all they did was to bring out a book, Conclusions and Recommendations, and I made Dr. Ballou himself admit it was so communistic that he would not sign it. He would not sign it because he knew if he did sign it he would not hold his place in this public-school system 5 minutes; but he has put the book here in the schools; he has put that communistic book, Made in Russia, in the schools; he put this blackguarding, obscene, blasphemous book, The Boy and Girl Tramps of America, in these schools, and they have been read so much by the children that the back of one of them is worn off and it was put in the bindery.

I say to the gentleman that every member of our committee was unanimous in dropping this character education. Every member of our committee was unanimous, holding that communism has gotten a hold on these schools.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not want to ask any questions.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Every Member of Congress, before he takes his seat and before he can draw his money, is required to take a constitutional oath. What objection is there to requiring a teacher who is teaching or attempting to teach communism in the schools in the District of Columbia to take such an oath?

Mr. BLANTON. This hearing on the "sissy" bill says it interferes with their "academic freedom."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry. I have not the time. I want to answer the gentleman from Kentucky. I am going to give you the full history of the "red rider." I want you to get this, my colleagues. This "red rider" passed this House after being read at the Clerk's desk by unanimous vote. Where was the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] if he objected to it? Why did he not get up and call a quorum? Why did he not get up and make a point of order? Why did he not offer an amendment? Why did he not ask to speak against it? He was as silent as the grave. It passed the Senate by unanimous vote. His Senator and the chairman of that committee, every Senator who was in that conference understood what it was. After being read it was passed by unanimous vote. All this "red rider" does is to prevent teachers from indoctrinating. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] was correct when he said that the Corporation Counsel had given an opinion to the Board of Education that this law does not stop factual instruction. It only stops indoctrinating. He said that teaching and advocating meant indoctrinating.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. If I have time, just a minute. So long as the teachers do not indoctrinate, this law does not curtail them in any respect.

We told Dr. Ballou a half a dozen times that if he would instruct his teachers that they must obey that law as interpreted by Corporation Counsel Prettyman, we would have the Comptroller General withdraw the affidavits.

Dr. Ballou told me in my office he would not do it. Dr. Ballou told me, "I will never agree to have my 2,900 teachers restricted in any manner. I want them to be able to teach everything they please."

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now. Because he would not do that, the Comptroller General required these affidavits but in no way prevents proper factual instruction.

I believe that the membership of this House would express themselves again as they expressed themselves on that District bill, when on a roll call vote there were only 26 Members who voted against that bill. With 83 pages, it passed almost unanimously. I will agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] right now, that if he will get the Speaker to recognize him now, to take his bill up under suspension, although that bill is not reported and is not on the calendar, if the Speaker will recognize the gentleman right now to call it up under suspension of the rules, I am willing for the Speaker to recognize him right now, and we will snow that "sissy" bill under with such a big vote that you will never hear from it again. [Applause.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Let me finish one statement and then I will yield.

I have been preparing a speech for three weeks. I have been gathering information from the departments. I hope to print that speech, which I have permission to do, on Thursday or Friday. I want you to look for it in the Appendix. I want you to read the evidence I am going to present to you; evidence from the best people in Washington and from the best people in the Nation regarding this "sissy" bill. I will guarantee to you that those who love their country, those who love their schools, those who love their children, those who love posterity in the Nation, when they read that evidence, will never vote for this "sissy" bill. [Applause.]

HISTORY OF THE PRESENT RED RIDER

Mr. Speaker, so that the facts may never again be misrepresented to anybody by anybody, I am going to relate just how, when and where, the present law to stop indoctrinating communism came to be passed by this Congress. Every posted Member of this House knows that it was not slipped through. Every posted Member of the Senate knows that it was not slipped through. The old regulars, both in the House and Senate, who know what is going on all knew when it was passed, and why it was passed.

DISCOVERING WHO PUT COMMUNISM IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Our subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which frames the annual appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, upon the insistence of Superintendent Frank W. Ballou and Senator COPELAND, allowed in the 1934–35 bill the sum of $63,385 to install character education in the Washington schools. We assumed that it would be installed in all of the 175 different schools of the public-school system of Washington, and that the kind of character education that Superintendent Ballou had in mind would be the worth-while kind that would help to cultivate in the hearts and minds of the 99,000 Washington school children a greater respect for law and order, for our Constitution and institutions, honesty, truthfulness, kindness, regard for the rights and interests of others, loyalty, devotion, and patriotism to flag and country, sobriety, clean living, and abstention from vices and harmful practices. We never dreamed that Superintendent Ballou had an ulterior motive or that he intended to inculcate subversive doctrines. A year passed. That $63,385 was spent, and wasted.

Superintendent Ballou then demanded $87,540 for character education in the 1935–36 bill. Reputable teachers advised us it was a farce and that nothing worth while had been accomplished. We learned that there had been no attempt and there was no plan to attach it to but 10 schools, 5 white and 5 colored, wholly ignoring the other 165 public schools in Washington which embraced most of the school children in the District of Columbia. We learned that to guide it Dr. Frank W. Ballou had placed his said coworker and cocollaborator, Dr. W. W. Charters, in charge of it, notwithstanding the fact that Dr. W. W. Charters is a professor in the great Ohio State University, which at all times needs his undivided attention at Columbus, but Superintendent Ballou and his Washington Board of Education nevertheless employed Dr. Charters and allowed him to commute back and forth from Columbus, Ohio, to Washington, D. C., and paid him out of the appropriation made by Congress the sum of $50 per day and all traveling and subsistence expenses.

HOUSE STOOD OUT AGAINST FURTHER WASTE

We members of the House committee refused to allow Superintendent Ballou this additional $87,540 requested by him for so-called character education, and we refused to put it in the House bill last year, and on a proposal then vigorously made from the House floor to insert the $87,540 by way of an amendment, the House of Representatives voted down the amendment and refused to allow it.

BALLOU THEN CENTERED FORCES ON SENATE

Then Superintendent Ballou importuned the Thomas-Copeland subcommittee of the Senate to give him his $87,540, which, remember, was additional to the $63,385 the Thomas-Copeland subcommittee of the Senate had caused to be given Ballou the preceding year, and Senator COPELAND caused the appropriation for character education to be inserted in the bill as a Senate amendment. In the conference that ensued between the House and Senate the House conferees refused to agree to it. The conference became deadlocked and the Senate conferees held it up for many weeks. The House conferees were given to understand that unless they agreed to the Copeland amendment, allowing the appropriation for character education, there would be no bill, even though the conferees might agree on all of the other 113 amendments the said Senate subcommittee had placed on the House bill.

BALLOU SAID HIS CHARACTER EDUCATION WAS NOT TEACHING MORALS

Our committee knew that in his address in New York City on his Washington Experiment in Character Education, Dr. Ballou had said, "It is not teaching morals." We began to wonder just what it was teaching. In his testimony before our subcommittee (hearings, p. 477) Dr. Ballou testified: "What we are trying to do is to set up a new philosophy of education." And referring to his teachers who were teaching character education, Dr. Ballou said: "Whose philosophy has got to be changed fundamentally" (hearings, p. 482). Such a ridiculous assertion caused the following comment from the distinguished gentleman from Missouri:

Mr. CANNON. It seems to be a rather startling statement that the philosophy of all teachers engaged must be changed in order to introduce character training in the schools. I had supposed that the philosophy of every good teacher includes character training (p. 482).

Later the following question was asked and answered:

Mr. BLANTON. Do you mean, Doctor, that the philosophy of education of the 2,900 teachers of the Washington schools has to be changed fundamentally?

Dr. BALLOU. I mean exactly that.

TERM "CHARACTER EDUCATION" WHOLLY MISLEADING

Dr. Ballou well knew that if you were to ask 1,000 parents whether or not they would be in favor of "character education", or "character training", as he sometimes expresses it, all would say "yes" without hesitation, as they would all assume it would be the right kind. They would not assume that it meant "character debasement." They would assume that would inculcate honesty, truthfulness, kindness, patriotism, respect for law and order, clean living, and abstention from vices. They would not know that back in his mind undisclosed to them Dr. Ballou had no intention whatever of teaching these worthy traits of character, or that in his speech in New York he would admit that his "Ballou character education" was not teaching morals, he knowing at the time that his "new philosophy" system was teaching "immorals" and moral debasement.

DID NOT KNOW THEN WHAT WE KNOW NOW

At that time our committee had made no investigation of the matter, and never dreamed of the terrible situation that later we discovered exists in the Washington public schools. We House conferees were faced with the problem of adjusting 114 amendments the Senate had placed on the House bill. The only way the matter could be adjusted was for an agreement to be reached between the House and Senate conferees. It was necessary that the annual supply bill should be passed, for otherwise the District of Columbia would be without its $40,000,000 appropriations needed for the coming fiscal year. We House conferees were assured that the bill could not pass unless the House agreed to the Copeland amendment granting Dr. Ballou his second annual appropriation for his "character education."

COMPROMISE

Finally, in order to pass the District appropriation bill before Congress adjourned, the House conferees agreed that they would allow the appropriation for character education

if the Senate would agree to a provision that would prevent communism from being taught or advocated in the Washington schools, and the Senate conferees agreed to insert the following language:

Hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.

Which provision after being read by the Clerk on both the House floor and Senate floor on June 6, 1935, was agreed to unanimously by both House and Senate, and is now permanent law, and went into effect July 1, 1935.

CRITICISMS ABOUT PASSAGE OF "RED RIDER" UTTERLY RIDICULOUS

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 6, 1935, shows that Congressman CANNON of Missouri, in the House of Representatives, moved the adoption of the so-called "red rider", and that from the desk the Clerk of the House read it to the House, to wit:

Hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.

The above proposal was duly read by the Clerk in the open session of the House without a voice raised against it, and the RECORD shows it was adopted by a unanimous vote. If it did not suit the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON], then was his time to speak. Then was his chance. Then was his opportunity. Then was his duty to tell the House what objections he had to it. He then had an opportunity to speak against it. He could have made a privileged motion to concur in the Senate amendment without the above proviso, which would have had precedence over the Cannon motion. If there was not a quorum there he could have made the point of order and forced a quorum. If he had wanted to vote on the matter he could have called for it, and then could have called for a division, and then could have called for tellers; and, finally, he could have called for the yeas and nays. But he did nothing. He allowed it to pass unanimously. He cannot say that he was asleep and did not hear the Clerk read it. He cannot say he was not paying attention. He cannot say that he did not know what was going on in the House of Representatives. For in any of such contentions he would be admitting a failure of duty on his part for which no other Member was responsible.

There is no rule of the House that requires the leaders to report to all of the 435 Members everything they propose to take up in the House every day.

NOT "RED RIDER", BUT RIDER AGAINST "REDS"

This law was not for "reds." It was against "reds." It was to curb "reds." It was to keep them out of schoolrooms. It was to keep their subtle, poisonous influence away from children.

LIKEWISE PASSED IN SENATE UNANIMOUSLY

On June 6, 1935, this law to stop communism in schools, called by communistic sympathizers the "red rider", was read at the clerk's desk in the Senate and passed by unanimous vote of the Senate.

MANAGERS OF BOTH HOUSE AND SENATE UNDERSTOOD

During the conference, in the presence of the managers of the Senate and the managers of the House, I dictated the wording of the provision to our clerk of our House subcommittee, and he prepared this so-called "red rider", and it was presented to the conferees in conference and agreed upon by them, and then it was presented to the House by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], and read by the Clerk, and passed, and was presented to the Senate by Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma, and read by the clerk at the desk of the Senate, and passed by the Senate, and personally I did not have one thing to with actually drawing it up or handling it, as it was handled by Chairman CANNON and by Senator THOMAS. Hence all this claim by the gentleman from New York about it being "slipped in" is so utterly ridiculous, that it is absurd. It was law on June 10, 1935. It has been law ever since. If it were so terrible, why did not the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] make one move to stop it? He surely cannot plead that he is absolutely impotent. He surely cannot plead that he was asleep.

Mr. Speaker, it was mentioned by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] that the hearings on the requested appropriation for character education and the incidental question of communism, conducted by me as acting chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, embraced 268 printed pages. He failed to mention to you that the hearings conducted on the "Sissy" bill embraces 283 printed pages. After holding the hearings I conducted, all members of our subcommittee voted unanimously not to allow the $78,660 for so-called character education, as we reached the unanimous opinion that it was being used subversively to propagate communism in the schools, and we saved this $78,660 by not putting it into the bill, and the Committee on Appropriations, with its 39 members, approved our action, our bill being favorably reported without a vote against it; and, after 3 days' debate, our bill was passed by the House by record vote, with only 26 Members of the House voting against it. Our 268 printed pages accomplished something by saving $78,660 in money, and also keeping communism out of our public schools. The gentleman's 283 pages of printed hearings have accomplished nothing. Instead of furnishing proper support for the "sissy" bill that seeks to repeal the law that prevents teachers from indoctrinating communism, the great weight and preponderance of the evidence offered at such hearing was against the "sissy" bill, and in favor of the present law that stop communism, which he calls the red rider.

EVIDENCE WORTH READING

I want my colleagues to get the said 283 pages of hearings the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] caused to be printed and read the evidence of Mr. George E. Sullivan, beginning on page 104, he appearing for 63 different citizens' associations of the District of Columbia, and the evidence of Gen. Amos A. Fries, president of the District of Columbia Public School Association, commencing on page 154, the evidence of Mr. E. Brooke Fetty, of the American Legion, commencing on page 171, the evidence of Mrs. Margaret Hopkins Worrell, president of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association and legislative chairman for the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, commencing on page 194, the evidence of Mr. Frank L. Peckham, chairman of the committee on public Schools department of the American Legion, commencing on page 199, and the evidence of our colleague from Indiana, Hon. VIRGINIA E. JENCKES, commencing on page 203, and I believe that you will conclude beyond doubt that if ever star-chamber proceedings were carried on, where witnesses were browbeaten and made fun of because they opposed communism in schools, you will find it there; yet you will find convincing evidence for not disturbing this law that prevents communism and for being against the "sissy" bill.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

TEACHERS AND CONGRESSMEN BOTH TAKE OATHS; WHY REQUIRE EXTRA ONES OF TEACHERS?

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that the school teachers of the District of Columbia swore to an oath of allegiance just like we who are Congressmen. Then every 2 weeks or a month, with the janitors and the substitute teachers, they have to creep in and take another oath to get their pay.

It is just the same as if the law should require Congressmen, after taking an oath of allegiance to the Constitution, to come in every 2 weeks or every month thereafter and swear all over again that they had not committed treason or immorality or had not taught or advocated it. In effect, it is like swearing to something, then constantly swearing over and over again that you have not lied or committed perjury. The teachers take an oath of allegiance just like we do; but thereafter by law we force them to swear to it over again every 2 weeks or every month.

Is there a Congressman who, having taken the oath of allegiance, would permit himself to have his honesty and patriotism constantly questioned, and then be required to take oaths swearing he had not in effect violated his oath for the past 2 weeks or a month in order to get his pay check? I do not believe there is a one.

This extra "oath" is nothing but a humiliation, and we should not impugn the integrity and patriotism of our school teachers any more than we should that of ourselves. These teachers have self-respect, and we should support it as we do our own. Let us repeal this unfair and brutal law. It is unnecessary and useless, anyhow.

NO PARALLEL TO "RED RIDER" EXISTS IN ALL HISTORY

Mr. Speaker, I have had various associations, number of teachers and professors, the Congressional Library research staff look through history and law books representing thousands of years. They have, it is true, found brutality, hatred, malice, and the requirement of curious and unusual oaths. But no one has found in all history, past or present, where a government has required an oath and then oath after oath that one has kept an oath. No parallel to "red rider", even in nations where liberty does not exist or in the most benighted nations on earth, can be found.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF PRATTVILLE, ALA.

The Clerk called the first business on the Consent Calendar, House Joint Resolution 241, to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Prattville, Ala.

The SPEAKER. This joint resolution requires three objections. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. TABER, Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, and Mr. RICH objected.

PACIFIC OCEAN FISHERIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3013, to provide for the construction and operation of a vessel for use in research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. TABER, Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, and Mr. RICH objected.

CONSENT CALENDAR

PACIFIC OCEAN FISHERIES

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I was seeking recognition to ask unanimous consent that the bill which was just objected to be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that the bill just objected to, H. R. 3013, be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

PERRY'S VICTORY AND INTERNATIONAL PEACE MEMORIAL, PUT IN BAY, OHIO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8474, to provide for the creation of the Perry's Victory and International Peace Memorial National Monument on Put in Bay, South Bass Island, in the State of Ohio, and for other purposes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, has this bill been approved by the general advisory board on parks in accordance with the law passed last year?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I understand the monument has been erected and that now it is just a question of continuing it and maintaining it at practically no cost to the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish by proclamation the following-described Government lands, together with the Perry's Victory Memorial proper, its approaches, retaining walls, and all buildings, structures, and other property thereon, situated in Put in Bay Township, South Bass Island, Ottawa County, Lake Erie, State of Ohio, as the "Perry's Victory and International Peace Memorial National Monument", for the preservation of the historical associations connected therewith, to inculcate the lessons of international peace by arbitration and disarmament, and for the benefit and enjoyment of the people:

Commencing at the intersection of the middle line of Delaware Avenue and Chapman Avenue, in the village of Put in Bay, and running thence south 88°59′ east in the middle line of said Delaware Avenue, and the same extended; 495 feet to Lake Erie; thence north 49°59′ east along said lake shore 346 feet; thence north 43°14′ east along said lake shore 212 feet; thence north 53°13′ east four 400 feet along said lake shore; thence north 46° 6′ west about 730 feet to Lake Erie; thence southwesterly and westerly along said lake shore to the middle line, extended, of said Chapman Avenue; thence south 1°30′ west along said middle line, and the same extended, about 520 feet to the place of beginning, and containing 14.25 acres of land and known as a part of lots nos. 1 and 2, range south of county road, and a part of lot no. 12, East Point, in South Bass Island, in the township of Put in Bay, county of Ottawa, State of Ohio.

SEC. 2. That the administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national monument shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

SEC. 3. After the said national monument has been established as provided in section 1 hereof, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land, buildings, structures, and other property as may be donated for the extension and improvement of the said national monument, and donations of funds for the purchase and maintenance thereof, the title, and evidence of title to lands acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That he may acquire on behalf of the United States out of any donated funds by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise, by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land within the said national monument as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

SEC. 4. The members of the Perry's Victory Memorial Commission created by act of Congress March 3, 1919, having by their patriotic and active interest faithfully conserved for posterity this important historical area and objects shall hereafter act as a board of advisers, and with such other powers as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, in the maintenance of such national monument and shall consist of the present surviving and active members of the Commission provided for in said act, namely, on the part of the United States, John A. Johnston and Hugh Rodman, and on the part of the several States: Ohio, Webster P. Huntington, Carl B. Johannsen, and A. V. Donahey; Pennsylvania, Milton W. Shreve, Thomas C. Jones, and George M. Mason; Michigan, James E. Degan; Illinois, Chesley R. Perry, William Hale Thompson, and Richard B. Folsom; Wisconsin, Charles B. Perry, A. W. Sanborn, and S. W. Randolph; New York, Charles H. Wiltsie and Jacob Schifferdecker; Rhode Island, Harry E. Davis; Kentucky, Samuel M. Wilson, W. J. Moore, and Robert H. Winn: Provided, That as vacancies occur in the Commission on the part of the United States, they shall remain unfilled until only one Commissioner of the United States remains; thereafter there shall be only one Commissioner of the United States: Provided further, That as vacancies occur in the Commission on the part of the several States, they shall remain unfilled until only one Commissioner from each State remains; thereafter there shall be only one Commissioner from each State. After the membership of the Commission has been reduced in accordance with the provisions of this act, vacancies shall be filled in the manner set forth in the act of March 3, 1919. The members of the Commission shall receive no compensation, but shall be paid their reasonable expenses as provided for in the Standard Government Travel Regulations as amended while in attendance at meetings of the Commission upon call of the Secretary of the Interior, and necessary secretarial expenses, such as stenographers' fees, postage, stationery, and printing, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. Employees of the Perry's Victory Memorial Commission at the time of the enactment of this legislation may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be employed by the National Park Service in the administration, protection, and development of said national monument, without regard to civil-service laws and requirements or restrictions of law governing the employment and compensation of employees of the United States.

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall be held to deprive the State of Ohio, or any political subdivision thereof, of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over the area included in such national monument, nor shall this act in any way impair or affect the rights of citizenship of any resident therein; and, save and except as the consent of the State of Ohio may be hereafter given, the legislative authority of said State in and over all areas included in such national monument shall not be diminished or affected by the creation of such national monument nor by any terms or provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1919 (40 Stat. 1322–1324), and acts supplemental thereof and amendatory thereto and all other acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 16, strike out "Richard B. Folson" and insert "Richard S. Folsom."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11072, authorizing the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. TABER, and Mr. HOLMES objected.

BLUE RIDGE PARKWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10922, to provide for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Parkway, in the States of Virginia and North Carolina, by the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER, Mr. HOLMES, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. RICH objected.

AMENDMENT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8293, to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill has been on the calendar a number of times. It was once recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary for the purpose of eliminating the limitation of $7,500 in case of death or total disability. It is an unfair limitation. If the Judiciary Committee is willing to accept the amendment, I shall not object. Otherwise I shall object.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The member of the committee who has special charge of this bill I do not find on the floor at the moment. I would not feel authorized to agree to the amendment. Why not let the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I may say to the gentleman from Texas there has been a tremendous demand for this bill on the part of labor. I am a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. I can see no real added cost to industry if we adopted the amendment. No State in the Union has this kind of limitation of $7,500. I say to the Members of the House that we would be doing a very fine thing if we struck out that limitation.

Mr. BLAND. That provision was in the bill when it was formerly presented. Then it was taken out by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is not exactly correct. At the last session the Judiciary Committee reported the bill without the limitation, and in this session they reported the bill with the limitation.

Mr. BLAND. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why, we do not know at the moment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

MONUMENT TO THE MEMORY OF GOUVERNEUR MORRIS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11854, to provide for the erection of a monument to the memory of Gouverneur Morris.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. TABER, and Mr. DIRKSEN objected.

PERMANENT MEMORIAL TO THOMAS JEFFERSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12027, to authorize the execution of plans for a permanent memorial to Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make an explanation.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. This bill was introduced at the request of a joint legislative committee appointed by both Houses numbering in its membership also three members appointed by the President.

The bill merely asks for an authorization. It is not the intention of this special committee to ask for a dollar of appropriations from the present Congress. All we ask is an authorization, and I am sure the gentleman, student of history that he is, versed in the affairs of our country, having read the Declaration of Independence and having a knowledge of the work of Jefferson, surely would not object to a mere authorization.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentleman that, being a student of history, I know that an authorization is the forerunner of the appropriation to come afterwards.

Mr. BOYLAN. I assure the gentleman that no appropriation will be asked in this Congress.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But it will be at some future time.

Mr. BOYLAN. There is no question about that, but whether or not the gentleman and myself will be Members of that Congress is an unknown question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think we are making a great contribution to the welfare of the country in the future, if we are not here, by objecting at this time and saving somebody else the trouble.

Mr. BOYLAN. Surely the gentleman would not have any legitimate reason to object. I would be glad to answer any qualm of conscience that might rest on the soul of the gentleman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentleman that I have no qualm of conscience. I hope I can contribute my little bit by preventing the reaching into the Treasury for money to build a lot of memorials that are unnecessary when there are millions of our people in need and distress.

Mr. BOYLAN. We understand that. The gentleman also knows that if Thomas Jefferson himself were here he would not want this memorial, but surely the gentleman as a student of history and as a member of the bar has read something about the legislative and administrative work as well as the many precedents he established during his years of service.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentleman that living memorials which accomplish some useful and worthwhile purpose are much better than marble memorials; therefore I renew the objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Memorials have been erected to the memory of men of the gentleman's party.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

AUTHORITY OF KLAMATH INDIANS TO SUBMIT CLAIMS TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10001, to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes", approved May 26, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much is that going to cost?

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, this bill would give the Klamath Indians the right to go back to the Court of Claims and present their claim for loss by reason of the Government taking their timberland. Sixteen years ago my predecessor introduced a bill which gave the Klamath Indians the right to go into the Court of Claims. They did this, and the Court of Claims found that 87,000 acres of fine timberland had been taken from these Indians by the Government and given to a wagon-road company, then transferred to a timber company. This timberland was practically taken from the Indians for nothing. The timber company, the ultimate beneficiary, paid less than 4 percent of the value of the lands, as found by the Court of Claims. At the time it was taken from the Indians it was worth $2,980,000. The court also found that the Indians had received $1,978,431 in gratuities from the Government, which should be credited on the amount due from the Government.

This case went to the Supreme Court on certiorari, and the Supreme Court confirmed the findings of the Court of Claims, but held there was not sufficient power in the jurisdictional act to give the Indians relief.

When the land was first taken the Interior Department asked the Indian tribe to accept the settlement, which acceptance was secured by the usual method of those days. A bare majority of the Indians signed a request asking that the grant be confirmed for the sum of $108,750, which was less than 4 percent of its value as found by the Court of Claims.

I introduced this bill early in the session. It went to the Attorney General, as well as to the Secretary of the Interior and the Budget. The Attorney General suggested certain amendments, and these are all contained in the recommendation as made by the Secretary of the Interior and are now included in the bill.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is this not the same bill about which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] placed in the RECORD a letter he received from the Comptroller General last week when he objected to the bill?

Mr. PIERCE. This is the same bill to which the gentleman objected, but, nevertheless, the Comptroller General has written another letter to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], and I am sorry the gentleman is not present to present it. The Comptroller General gave in this letter a revised version of the bill. The Comptroller General has again gone over it. The justification for the bill was the taking of this valuable tract of land at less than 4 percent of its value.

Mr. RICH. Does the Comptroller General make the statement in the letter that he approves this bill?

Mr. PIERCE. No; he does not approve it, because it is not his business to approve. A very good reason for the Congress to pass this bill is the unconscionable act of taking this timberland for less than 4 percent of its value. That is why the bill was introduced 16 years ago.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to my colleague from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I trust none of the gentlemen who have been in the habit of objecting to these Indian bills will object to this one. This land is not located in my district, but it is in the State of Oregon, and I am very familiar with the situation. I know those Indians down there in the Klamath Reservation have been robbed continuously and have not secured a square deal from the Government or these timber owners. All they are asking now is to go into the Court of Claims and have this thing definitely settled once and for all. This is a meritorius bill, and I do not think there should be any objection to it.

Mr. PIERCE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. EKWALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. EKWALL. May I say that I am also familiar with the Indian situation in Oregon. While this particular Indian tribe is located in the district of my colleague [Mr. PIERCE], I know it to be a fact that these Indians have been treated very badly in the past. It seems to me, therefore, that none of us should object to their going to the Court of Claims, and if they have a legitimate claim let that fact be established. If they have not a legitimate claim, I think we can depend on the Court of Claims to turn them down. Mr. Speaker, I hope no objection will be made to this bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. How much money is involved?

Mr. PIERCE. A little less than $1,000,000 if their claim is allowed in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3797 be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the Senate bill identical with the House bill?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; the House bill is identical with Senator STEIWER's bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the suit numbered E–346 heretofore instituted in the Court of Claims by the Klamath and Modoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians under an act entitled "An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes", approved May 26, 1920, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court, and it is hereby authorized and directed, irrespective of any release or settlement, to reinstate and retry said case and to hear and determine the claims of the plaintiffs on the merits, and to enter judgment thereon upon the present pleadings, evidence, and findings of fact, with the right of appeal, rather than by certiorari, to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party: Provided, That any payment heretofore made to the said Indians by the United States in connection with any release or settlement shall be charged as an offset, but shall not be treated as an estoppel.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 10001) was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION OF DIRECTOR OF FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11616, to fix the compensation of the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected to this bill 2 weeks ago, but upon investigation I believe it to be a very meritorious measure. It is a bill that is certainly a tribute to the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the signal and valuable services he and his Bureau have performed for this Nation. I believe the bill should be passed as a tribute to his work.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, effective on the first day of the first month next following the approval of this act, the compensation of the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice shall be $10,000 per annum.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUOR IN ARMY POST EXCHANGES, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11300, to provide that the sale of or dealing in beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor in Army post exchanges and military establishments shall be subject to regulation by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

IRRIGATION LANDS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1318, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and adjust irrigation charges on irrigation lands within projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes.

Mr. TABER, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. McLEAN reserved the right to object.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, this bill applies to a small number of people who purchased lands under Indian irrigation projects, and in some instances these charges represent obligations that accrued at the time they were owned by the Indian allottees or their assigns, and they did not know when they bought them that there was any fixed lien against them. For this reason the Secretary of the Interior, in view of the existing situation, has made the suggestion that they should be protected by having this bill passed in order that these cases may be investigated just the same as the Fact Finders Act investigated other reclamation charges back in 1924, and have a report made as to which ones should be canceled or adjusted.

Also, there are a good many portions of this land that have been in such position that they have seeped and will not have the charges paid on them, or any part of them, unless there is some adjustment made.

This bill was introduced by the senior Senator from Wyoming to take care of these particular objections, and I think it is a very meritorious bill because these people have bought something really under false pretenses from the Government and should be protected or should have these charges adjusted.

Mr. TABER. Is not this just another case where the usual way is being followed of getting out of the payment of charges on these irrigation projects?

Mr. GREEVER. No; I may say to the gentleman from New York that is not the case. I know a great many of these people myself and I know they are people who pay their bills, and I know they bought these lands under a misapprehension in many cases, and I know the lands in some instances have been seeped to such an extent that they cannot farm them properly, and the charges will not be paid unless there is an adjustment.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, there is nothing in this bill to require any further action than an investigation, and nothing could be done about the matter until authorized by the Congress.

Mr. TABER. No; the language is to investigate and adjust the irrigation project.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. This is for an investigation.

Mr. TABER. No; an investigation and adjustment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER, Mr. McLEAN, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

UNITED STATES TRAVEL COMMISSION

The Clerk called the bill (S. 33) to encourage travel to and within the United States by citizens of foreign countries, and for other purposes.

Mr. RICH, Mr. McLEAN, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

MEMORIAL TO OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE U. S. S. "TULIP"

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3450) authorizing an appropriation for the erection of a memorial to the officers and men of the United States Navy who lost their lives as the result of a boiler explosion that totally destroyed the U. S. S. Tulip near St. Inigoes Bay, Md., on November 11, 1864, and for other purposes.

Mr. TABER, Mr. CLARK of North Carolina, and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

COMMEMORATION OF THE BATTLE OF EUTAW SPRINGS, S. C.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 255) to provide for the commemoration of the Battle of Eutaw Springs, in the State of South Carolina.

Mr. RICH, Mr. TABER, and Mr. DIRKSEN objected.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 525, to enable the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if the bill gives authority to get the people of this country to support the Constitution of the United States? If it does it would be a mighty fine thing.

Mr. BLOOM. I promise the gentleman that. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. That is one of the greatest needs that we have.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. McLEAN objected.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2137) to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the eastern, northern, and western districts of Oklahoma.

Mr. TABER, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. RICH objected.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlemen will withhold their objections I would like to make an inquiry. I heard something said about omnibus bills for the appointment of judges.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Perhaps it is well to say something about the attitude of the objectors. I speak only for myself and not for the official objectors on the Democratic side. There has been a practice grown up in the House of transferring to the Consent Calendar almost all legislation which comes out of the committees and which the Rules Committees will not grant rules upon or where rules have not been asked for by the committees.

That has been occasioned by our practice of dispensing with business in order on Calendar Wednesday. If the Members of the House will read this calendar as carefully as the official objectors read it, the Members will come to only one conclusion and that is that just about two-thirds of the bills on the calendar should never be there or passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. DISNEY. Of course, the gentleman is not referring to this particular bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No. I think there may be less merit in my objection to this particular bill than in my objections to others, but I have said before, with respect to these judgeship bills, that all of a sudden it seems necessary to create about eight Federal judgeships in the United States. If there is a condition in the United States which necessitates six or eight additional judgeships, surely that is a condition which deserves consideration by the entire body of this House, and it should not be necessary to have to consider a matter of that importance in the limited time available in the consideration of the Consent Calendar. Some of our objections seem to be somewhat personal. We never object for personal reasons. We never object unless we think there is merit in our objection, and I hope it will never be said of me or of the other official objectors on either side, that we objected to any bill because of the personality behind the bill. But I may say to the gentleman and to all of the Members of the House that we are put in the peculiar position of having to safeguard the people of the United States and the integrity of this Congress against the passage of tremendously important legislation by unanimous consent. For that reason we have been forced to object to a great many bills in which there may be a great deal of merit.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman does not object to this bill on its merits? He agrees that this bill is a meritorious bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I see less merit in my objection to this bill than, perhaps, to some of the others that I have objected to, but the whole question is of such importance to the people of the United States that it should be brought out on the floor and discussed. Whether that should be done under suspension of the rules, whether it should be done by a rule on this particular bill or by a rule on an omnibus bill—although I am not in favor of omnibus bills particularly—I do not undertake to say, but in some way, time and consideration should be given to this condition which necessitates the appointment, according to the Judiciary Committee, of some eight new district judgeships. For that reason I must object to the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Would the gentleman agree to let the bill go over without prejudice?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Then I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary what thought has been given to bringing in a general bill by his committee with respect to judgeships throughout the country?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think the committee will consider that right away.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. This matter of judgeships is a serious one. It is easy enough to come on the floor and suggest an omnibus judgeship bill. As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary I have always opposed omnibus judgeship bills, because an omnibus bill is the very place where logrolling is done. We have never had an omnibus judgeship bill under consideration here and never will have one that does not include judgeships that should not be included. The bill is formulated, and the judgeships are put in, and then two or three others are included that should not be there, and by that process the votes of delegations from two or three different States are obtained.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I said I did not care how it was brought out, whether by an omnibus bill or under a rule.

Mr. MICHENER. If we want a lot of extra judges, who ought not to be appointed, let us have an omnibus bill, and we will get them.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman will admit that this bill is a meritorious bill. It has been recommended by the Judicial Council.

Mr. MICHENER. This bill qualifies under that.

Mr. DISNEY. Can the gentleman not prevail on gentlemen on his side to let the bill go through? It merely provides for an additional judge.

Mr. MICHENER. But the gentleman should remember this, that Members on this side of the aisle have not yet reached the point where they will give way any views they have just because someone asks them to do it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman will not object to letting the bill go over without prejudice?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EMPLOYMENT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3781) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code, and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with respect to counsel in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

VALIDATING PAYMENTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS OF THE ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3687, to validate payments, and to relieve the accounts of disbursing officers of the Army on account of payments made to Reserve officers on active duty for rental allowances.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all payments made to military personnel of the Army on account of rental allowances, where the Secretary of War, under the authority of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1069; U. S. C., title 10, sec. 718), has determined that no quarters are available for such personnel, are hereby ratified and validated, and the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby directed to credit the accounts of disbursing officers of the United States with such payments, and to accept as final and conclusive in the audit of such accounts the determinations made by the Secretary of War under that act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VALIDATING PAYMENTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS TO RESERVE OFFICERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3688, to validate payments, and to relieve disbursing officers' accounts of payments made to Reserve officers promoted while on active duty.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That payments made by Army disbursing officers to Reserve officers of the Army of increased pay and allowances on account of promotion while on active duty are hereby ratified and validated, notwithstanding any construction of the Comptroller General of the provisions of section 201 of the Economy Act of June 30, 1932, as contained by section 4a, act of March 3, 1933, and section 4a, title 2, act of March 20, 1933, and the Comptroller General shall allow credit in the accounts of said disbursing officers for payments so made if otherwise correct.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR DISTRICT COURT OF UNITED STATES FOR KENTUCKY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3344, to appoint one additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern and Western Districts of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a meritorious bill. Kentucky has but two judges. All the States adjacent to Kentucky, with comparable business, have three judges. The people of Kentucky would like to have this one additional judgeship created. The bar association has endorsed it. I believe it would furnish much-needed relief. It has been said that "justice delayed is justice denied." That is what is happening to the litigants in Kentucky.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Does this provide for one additional judge for the eastern district and one for the western district of Kentucky?

Mr. SPENCE. No. It provides one additional judge and none of the machinery for the judgeship. For instance, no additional clerks or marshals. It is simply one judge to aid both districts in the performance of their duties.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. MAY. It is what they call a judge at large or sometimes called a floating judge. It does not increase expenses other than the salary of the additional judge.

Mr. SPENCE. That system has been adopted in many other States and it has been found successful.

Mr. DONDERO. One judge to be shifted about at large throughout the State of Kentucky?

Mr. SPENCE. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ENLARGEMENT OF GOVERNORS ISLAND, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12009, to authorize the enlargement of Governors Island and consenting to the use of a portion thereof as a landing field for the city of New York and its environs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the author of this bill and myself have agreed upon an amendment to the bill, which is agreeable to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Are there further objections?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is one of those cases where a bill of highly controversial nature is on this calendar and should not be passed by unanimous consent. For that reason I object.

Mr. FADDIS. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, before the objection stage I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which the gentleman from Pennsylvania will propose be reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Proposed amendment to be offered by Mr. FADDIS: Page 2, line 3, strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following:

"Provided, That no portion of said Governors Island shall be made available by the Secretary of War that is needed for military purposes or for use by Army troops stationed on the island."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KENNEY, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. GIFFORD objected.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR MILITARY PURPOSES IN CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8050, to authorize the acquisition of land for military purposes in San Bernardino and Kern Counties, Calif., and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, all privately owned land and rights within the boundaries of the area in San Bernardino and Kern Counties, Calif., reserved and set aside for the use of the War Department as a bombing and gunnery range by Executive Order No. 6588, dated February 6, 1934, and the sum of $130,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 2. That the land to be acquired hereunder upon acquisition shall, together with the public lands so reserved, be used for and developed as a bombing and gunnery range, aviation field, and other military purposes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PORT NEWARK ARMY SUPPLY BASE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9042, to provide for the sale of the Port Newark Army Supply Base to the city of Newark, N. J.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell the Port Newark Army Supply Base, Newark, N. J., to the city of Newark, N. J., for the sum of $1,000,000, the sum of $100,000 to be paid when the city receives title and possession of property, the balance to be paid at the rate of $100,000 per annum, with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum on the unpaid portion, with permission to the city of Newark to anticipate payment of the unpaid balance at any time. The city of Newark to maintain the channel, which is the means of ingress and egress to the Port Newark Army Supply Base and embraces the entire port of Newark, to a depth of 30 feet from the Newark Bay to all pierheads.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including line 10 on page —, and also on page 2, strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive, and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell the Port Newark Army Supply Base, Newark, N. J., to the city of Newark, N. J., for the sum of $2,000,000, the sum of $100,000 to be paid when the city receives possession of the property, the balance to be paid at the rate of $100,000 per annum until paid in full, with permission to the city of Newark to anticipate the payment of the unpaid balance at any time: Provided, That title to the property shall pass to the city of Newark and a quitclaim deed be delivered by the Secretary of War only after receipt by him of the final payment: Provided further, That the city of Newark shall maintain the channel, which is the means of ingress and egress to the Port Newark Army Supply Base and embraces the entire port of Newark to a depth of 30 feet from the Newark Bay to all pierheads.

"SEC. 2. In the event of war or a national emergency declared by the Congress to exist, the Secretary of War shall have the right to take over from the city of Newark the said Port Newark Army Supply Base and shall pay as liquidated damages to the said city for the said taking of a sum equal to 3 percent per annum on the amount theretofore paid on the purchase price of the said property by the said city during each year or part thereof the said property is occupied under such taking by the United States, the said property to be returned to the city of Newark upon the expiration of such war or national emergency.

"SEC. 3. If the city of Newark shall not elect to acquire said property as provided in section 1 of this act on or before July 1, 1936, by payment of first $100,000, the authority granted to the Secretary of War under said section 1 shall cease and terminate.

"SEC. 4. In the event that the city of Newark, N. J., shall not elect to acquire said property under the provisions of this act on or before July 1, 1936, then the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to advertise said property for sale in journals or newspapers having wide and general circulation in the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, and shall continue to advertise the same weekly for the full period of 8 weeks, which said advertisement shall designate a time not less than 90 days subsequent to July 1, 1936, at which said property shall be offered for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, said sale to be conducted at outcry by some officer of the United States Army, or by some noncommissioned officer, upon the said property itself, to wit: The Port Newark Army Supply Base in the city of Newark, N. J., and said property shall be sold for cash to the highest bidder at the same time: Provided, That no bid for less than $2,000,000 shall be accepted unless the person declared to be the highest bidder at said auction sale shall pay to the Secretary of War, or to his lawfully authorized agent, at said time and place of sale, the sum of $100,000, either in cash or by duly certified check upon a responsible bank, and such sale shall not be confirmed until 30 days after the date of the auction, during which 30 days the Secretary of War shall receive such evidence as may be submitted to him by any citizen of the United States to the effect that said sale was not fair, for any reason, whether by reason of an agreement among prospective bidders to chill the bidding or to restrict the bidding to one or more irresponsible bidders, or for any other reason whatsoever that to the Secretary of War may seem fair and just in order to protect the interests of the United States Government, and if the Secretary of War shall be satisfied by reason of any showing that may be made to him that said sale was unfair, or the price at which the same was awarded to the highest bidder was unreasonably low, or that bids were chilled, or for any other reason that may appear to the Secretary of War as fair and reasonable in order to protect the interest of the United States, then, in such case, he may declare such bidding to be null and void, and reject any and all bids and shall refuse to confirm the attempted sale by auction and shall return to the bidder the said $100,000 or the $100,000 certified check, as the case may be, and shall thereafter readvertise said property for sale, under the same terms and conditions, at such subsequent time and place as shall comply with the provisions of this act, and the said Secretary of War shall continue from time to time to readvertise and to reoffer for sale said Port Newark Army Supply Base until a bidder shall be found whose bid is fair and reasonable in amount, free from any influence that may taint the same and render it unfair and unjust to the United States Government, and upon final compliance with all provisions of this act the Secretary of War shall then be authorized to execute, deliver, and convey by quitclaim deed the title of the United States Government to such purchaser, upon payment of the full purchase money as the same shall be ascertained by said public auction sale.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the objection I have—and I think it is an objection each Member of the House has—is that none of us has had an opportunity to know anything about this amendment. It is a long amendment, and the author of the bill, as I understand, moves to strike out the bill, leaving only the enacting clause, and substitutes a new bill. Is that right?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman is not correct. The amendment just read is a committee amendment, authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs in order more fully to safeguard the interests of the Government.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Is this proposed amendment in the committee report?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman from New Jersey made the report on the bill, and the committee reported the amendment. It is printed in the bill. We struck out everything after the enacting clause and inserted in lieu thereof the committee amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Then this really is a committee amendment.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes; and is printed in the committee report.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HARTLEY. Is it not a fact that the committee amendment strengthens the Government's position?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. That is the purpose, to safeguard and strengthen the Government's interest.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. This situation developed at the Port of Newark Army Base as a result of an investigation made by the Committee on Military Affairs, that the Government was losing considerable money by reason of a lease which had been entered into with some private interests. This lease expires in November and the War Department is anxious to make some disposition of this property so the Government will receive some income from it. The city of Newark offered the Government $1,000,000 for its interest in the property. The Committee on Military Affairs after considerable investigation and consideration, and upon the recommendation of the War Department, which communications appear in the report, revised the bill to provide a price of $2,000,000 instead of the $1,000,000 offered by the city of Newark, and added certain provisions as to the terms upon which the amount should be paid, in monthly installments covering a period of 20 years, and that is what makes the committee amendment so long.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I misunderstood the parliamentary situation. I understood that the author of the bill was offering an amendment instead of calling attention to the committee amendment already offered.

Mr. McLEAN. No; this is the committee amendment.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield, but I am fully satisfied.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The author of the bill, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] did propose to offer an amendment; but we said to the gentleman from New Jersey that we of the Military Affairs Committee who were present on the floor would oppose the bill if he offered it, and the gentleman from New Jersey said he would not offer his amendment. The only amendment that has been offered, therefore, is the committee amendment to strengthen the bill safeguarding the Government's interest.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, there are extensive hearings on the bill and a long report from the committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL IN CERTAIN CASES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11615, limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10312, to amend section 40 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this creates two additional judgeships. I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL CELEBRATION OF THE BIRTH OF CHARLES CARROLL

The Clerk called the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) making provision for a national celebration of the bicentenary of the birth of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, wealthiest signer of the Declaration of Independence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is a joint resolution making provision for a national celebration for the bicentenary of the birth of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, wealthiest signer of the Declaration of Independence. Why should the birth of the wealthiest signer be observed any more than the birth of the poorest signer? Frankly, I cannot understand the logic of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will yield, I think it would be much more appropriate if we struck out the word "wealthiest" and inserted the words "last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence." That might mean something.

Mr. TABER. Does he still survive?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; he is dead, but he was the last survivor.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXAMINATION AND SURVEY OF THE SAN JUAN RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3488, to provide for an examination and survey to determine the best utilization of the surplus waters of the San Juan River and to determine the feasibility and cost of storing such waters and of diverting them to the Rio Chama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is another bill to wipe out payments due from those who are holders of these irrigation projects.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I may say for the information of the gentleman that this has nothing to do with payment. It simply provides for a survey of the waters of the San Juan River.

Mr. COSTELLO. There is an error in reporting this bill on the calendar. Calendar No. 721 should deal with surplus waters of the San Juan River and the Rio Chama, while the bill on the calendar deals with another matter.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PROCUREMENT WITHOUT ADVERTISING OF CERTAIN WAR DEPARTMENT PROPERTY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10762, to authorize the procurement, without advertising, of certain War Department property, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3859 be considered in lieu of the House bill. It is identical with the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever proposals are invited for the furnishing of articles of Chemical Warfare or Signal property of the War Department, the character of which or the ingredients thereof are of such a nature that the interests of the public service would be injured by publicly divulging them, the chief of the supply service concerned is authorized to purchase such articles in such manner as he may deem most economical and efficient.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 10762) was laid on the table.

IMPROVEMENT OF AMMUNITION STORAGE FACILITIES AT ALIAMANU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, AND EDGEWOOD ARSENAL, MD.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10849, to authorize an appropriation for improvement of ammunition storage facilities at Aliamanu, Territory of Hawaii, and Edgewood Arsenal, Md.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this seems to be a tremendous amount of money to appropriate by unanimous consent. This bill authorizes an appropriation of $2,694,171. I think that probably the bill has a great deal of merit and the work should be done. Does the gentleman think it is very good practice on the part of the House to appropriate this large sum of money by unanimous consent?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I think where we have a case as compelling as this one the House is justified in passing the bill by unanimous consent. As the gentleman well knows, unless a bill of this kind is passed by unanimous consent, about the only other way to get consideration is to go before the Rules Committee for a rule. The gentleman, of course, appreciates the difficulties and delay involved in that procedure.

I may say to the gentleman that this bill will relieve two very dangerous and hazardous situations, one at the Edgewood Arsenal, Md., and the other at Aliamanu, Hawaii. The bill has the recommendation of the War Department, and it will be noticed that the Bureau of the Budget also approves the bill. The committee, after hearing the testimony in this case, was unanimous in favor of the bill, feeling that it might even be derelict if it did not report the bill immediately and if some terrible catastrophe happened there as occurred a few years ago at Bismark, N. J.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no objection to the merits of the bill, and if it was brought out and voted upon, I would vote in favor of it. The reason we are called upon to appropriate such huge sums of money by unanimous consent is because we have been denied the right and the committees have been denied the right to take up legislation in the regular way on Calendar Wednesday. The responsibility for this bill, because it is on the Consent Calendar, rests with the individual Members. We should take our responsibility collectively. I am not going to object to the bill, but I do want to call attention to the situation.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. May I say to the gentleman that I have no personal interest in the bill? It is not my bill. I think, however, there is a situation there that needs prompt attention, and the situation should be remedied at once. According to the testimony furnished the committee and according to a letter from the War Department, there is at present danger of a terrible catastrophe there on account of the way high explosives, chemicals, and gas are stored. The fact is I should hate to assume the responsibility for stopping passage of the bill, and I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] will not object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I said that I had no objection to the merits of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,694,171, as follows: Aliamanu, Territory of Hawaii, $1,580,000; Edgewood Arsenal, Md. (Bush River project), $1,114,171; including the necessary construction and installation of buildings, roads, railroads, and fences, utilities and appurtenances incident thereto, and including also the moving and reconditioning of Ordnance and Chemical Warfare Service stores, as may be necessary to provide safe and adequate storage for munitions.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEMORIAL TO BETSY ROSS

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 470, to authorize the selection of a site and the erection thereon of a suitable monument as a memorial to Betsy Ross.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT AND FARM CREDIT ACT OF 1935

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10101, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act and the Farm Credit Act of 1935, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That effective July 1, 1935, the first sentence of paragraph "Twelfth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended and as further amended by section 3 (a) of the Farm Credit Act of 1935, is further amended by striking out the following: "occurring within a period of 1 year commencing July 1, 1935, and shall not exceed 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 2 years commencing July 1, 1936", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "occurring within a period of 3 years commencing July 1, 1935."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE HERNANDO DE SOTO EXPEDITION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11747, extending the time for making the report of the Commission to study the subject of Hernando De Soto's Expedition.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I do so for the purpose of criticizing the manner in which this extension is being made. This is very haphazard legislation, to say the least, and I want to call attention to the fact that this is one of these very short, concise, and to-the-point reports which are frequently reported out of the Committee on the Library, which gives absolutely no information whatsoever, and I wonder if it is in conformity with the spirit, at least, of the Ramseyer rule, in that no information is given as to when this Commission is supposed to make its report.

I have looked through the bill and read the report very carefully, word for word, and in no way can I determine when the Commission is supposed to make its report; but I do find that it extends the time for making the report to January 2, 1939, and I may say that the legislation is haphazard in that the existing legislation should be amended by striking out the time at which the Commission was authorized to make its report and a new date included.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman that I had not investigated the report on the bill——

Mr. WOLCOTT. It will not take the gentleman very long to do so.

Mr. RANKIN. But the bill simply extends the time for making this report. The original bill provided for this Commission making its report at this session of the Congress; but, as the Members all know, we hung on here last summer until around the 1st of September, and this Commission was appointed late. Therefore they have not completed their investigation on which they propose to make this report. So I introduced this bill extending the time to a definite period.

This does not cost a single cent. The money is already appropriated and provided for. Of course, if they are required to rush through with it, they could spend all the money and make a report before this Congress adjourns, but they did not want to do that, and for that reason we are simply asking for this extension of time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I simply want to call attention to the fact that during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress we had to object to the passage of bills that came out of the Library Committee because the reports were incomplete in some instances, and the Ramseyer rule was not complied with in other instances, and I have noticed another bill later on in this calendar which is comparable with the situation that existed last year. I hope we will not again have to resort to the extreme of compelling the Library Committee to conform with the spirit of the rules of the House.

I have no objection to the merits of this bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commission to study the subject of Hernando De Soto's Expedition, appointed pursuant to the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four-hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto", approved August 26, 1935, may make its report to Congress on or before January 2, 1939.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF SUB-BITUMINOUS AND LIGNITE COAL BY THE BUREAU OF MINES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10633, to authorize the Bureau of Mines to conduct certain studies, investigations, and experiments with respect to sub-bituminous and lignite coal, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, there is a similar Senate bill on the subject, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill (S. 3748) may be substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of Mines, under the general direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to conduct investigations, studies, and experiments on its own initiative and in cooperation with individuals, State institutions, laboratories, and other organizations, with a view to (1) the development of a commercially practicable carbonization method of processing sub-bituminous and lignite coal so as to convert such coal into an all-purpose fuel, to provide fertilizers, and obtain such other byproducts thereof as may be commercially valuable; (2) the development of efficient methods, equipment, and devices for burning lignite or char therefrom; and (3) determining and developing methods for more efficient utilization of such sub-bituminous and lignite coal for purposes of generating electric power.

SEC. 2. The Bureau of Mines is further authorized, under the general direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to erect such plants, construct and purchase such machinery and equipment, and to take such other steps as it may deem necessary and proper to effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act. The above amount to be expended over a period of 3 years, as follows: $40,000 to be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937; $30,000 to be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938; and $30,000 to be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a House bill (H. R. 10633) were laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF THE BLACKSTONE, SEEKONK, MOSHASSUK, AND WOONASQUATUCKET RIVERS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11921) to authorize a preliminary examination of the Blackstone, Seekonk, Moshassuk, and Woonasquatucket Rivers, and their tributaries, in the State of Rhode Island, with a view to the control of their floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Blackstone, Seekonk, Moshassuk, and Woonasquatucket Rivers and their tributaries in the State of Rhode Island, with a view to the control of their floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOUNDARY OF THE UTE INDIAN RESERVATION, UTAH

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9156) to define the exterior boundary of the Ute Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me that in view of the amount involved and the fact that we are departing from precedents by authorizing payment of claims allowed by the Court of Claims before judgment, I wonder if there would be any objection to allowing this bill to go over without prejudice in order that we may make further examination?

Mr. MURDOCK. There is no objection on my part.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CHARLESTON ARMY BASE TERMINAL

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3789) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey the Charleston Army Base Terminal to the city of Charleston, S. C.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of Charleston, S. C., that portion of the Charleston Quartermaster Intermediate Depot, including improvements thereon, which was transferred to the United States Shipping Board by Executive Order No. 3920 dated November 3, 1923, with the exception of such portion of said land as has been retransferred to the War Department by Executive order, or is now under consideration for retransfer, and also subject to all the rights and privileges now enjoyed by the War Department as specifically set forth in said Executive Order No. 3920, or as may hereafter be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the city of Charleston: Provided, however, That the charges for water and electric current furnished the War Department shall not exceed rates prevailing in the city of Charleston and vicinity for such services.

SEC. 2. The deed executed by the Secretary of Commerce shall contain the express condition that in the event of a national emergency the property so conveyed, with all improvements placed thereon, may be taken upon order of the President by the United States for the use of the War Department during the period of such emergency.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "shall", insert "include a provision prohibiting the city of Charleston from transferring the title from said property to any person, firm, or corporation and shall."

Page 2, line 15, after the word "taken", insert "without cost to the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING COASTWISE LOAD LINE ACT, 1935

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11915) to amend the Coastwise Load Line Act of 1935.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the Coastwise Load Line Act of 1935, approved August 27, 1935 (Public, No. 354, 74th Cong.), be amended by striking out after the words "trades in which they are engaged" the colon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In establishing load water lines on passenger vessels due consideration shall be given to, and differentials shall be made for, the age of the vessel, its subdivision and efficacy thereof, and the stability of the vessel in a damaged condition."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 2 of the Coastwise Load Line Act, 1935, approved August 27, 1935 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. I, title 46, sec. 88a), be amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 2. The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized and directed, in respect of the vessels defined above, to establish by regulations from time to time the load water lines and marks thereof indicating the maximum depth to which such vessels may safely be loaded, and in establishing such load lines due consideration shall be given to, and differentials made for, the various types and character of vessels and the trades in which they are engaged. In establishing load water lines on passenger vessels due consideration shall be given to, and differentials shall be made for, the age and condition of the vessel, its subdivision and efficacy thereof, and the stability of the vessel in a damaged condition: Provided, That the load-line provisions of this act shall apply to the Great Lakes, and that no load line shall be established or marked on any vessel which load line gives a lesser freeboard and less buoyancy than the load line established by the International Treaty on Load Lines of 1930, and that the regulations established under this proviso shall have the force of law: Provided further, That in applying the load lines to vessels on the Great Lakes the Secretary of Commerce is vested with discretion to vary the load-line marks from those established by said treaty when in his opinion the changes made by him will not be above the actual line of safety.'"

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 23, after the words "Great Lakes", insert the following: "and to vessels engaged in special service on interisland voyages and on coastwise voyages from port to port in the continental United States."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

CALIFORNIA INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1793) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California", approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 602).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. LEA of California. Is there any particular point on which I might aid the gentleman in respect to this bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, there are at least two objections to the bill which are of great importance. First, it authorizes the appropriation of an indeterminate amount of money, which it is thought will not exceed $5,000,000, or it involves that amount. That is a rather large amount to consider under unanimous consent. Then, next, we authorize in this bill an appeal from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, where questions of law and fact may be considered. In the case of all other citizens of the United States who have claims against the Government, they are permitted to take their claims to the United States Supreme Court by certiorari only, which restricts the review to matters of law. I presume that when we gave the Indians citizenship we did not intend to give them any more rights, prerogatives, or advantages than we give to the other citizens of the United States, and those few Indians with whom I am acquainted I know to be patriotic enough and good enough citizens so that they do not expect any rights or privileges not enjoyed by other American citizens. Those are my two thoughts with respect to the legislation, but, perhaps, overshadowing all of that, we are dealing with a bill of such tremendous importance that I think we should be given an opportunity to discuss it most thoroughly on the floor before acting upon it.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WITHHOLDING PAY OF CERTAIN OFFICERS OF ARMY, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8784) to authorize the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to withhold the pay of officers, warrant officers, enlisted men, and nurses of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps to cover indebtedness to the United States under certain conditions.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the pay of officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, and of members of the Army and Navy Nurse Corps, may be withheld under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy for their respective departments to satisfy any indebtedness to the United States or to any of its military or naval agencies or instrumentalities growing out of, or resulting from, a disallowance by the Comptroller General of the United States in the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps: Provided, That in the event that any suit shall be brought against a disbursing officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps on account of disallowances by the Comptroller General of the United States, and final judgment shall be in favor of the defendant, such defendant shall be entitled to recover his expenses incurred in his defense, including such attorney's fees as the court shall deem reasonable and traveling expenses and per diem as prescribed in the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 688), as amended, and regulations promulgated thereunder, which expenses shall be fixed by written finding filed by the court in such cause; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such funds as are necessary to defray such expenses: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal the provisions contained in the act of May 22, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 10, sec. 875), as amended.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That hereafter, whenever upon the statement of the account of any disbursing officer of the United States in the General Accounting Office credit shall have been disallowed for any payment to any person in the executive branch of the Government otherwise entitled to compensation from the United States or from any agency or instrumentality thereof, such compensation of the payee may be withheld until full reimbursement has been accomplished under such regulations as may be prescribed by the head of the department, branch, or independent establishment (including corporations) under which such payee is entitled to receive compensation: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal or in any way modify existing laws relating to the collection of the indebtedness of accountable or disbursing officers."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to authorize withholding compensation due Government personnel."

PUBLIC WELFARE DEPARTMENT FOR PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12119) to amend sections 13 and 19 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice to allow the committee to conform to the Ramseyer rule and, if it desires, to submit a supplementary report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. IGLESIAS. In a minute I can explain the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I don't know that I have any objection to the bill, but I cannot study it in the light of comparison with existing legislation, because the Ramseyer rule has not been complied with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS TO LOS ANGELES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12033) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., certain public lands in California; and granting rights-of-way over public lands and reserve lands to the city of Los Angeles in Mono County in the State of California.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the city of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation of the State of California, all lands belonging to the United States situated in Mono County, Calif., which may be necessary, as found by the Secretary of the Interior, for any or all of the following purposes:

Rights-of-way; buildings and structures, construction and maintenance camps; dumping grounds; flowage, diverting, or storage dams; pumping plants; power plants; canals, ditches, pipes, and pipe lines; flumes, tunnels, and conduits for conveying water for domestic, irrigation, power, and other useful purposes; poles, towers, and lines for the conveyance and distribution of electrical energy; poles and lines for telephone and telegraph purposes; roads, trails, bridges, tramways, railroads, and other means of locomotion, transmission, or communication; for obtaining stone, earth, gravel, and other materials of like character; or any other necessary purposes of said city, together with the right to take for its own use, free of cost, from any public lands, within such limits as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, stone, earth, gravel, sand, and other materials of like character necessary or useful in the construction, operation, and maintenance of aqueducts, reservoirs, dams, pumping plants, electric plants, and transmission, telephone, and telegraph lines, roads, trails, bridges, tramways, railroads, and other means of locomotion, transmission, and communication, or any other necessary purposes of the city of Los Angeles.

That there is hereby excepted and reserved unto the United States, from said grant, minerals, other than sand, stone, earth, gravel, and other materials of like character: Provided, however, That such minerals so excepted and reserved shall be prospected for, mined, and removed only in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

This grant shall be effective upon (1) the filing by said grantee at any time after the passage of this act, with the register of the United States local land office in the district where said lands are situated, of a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said lands and of said rights-of-way for the purposes hereinabove set forth; (2) the approval of such map or maps by the Secretary of the Interior, with such reservations or modifications as he may deem appropriate; (3) the payment of $1.25 per acre for all Government lands conveyed under this act other than for the right-of-way for the Mono Basin aqueduct: Provided, That said lands for rights-of-way shall be along such location and of such width, not to exceed 250 feet, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may be required for the purposes of this act: And provided further, That said lands for any of said purposes other than rights-of-way for the Mono Basin aqueduct may be of such width or extent as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior as necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 2. That where any of the lands, to which the city of Los Angeles seeks to acquire title under section 1 of this act, are in a national forest, the said map or maps shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture so far as national-forest lands are affected; and upon such approval and the subsequent approval by the Secretary of the Interior, title to said lands shall vest in the grantee upon the date of such subsequent approval.

SEC. 3. Said grants are to be made subject to rights-of-way, easements, and permits heretofore granted or allowed to any person or corporation in accordance with any act or acts of Congress and subject to the rights of all claimants or persons who shall have filed or made valid claims, locations, or entries on or to said lands, or any part thereof prior to the effective date of any conflicting grant hereunder, unless prior to such effective date proper relinquishments or quitclaims have been procured and caused to be filed in the proper land office.

SEC. 4. That, whenever the land granted herein shall cease to be used for the purposes for which it is granted, the estate of the grantee or of its assigns shall terminate and revest in the United States. That any grants made hereunder shall not be assigned to any private individual, association of such individuals, or a private corporation.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 23, strike out the word "accepted" and insert the word "excepted."

Page 3, line 1, strike out the word "accepted" and insert the word "excepted."

The committee amendments were agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF KANSAS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3434, to provide for the appointment of one additional judge for the district of Kansas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

GAMBLING-SHIP BILL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8525, prescribing regulations for carrying on the business of lighter service from any of the ports of the United States to stationary ships or barges located offshore, and for the purpose of promoting the safety of navigation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to operate any ship, boat, barge, or other means of transportation on which passengers are carried, or transported, from any port, landing, or wharf in the United States to any ship, barge, boat, or vessel anchored, or standing 3 or more miles offshore, without first obtaining from the Secretary of Commerce of the United States a permit to operate such vessel, such permit to be in such form and of such duration as the Secretary of Commerce of the United States may prescribe. A copy of this permit shall be kept on board each vessel and shall be exhibited on demand by qualified boarding officers, the original of such permit to be recorded in the customhouse of the port out of which such vessels operate.

SEC. 2. Before any such permit is issued for the operation of any such vessel the owner of same, or his authorized agent, shall make application therefor to the Secretary of Commerce of the United States, in which application the name or names and address or addresses of the owner or owners of such craft shall be set forth; also the port or place from which such vessel, or vessels, are to be operated; also the maximum number of persons such vessel will carry.

SEC. 3. If upon full investigation the Secretary of Commerce finds that the operation of such vessel is, or may become, a menace to navigation, or endangers human life, or is to be operated for the purpose of transporting passengers to or from any stationary or anchored vessel, barge, or other craft of similar character engaged in any business or occupation prohibited by law at the place of landing by said vessel covered by this act, the Secretary of Commerce shall deny such application and no permit for the operation of such vessel shall be issued.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, and such regulations shall have the force of law.

SEC. 5. For any violation of any of the provisions of this act or of the regulations issued thereunder, the owner of the vessel shall be subject to a penalty of $500 for which the vessel shall be liable and may be seized and proceeded against in any district in which she may be found; and the master or operator of such vessel shall be subject to a penalty of $300.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to mitigate or remit any penalty incurred for violation of this act on such terms as he may deem proper.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 8, after the word "offshore", insert "(pilot boats and vessels engaged exclusively in the fisheries excepted)"; page 3, beginning in line 7, strike out all of section 5 and insert the following:

"SEC. 5. For any violation of any of the provisions of this act or of the regulations issued thereunder, the owner of the vessel shall be subject to a penalty of $500 and the master or operator of such vessel to a penalty of $300; and such penalties shall constitute a lien on such vessel which may be proceeded against summarily by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof."

Page 3, line 24, insert the following:

"SEC. 7. This act shall take effect upon its enactment, except that sections 1, 5, and 6 shall take effect 60 days from the date of enactment of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF SABINE AND NECHES RIVERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10836, to authorize the preparation of a comprehensive plan for controlling the floods, regulating the flow of waters, land reclamation, and conserving water for beneficial uses, in the basins of the Sabine and Neches Rivers, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the chairman of the committee or the author of the bill can tell us something about that bill?

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the reclamation districts in Texas, created by the Texas Legislature some 2 or 3 years ago as other districts were created. This bill only provides that the War Department shall make a preliminary survey.

Mr. TABER. How much will it cost?

Mr. PATTON. This is the regular routine of their work. The appropriation comes through the War Department. They have recommend it to the committee, and the committee has unanimously recommended the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A similar Senate bill, S. 4214, is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Sabine and Neches Rivers, and their tributaries, with a view to controlling their floods and regulating, conserving, and utilizing the waters thereof, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1912, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 10836) was laid on the table.

RESIDENCE OF UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS FOR THE NATIONAL PARKS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9113, to provide for the residence of the United States commissioners appointed for the national parks, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Louisiana please explain this bill?

Mr. DEROUEN. This is a provision which will remove the requirement of the superintendent and officials to remain within the parks during the winter when it is very cold. They could be just outside of the park and carry on the operation of the park just as easily. It is simply an accommodation, and under this proposed legislation the authority to make such designations, both within and without the park boundaries, would be vested in the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is there any more cost to the Government?

Mr. DEROUEN. Not a nickel. Not at all.

They could locate on the boundary or at convenient locations near the parks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any United States commissioner appointed for any of the several national parks shall after appointment reside within the exterior boundaries of the park for which he is appointed or at a place reasonably adjacent to such park, the place of residence to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. Any such commissioner heretofore appointed shall be entitled to receive the salary provided by law, which may have accrued at the date this act becomes effective, without regard to whether such commissioner may have resided within the exterior boundaries of the park for which appointed.

SEC. 3. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "shall", insert the words "after appointment."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ABSAROKA AND GALLATIN NATIONAL FORESTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11799, to repeal the proviso of the act of May 18, 1928 (ch. 626, 45 Stat. 603), making additions to the Absaroka and Gallatin National Forests and improving and extending the winter-feed facilities of the elk, antelope, and other game animals of Yellowstone National Park and adjacent land, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso of the act approved May 18, 1928 (ch. 626, 45 Stat. 603), making additions to the Absaroka and Gallatin National Forests, and improving and extending the winter-feed facilities of the elk, antelope, and other game animals of Yellowstone National Park and adjacent land, as follows: "Provided, That the total expenditures from this appropriation shall not exceed the combined total of the sums contributed by private or other agencies under the provisions of clause (a) of section 1 of said act, and the appraised values of land donated or bequeathed under the provisions of clause (b) of section 1 of said act", be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the unexpended balance of any appropriations made pursuant to said act is hereby authorized to be expended for the purchase of land by the payment in full of the purchase price agreed to therefor.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAMMOTH CAVE NATIONAL PARK, KY.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11791, to make available for national-park purposes certain lands within the area of the proposed Mammoth Cave National Park, Ky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this take land that already belongs to the Government or does it propose to buy land?

Mr. DEROUEN. I will be glad to explain this bill. This has to do with the Mammoth Cave. We are attempting to carry on the operation of the national park there but to remove a certain area.

Some of the caves we did not need and were being held up on the price. We are trying to remove these areas and use only the area and caves which the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion deems necessary to carry on the organization of the park and conform with rule of Attorney General with respect to the 9,200 acres of land acquired or contracted for and give national-park status under jurisdiction of the National Park Service. That is all it is.

Mr. TABER. It reduces the area of the park, that is all?

Mr. DEROUEN. We exclude those areas so we will not be held up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands purchased from funds heretofore allocated and made available by Executive order, or otherwise, or which hereafter may be allocated and made available for the acquisition of lands for conservation or forestation purposes within the maximum boundaries of the Mammoth Cave National Park as authorized by the act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 635), be, and the same are hereby made, a part of the said park as fully as if originally acquired for that purpose.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, after line 10, insert a new section to read as follows:
"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to exclude the Great Onyx Cave and the Crystal Cave, or either of them, from the maximum boundaries of the said park."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7764, to relieve restricted Indians whose lands have been taxed or have been lost by failure to pay taxes, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, for payment of taxes, including penalties and interest, assessed against individually owned Indian land the title to which is held subject to restrictions against alienation or encumbrance except with the consent or approval of the Secretary of the Interior, heretofore purchased out of trust or restricted Indian funds of an Indian, where the Secretary finds that such land was purchased with the understanding and belief on the part of the said Indian that after purchase it would be nontaxable, and for redemption or reacquisition of any such land heretofore or hereafter subject to restriction against alienation or encumbrance except with the consent or approval of the Secretary of the Interior, heretofore purchased out of trust or restricted funds of said Indian, are hereby declared to be instrumentalities of the Federal Government, and shall be nontaxable until otherwise directed by Congress.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:
"That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, for payment of taxes, including penalties and interest, assessed against individually owned Indian land the title to which is held subject to restrictions against alienation or encumbrance except with the consent or approval of the Secretary of the Interior, heretofore purchased out of trust or restricted funds of an Indian, where the Secretary finds that such land was purchased with the understanding and belief on the part of said Indian that after purchase it would be nontaxable, and for redemption or reacquisition of any such land heretofore or hereafter sold for nonpayment of taxes.

SEC. 2. All lands the title to which is now held by an Indian subject to restrictions against alienation or encumbrance except with the consent or approval of the Secretary of the Interior, heretofore purchased out of trust or restricted funds of said Indian, are hereby declared to be instrumentalities of the Federal Government, and shall be nontaxable until otherwise directed by Congress."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INDIANS OF THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2047, to promote the general welfare of the Indians of the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this bill is rather a radical departure from existing policy and might involve something like $2,000,000, I think probably it is one of the bills that should be considered either under suspension of the rules, by a special rule, or on Calendar Wednesday. For this reason I object.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withdraw his objection and allow the bill to go over without prejudice?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

CHOCTAW INDIANS OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2715, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill provides that these Indians may sue the Government, but, unlike any other suit or any other claimant, the Government cannot set off against the suit any gratuity it may have given to the Indians, and it also provides the right of appeal, instead of certiorari. For these reasons I object.

MONUMENT IN MEMORY OF CAPT. MOSES ROGERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8998, to authorize the erection of a monument in memory of Capt. Moses Rogers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill in that it provides for an appropriation of $5,000. The rules are very specific as to which committees may make appropriations, and I do not find the Committee on the Library included as one of them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Objection is heard, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

CHOCTAW INDIANS OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 745, S. 2715, an act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi, and that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3950, to aid in defraying the expenses of the Sixteenth Triennial Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to be held in this country in June 1937.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the author of the bill explain why this amount of money should be appropriated for one organization unless we are going to appropriate it for many?

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I am not the author of the bill, although it is reported in my name. The House has gone on record, not over 3 weeks ago, in appropriating money for an association of country women in this same amount to assist them in their convention. The precedent has already been established, and the same request is made in connection with this worthy association of W. C. T. U. women.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Does the gentleman believe this House should establish the policy of appropriating $10,000 to various associations who desire to have their convention expenses defrayed?

Mr. GILLETTE. I may say to the gentleman that so far as my individual views are concerned, I think it is a very improper policy; but the House has established the precedent, and for this reason we are not in position to refuse to help these women whose purpose is broad, covering not only temperance but welfare work of all kinds.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I withhold my request.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I wish the Members of the House would permit this bill to pass. There are over 600,000 women interested in this matter, and it seems to me they are a particularly worthy group and represent a particularly worthy cause. I think no Member should object.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I have no objection, of course, to the cause; in fact, I agree with the cause. I am merely questioning the principle.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. These women have been invited to this country.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to aid in defraying the expenses of the Sixteenth Triennial Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to be held in this country in June 1937, such sum to be expended for such purposes and under such regulations as the Secretary of State shall prescribe and without regard to any other provision of law.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IRRIGATION CHARGES ON IRRIGATION LANDS

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the bill S. 1318, an act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and adjust irrigation charges on irrigation lands within projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes, No. 697 on the Consent Calendar, and that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE AT BUENOS AIRES, ARGENTINA

The Clerk called the next resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 248, to provide for participation by the United States in an inter-American conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand this joint resolution carries an appropriation?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has the joint resolution and may say that it only authorizes an appropriation.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000 to be used for participation by the United States in an Inter-American Conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses (and by indirect routes and by airplane if specifically authorized by the Secretary of State); hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; equipment, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and maps; stationery; official cards, entertainment; printing and binding; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, fiscal year 1936, to remain available until June 30, 1937.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "conference", insert "in pursuance of and for the purposes set forth in a letter from the President of the United States dated January 30, 1936."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ERECTION OF MEMORIAL TO THOSE WHO MET THEIR DEATH IN THE WRECK OF THE "SHENANDOAH"

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10544, authorizing the erection of a memorial to those who met their death in the wreck of the dirigible Shenandoah.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to erect near Ava, Ohio, on the spot where the Shenandoah fell, a suitable tablet or marker to commemorate the heroic services rendered by Commander Landsdowne and other members of the crew who died when the Navy dirigible Shenandoah was destroyed.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DESIGNATION OF THE SEQUOIA TREE AS THE NATIONAL TREE OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10106, to designate the sequoia tree (Sequoia gigantea) as the national tree of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I intend to object, because I do not consider the sequoia tree a typical American tree. I do not believe the Congress of the United States should spend very much time picking out national trees and national flowers anyway. There are millions of citizens of the United States who have not had the pleasure of visiting California and viewing the Sequoia gigantea and probably will never be able to get enough money to go out there. I may call attention to the fact that the oak, the pine, the maple, the spruce, the hemlock, the cactus, and the willow are all more typical American trees than is the sequoia. I am surprised our good friend from Ohio, Mr. West, as Acting Secretary of the Interior, would recommend this bill. However, all he has to say with respect to it is that it is a tree with a great deal of dignity. I think we can agree with him on that. I notice that in another paragraph of his letter he says that this would not be in conflict with the program of the President. I assume he means the financial program of the President and, of course, that is about the only thing we can agree with him on so far as this bill is concerned. I cannot see where the naming of this tree would be in conflict with the financial program of the Government.

Mr. STUBBS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold my objection.

Mr. STUBBS. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that a Nation-wide poll was taken and approximately 3,000,000 votes cast. This poll was taken by the National Life

Conservation Society and votes were received from women's clubs, patriotic organizations, churches, lodges, colleges, public and private schools, and the sequoia tree received by far the largest number of votes. I may also say to the gentleman that this bill has not only been endorsed by the Department of the Interior but by the National Life Conservation Society, the New York History Club, of New York City, the Ohio Federation of Women's Clubs, the Relief Society for the Aged, which provides fresh-air funds for adults and elderly people, and is an organization interested in the outdoors. It has also been endorsed by the National Society of the Daughters of 1812, the Sons and Daughters of the Pilgrims, and by many prominent citizens of every State in the Union, as well as businessmen, officials, thousands of school children, and others.

I may say to the gentleman that I believe this tree is truly and typically American in that it is the largest and oldest living thing in the world. It is found nowhere else except in the United States and California.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that my objection to making the sequoia a national tree is it is the most rare tree I know of in the United States. Now, would the gentleman accept an amendment making the Michigan pine the national tree? Would he accept an amendment making the birch, which is probably more typical than any other tree in the United States, the national tree? The gentleman from Texas might suggest the cactus.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I would suggest the everlasting mesquite tree.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

PERMANENT MEMORIAL TO THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request.

When the bill (H. R. 12027) to authorize the execution of plans for a permanent memorial to Thomas Jefferson (Calendar No. 684) was called, objection was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and I made the request that it be passed over without prejudice, which request was granted.

I now ask unanimous consent to withdraw the request that I then made.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that mean that the bill keeps its present place on the calendar or do we return to the bill for its consideration?

Mr. BOYLAN. I withdraw the request that it be passed over without prejudice. I make the request myself and I am not withdrawing the objection of anyone else.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that this is for a statue of Thomas Jefferson here in Washington. We only have one small one in the hall here in the Capitol Building, and if there is anything needed in Washington, it is a statue of Thomas Jefferson, so that the people of this country may look up to his writings and teachings, and I am in hopes they will follow him.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania where he is going to get $3,000,000 to erect this monument? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman that I am not advocating the spending of $3,000,000, but we can save more than the $3,000,000 if we cut out the $30,000,000 that you are going to spend for a monument to Jefferson in St. Louis, where we have a memorial to Jefferson already erected there costing over $1,000,000. We can erect this one here in Washington and cut the one out in St. Louis and save $27,000,000.

Mr. BOYLAN. I am only asking for the privilege of withdrawing my own request that it go over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the request of the gentleman is granted, what status has the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is then before the House at the objection stage and the Chair will put the question, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. There was one objection to the bill——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no objection registered on the Journal. There has not been any objection to the bill, but it has been passed over without prejudice. If that is withdrawn, the question then is on the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And that would force an objection at the present time; that is, the Clerk would call the bill now to determine whether there is objection to its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then I object to the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN. I thank the gentleman.

PEACEFUL PICKETING DURING LABOR CONTROVERSIES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2039, making it a felony to transport in interstate or foreign commerce persons to be employed to obstruct or interfere with the right of peaceful picketing during labor controversies.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman from Pennsylvania withhold his objection?

Mr. MILLER. May I ask the gentleman to reserve his objection?

Mr. RICH. I withhold it.

Mr. MILLER. I may say to the gentleman that the hearings that were conducted by the Committee on the Judiciary developed such conditions that I believe a reading of the hearings would convince the gentleman that this bill ought to pass. This is the end to which the bill is directed. We have some organizations in this country, particularly the Bergoff organization in New York City, that make it a practice and business to enlist hoodlums and professional strikebreakers who are transported from one State to another to interfere with peaceful picketing where there may be a strike pending. This is the only thing the bill does. It simply prevents the transportation of such men in interstate commerce.

Mr. RICH. I would infer from a reading of this bill that the burden of proof would be on the railroad companies, and if someone should get on a train or on a bus and be taken from one town to another, the railroads could be indicted because they would have to prove that they did not know what these men had in mind and therefore would become liable for any offenses they might commit if they hauled them under such conditions.

Mr. MILLER. The burden is upon the Government to establish a criminal intent, and let me say to the gentleman, that in a criminal statute there is no such thing as intendment of a criminal intent unless it is specifically provided in the act. A railroad company, under this bill and the circumstances stated by the gentleman, could not possibly be convicted. The company would have to knowingly assist in the transportation. The mere fact that it hauled such men would not make it guilty.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will probably recall that last year a very distinguished army officer was placed in charge of Terre Haute and two entire counties in Indiana which were under martial law, and stated there was no such thing as peaceful picketing. I quite agree with him. I have never seen any peaceful picketing yet.

Mr. MILLER. I know nothing about strikes, but peaceful picketing should be protected against violence, which is sure to occur when these hoodlums come into the picture.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

ATTENDANT OF TOTALLY DISABLED EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2040, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, and acts in amendment thereof.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, and acts in amendment thereof (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 756), is amended by the addition of the following paragraph:

"In addition to the monthly compensation the Employees' Compensation Commission may pay an injured employee awarded compensation for permanent total disability from injury an additional sum of not more than $50 a month, as the Commission may deem necessary, when the Commission shall find that the service of an attendant is necessary constantly to be used by reason of the employee being totally blind, or having lost both hands or both feet or the use thereof, or is paralyzed and unable to walk, or by reason of other total disability actually rendering him so helpless as to require constant attendance."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO QUIET TITLE AND POSSESSION WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN LANDS IN TUSCUMBIA, ALA.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12212) to quiet title and possession with respect to certain lands in Tuscumbia, Ala.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all the unsubdivided land in and the strip of land known as the Commons surrounding the city of Tuscumbia, formerly Cold Water Spring, Ala., as shown by plat made by John Coffee, surveyor, which plat shows the town as embracing the south half section 4, the southeast quarter section 5, the northeast quarter section 8, and the north half section 9, township 4 south, range 11 west, Huntsville meridian, which said town was established under sections 3 and 5 of the act of March 3, 1817 (3 Stat. 375), and section 2 of the act of April 20, 1818 (3 Stat. 467), be, and the same is hereby, released, relinquished, and confirmed by the United States to the city of Tuscumbia, Ala., or to the owners of the equitable titles thereto, as fully and completely, in every respect whatever, as could be done by patents issued according to law: Provided, That this act shall amount only to a relinquishment of any title the United States has, or is supposed to have, in and to any of said lands, and shall not be construed to abridge, impair, injure, prejudice, or divest in any manner any valid right, title, or interest of any person or body corporate whatever, the true intent of this act being to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to the city of Tuscumbia or to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the equitable owners of said lands under the laws of the State of Alabama in the absence of the said interest, title, and estate of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC-DOMAIN LANDS IN NEW MEXICO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12073) to reserve certain public-domain lands in New Mexico as an addition to the school reserve of the Jicarilla Indian Reservation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described public-domain lands be, and they are hereby, withdrawn from entry, sale, or other disposition and set aside as an addition to the school reserve of the Jicarilla Indian Reservation, Dulce, N. Mex.: Northwest quarter southwest quarter and the southeast quarter southwest quarter section 30, township 32 north, range 1 west, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico: Provided, That said withdrawal shall not affect any valid rights initiated prior to approval hereof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE INDIAN PUEBLOS OF JEMEZ AND PECOS IN NEW MEXICO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12074) to consolidate the Indian pueblos of Jemez and Pecos, N. Mex.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pueblo Indian tribes of New Mexico, commonly known and referred to as the Pueblo de Jemez and Pueblo de Pecos, be, and they are hereby, consolidated and merged into one tribe hereafter to be known as the Pueblo de Jemez.

SEC. 2. That all property, real or personal, rights, titles, interests, claims, or demands of whatsoever kind or nature, now held or claimed by either of said tribes, or communities shall be, and hereby are, vested in the consolidated tribe.

SEC. 3. That the unexpended balance of any funds heretofore awarded to, appropriated for, or hereafter to be appropriated by Congress for the use or benefit of either of said tribes or pueblos referred to shall be held for and applied to the use and benefit of said consolidated and merged tribe or pueblo, known as Pueblo de Jemez, subject to all limitations or restrictions now applicable to said funds.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF POTEAU RIVER IN ARKANSAS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12079) to provide for a preliminary examination of the Poteau River in Arkansas with a view to flood control and to determine the cost of such improvement.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Poteau River in Arkansas to determine the feasibility of flood-control work on said river and the cost of such improvement in accordance with the provision of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, and the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of river and harbors.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Arkansas", strike out "to determine the feasibility of flood-control work on said river and the cost of such improvement" and insert in lieu thereof "with a view to the control of its floods"; on page 2, line 1, after the figures "1917", strike out the word "and."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF SULPHUR RIVER, ARK.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12080) to provide for a preliminary examination of the Sulphur River in Arkansas with a view to flood control, and to determine the cost of such improvement.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Sulphur River in Arkansas to determine the feasibility of flood-control work on said river and the cost of such improvement, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, and the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for a preliminary examination of the Sulphur River in Arkansas with a view to flood control."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Arkansas", strike out "to determine the feasibility of flood-control work on said river and the cost of such improvement", and insert in lieu thereof "with a view to the control of its floods." On page 2, line 1, after the figures "1917", strike out the word "and."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

CONGREE, SANTEE, AND COOPER RIVERS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12133) to authorize a preliminary examination of the Congree, Santee, and the Cooper Rivers and their tributaries in the State of South Carolina, with a view to the control of their floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Congree, Santee, and Cooper Rivers and their tributaries in the State of South Carolina, with a view to the control of their floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FULMER: Page 1, line 5, after the word "Congree", insert the word "Watere."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: A bill to authorize a preliminary examination of the Congree, Watere, Santee, and Cooper Rivers and their tributaries in the State of South Carolina, with a view to the control of their floods.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1494) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims", approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 555).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all suits filed under the act entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims", approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 555), either party, with the consent of the court first had and obtained, shall have the right to amend the pleadings at any time prior to the entry of final judgment so as to include all claims said Indians may have under said act against the United States and any defense the United States may have thereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PROTECTING RIGHTS OF GOVERNMENT IN LAND GRANTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10641) providing for the protection and conservation of equities, easements, or rights accruing to the Government because of lands granted for the purpose of aiding in the building or establishment of railroads.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to secure and preserve to the United States in full value and benefit of its liens, easements, and/or equities upon all railroads which have received Federal land grants, it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to protect and conserve, in whatever manner involved, the equities, easements, and/or rights accruing to the Government because of lands granted to aid in the building or establishment of railroads.

SEC. 2. That it shall further be the duty of the Attorney General to secure and keep in his office data and information as to the quantity of lands which were secured by the various railroads, manner of disposition thereof by said railroads, and the amounts received therefor, revenues accruing to the Government because of such grants, protect the interests of the Government in cases where abandonments of railroads or parts thereof are to be made which have received Federal land grants, and furnish to the Congress such information as it may require relative to such equities, easements, rights, and/or abandonments.

SEC. 3. That the Attorney General may call upon and receive from any governmental agency or railroad company such data or information as may be deemed necessary, and he is authorized to employ such persons as may be required to carry out the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the Attorney General is hereby authorized and directed to secure and maintain records of lands granted by the United States to aid in the construction and maintenance of roads and railroads; the benefits accruing to the United States from such grants; the disposition made of said lands by the grantees or their successors in interest, and the consideration received therefor; to protect, conserve, and assert, by appropriate legal proceedings, the equities and rights of the United States resulting from such grants of lands and from breaches of any of the terms, conditions, or covenants contained in any act by which any such grant was made or any act amendatory or supplemental thereto; and to furnish to the Congress such information as it may require relative to such matters.

"SEC. 2. The Attorney General is authorized to request from any executive department, independent establishment, or other governmental agency such data or information as he may deem necessary, and to employ such persons as may be required, to carry out the provisions of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to provide for the protection and conservation of equities of rights of the Government resulting from railroad land grants."

EXAMINATION OF PATUXENT RIVER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12158) to authorize a preliminary examination of the Patuxent River and its tributaries in the State of Maryland, with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Patuxent River and its tributaries in the State of Maryland, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WITHDRAWING CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS FROM ENTRY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1397) to withdraw certain public lands from settlement and entry.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands of the United States within the boundaries hereinafter described are hereby withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, and entry under the public-land laws of the United States for a local park, recreational purposes, and for securing favorable conditions of water flows. The lands herein referred to are located in the State of California and more particularly bounded and described as follows:

The east half section 32, township 20 north, range 5 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, containing 320 acres: Provided, That the Board of Supervisors of Butte County, in which said lands are located, shall make and enforce all such local, police, sanitary, and other rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the rights of the United States therein, as may be necessary for the preservation and use of said lands by the public as a local public park and recreation ground and for the preservation of animal life thereon, for the preservation of order thereon, and for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flows therefrom, including the right to construct roads and trails thereon and a conduit or ditch for conveying water for the public-park uses in immediate connection therewith: Provided further, That this act shall not defeat or affect any lawful right which has already attached under the public land or mining laws: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, when in his judgment the public interest would be best served thereby, restore to settlement, location, sale, or entry, any of the lands hereby withdrawn therefrom: And provided further, That such lands shall be subject to a reservation of the right of the United States or its permittees or licensees to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all of said lands necessary in the judgment of the Federal Power Commission for the purposes of the Federal Water Power Act with payment by the United States or any licensee for damages to improvements made by the Board of Supervisors of Butte County, Calif.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "flows", insert "subject to and with a reservation of the right of the United States permittees or licensees, upon payment only for damages to improvements made by the Board of Supervisors of Butte County, Calif., to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all thereof necessary, in the judgment of the Federal Power Commission, for the purposes of the Federal Water Power Act."

Page 2, line 22, strike out:

"That the Secretary of the Interior may, when, in his judgment, the public interest would be best served there, restore to settlement, location, sale, or entry any of the lands hereby withdrawn therefrom: And provided further, That such lands shall be subject to a reservation of the right of the United States or its permittees, licensees, to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all of said lands necessary, in the judgment of the Federal Power Commission, for the purposes of the Federal Water Power Act, with payment by the United States or any licensee for damages to improvements made by the Board of Supervisors of Butte County, Calif."

And insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior may, when in his judgment the public interest would be best served thereby, restore any of said lands to settlement, location, sale, or entry, subject to and with a reservation of the right of the United States or its permittees or licensees, upon payment only for damages to improvements made by said board of supervisors, to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all of such land necessary, in the judgment of the Federal Power Commission, for the purposes of the Federal Water Power Act, which right shall be expressly reserved in every patent issued for such lands."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

IDENTIFICATION OF PRISON-MADE GOODS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11372) to amend Public Law No. 215, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CARMICHAEL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. CARMICHAEL. Yes; I will withhold it.

Mr. MILLER. I want to call attention to the fact that this proposed amendment is necessary if we are going to enforce the statute that was passed in the last session. The present law against the transportation of prison-made goods only requires that the packages containing those goods shall be marked on the outside, so that when those goods reach a State it is impossible to distinguish them from other goods when the wrapper of the package has been removed. If the original statute was a good enactment of law, then this amendment ought to be adopted in order that the intent of the first statute may be carried out.

Personally, I have no interest in the matter; but unless we do mark prison goods themselves, there is no way of preventing the bootlegging of prison goods. I believe the gentleman ought to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARMICHAEL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENTS TO BANKRUPTCY LAW

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11917, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That clause (9) of subdivision (b) of section 77B of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows: "(9) shall provide adequate means for the execution of the plan, which may include the transfer of all or any part of the property of the debtor to another corporation or to other corporations, or the consolidation of the properties of the debtor with those of another corporation, or the merger or consolidation of the debtor into or with another corporation or corporations, or the retention of the property by the debtor, the distribution of assets among creditors or any class thereof, the satisfaction or modification of liens, indentures, or other similar instruments, the curing or waiver of defaults, extension of maturity dates of outstanding securities, the change in interest rates and other terms of such securities, the amendment of the charter of the debtor, and the issuance of securities of either the debtor or any such corporation or corporations, for cash, or in exchange for existing securities, or in satisfaction of claims or rights, including claims or rights against a guarantor based upon obligations of the debtor with respect to which there is satisfaction of any claims or rights against the debtor, or for other appropriate purposes."

SEC. 2. Clause (10) of subdivision (b) of section 77B of such act of July 1, 1898, as amended, be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows: "(10) may deal with all or any part of the property of the debtor and may include any other appropriate provisions not inconsistent with this section. No creditor or stockholder shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be affected by any plan of reorganization unless the same shall affect his interests materially and adversely. The term 'securities' shall include evidences of indebtedness, either secured or unsecured, stock, certificates of beneficial interest therein, and certificates of beneficial interest in property. The term 'stockholders' shall include the holders of voting trust certificates. The term 'guarantor' when used in this section and for all purposes thereof shall mean any person, firm, or corporation who has as a part of his business and for a premium guaranteed, insured, or otherwise become liable for all or any of the debts or outstanding securities or other obligations of the debtor, or any part thereof, or bonds, participation certificates, or other obligations issued upon the security of the same. The term 'creditors' shall include for all purposes of this section and of the reorganization plan, its acceptance and confirmation, all holders of claims of whatever character against the debtor or its property, including claims under executory contracts, whether or not such claims would otherwise constitute provable claims under this act. The term 'claims' includes debt, securities other than stock, liens, or other interests of whatever character. For all purposes of this section unsecured claims which would have been entitled to priority over existing mortgages if a receiver in equity of the property of the debtor had been appointed by a Federal court on the day of the approval of the petition or answer under this section shall be entitled to such priority, and the holders of such claims, and of other claims, if any, of equal rank, shall be treated as a separate class of creditors. In case an executory contract or unexpired lease of real estate shall be rejected pursuant to direction of the judge given in a proceeding instituted under this section, or shall have been rejected by a trustee or receiver in bankruptcy or receiver in equity, in a proceeding pending prior to the institution of a proceeding under this section, any person injured by such rejection shall, for all purposes of this section and of the reorganization plan, its acceptance and confirmation, be deemed to be a creditor. The claim of a landlord for injury resulting from the rejection of an unexpired lease of real estate or for damages or indemnity under a covenant contained in such lease shall be treated as a claim ranking on a parity with debts which would be provable under section 63 (a) of this act, but shall be limited to an amount not to exceed the rent, without acceleration, reserved by said lease for the 3 years next succeeding the date of surrender of the premises to the landlord or the date of reentry of the landlord, whichever first occurs, whether before or after the filing of the petition, plus unpaid rent accrued up to such date of surrender or reentry: Provided, That the court shall scrutinize the circumstances of an assignment of future rent claims and the amount of the consideration paid for such assignment in determining the amount of damages allowed assignee hereunder. In the case of secured claims entitled to the provisions of clause (5) of this subdivision (b), the value of the security shall be determined in the manner provided in section 57, clause (h), of this act, and if the amount of such value shall be less than the amount of the claim the excess may be classified as an unsecured claim. The provisions of section 60 of this act shall apply to claims against the debtor in a proceeding under this section. For all purposes of this section any creditor may act in person, by an attorney at law, or by a duly authorized agent or committee: Provided further, That the judge shall scrutinize and may disregard any limitations of provisions of any depositary agreements, trust indentures, committee, or other authorizations affecting any creditor acting under this section and may enforce an accounting thereunder or restrain the exercise of any power which he finds to be unfair or not consistent with public policy and may limit any claims filed by such committee member or agent to the actual consideration paid therefor. The running of all periods of time prescribed by any other provisions of this act and by all statutes of limitations shall be suspended during the pendency of a proceeding under this section."

SEC. 3. Clause (10) of subdivision (c) of section 77B of such act of July 1, 1898, as amended, be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows: "(10) in addition to the provisions of section 11 of this act for the staying of pending suits against the debtor, may enjoin or stay the commencement or continuation of suits against the debtor until after final decree; and may, upon notice and for cause shown, enjoin or stay the commencement or continuance of any judicial proceeding to enforce any lien upon the estate of the debtor and any claim or right against any guarantor until after final decree; and."

SEC. 4. Section 77B of such act of July 1, 1898, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subdivision as follows:

"(q) Any extension of maturity dates or reduction of interest rate of outstanding securities or any obligation of the debtor, either through the issuance of new securities of any character or otherwise, pursuant to a plan of reorganization confirmed by the court in accordance with the provisions of this section, shall extend or reduce in the same manner and to the same extent the obligation of any guarantor who may have guaranteed, insured, or otherwise become liable for any such securities or obligation, or any part thereof, or bonds, participation certificates, or other obligations issued upon the security of the same, and a certified copy of the final decree or of an order confirming such plan of reorganization shall be sufficient evidence in any suit or proceeding brought against any such guarantor so liable that such extension or reduction has been confirmed."

SEC. 5. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the time of its approval, and shall apply to all pending proceedings in which a plan of reorganization has not been confirmed by the judge and only to such of the obligations or liabilities of any guarantor which have arisen or come into existence on or prior to the effective date of this act.

If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 7, line 6, strike out the words "shall take effect and be in force from and after the time of its approval, and."

Page 7, line 11, after the word "or", strike out the words "prior to the effective date of this act" and insert "before June 7, 1934."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEFINING JURISDICTION OF COAST GUARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12305, to extend the jurisdiction of the Coast Guard.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That commissioned, warrant, and petty officers of the Coast Guard are hereby empowered to make inquiries, examinations, inspections, searches, seizures, and arrests upon the high seas, and the navigable waters of the United States, it Territories, and possessions, except the Philippine Islands, for the prevention, detection, and suppression of violations of laws of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to the inland waters of the United States, it Territories, and possessions, other than the Great Lakes and the connecting waters thereof. For such purposes, such officers are authorized at any time to go on board of any vessel, subject to the jurisdiction, or to the operation of any law, of the United States, to address inquiries to those on board, to examine the ship's documents and papers, and to examine, inspect, and search the vessel and use all necessary force to compel compliance. When from such inquiries, examination, inspection, or search it shall appear that a breach of the laws of the United States rendering a person liable to arrest is being, or has been committed, by any person, such person shall be arrested or, if escaping to shore, shall be immediately pursued and arrested on shore, or other lawful and appropriate action shall be taken; or, if it shall appear that a breach of the laws of the United States has been committed so as to render such vessel, or the merchandise, or any part thereof, on board of, or brought into the United States by, such vessel, liable to forfeiture, or, so as to render such vessel liable to a fine or penalty and if necessary to secure such fine or penalty, such vessel shall be seized.

SEC. 2. The officers of the United States Coast Guard, insofar as they are engaged, pursuant to the authority contained in this act, in enforcing any law of the United States, shall—

(a) Be deemed to be acting as agents of the particular executive department or independent establishment charged with the administration of the particular law; and

(b) Be subject to all the rules and regulations promulgated by such department or independent establishment with respect to the enforcement of that law.

SEC. 3. The foregoing provisions shall be in addition to any powers conferred by law upon such officers, and not in limitation of any powers conferred by law upon such officers or any other officers of the United States.

SEC. 4. The term "inland waters" as used in this act shall not be construed to include harbors, bays, sounds, roadsteads, and like bodies of water along the coasts of the United States and shores of the Great Lakes.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 14, after the word "States", insert "its Territories, and possessions." Amend the title.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "that" and insert the word "than."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to define the jurisdiction of the Coast Guard."

FEDERAL REGISTER ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11337, to amend the Federal Register Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection so that a brief explanation can be made?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. I just want to state that this bill amending the Federal Register Act will have the force and effect of reducing expenditures. I think everyone of us wants to reduce expenses of the Government. All this bill does is to provide for the codification of all past rules and regulations instead of compilation of same.

Mr. TABER. I allowed the other bill to go through without objection, finally, and I find I have made a great mistake. I should have objected to it. Why does not the gentleman bring in a bill to repeal that law? [Applause.] That is the kind of bill we ought to have.

Mr. CELLER. If the gentleman will allow me, I think I can convince him that this amendment should pass, because, as I stated, it provides for codification instead of compilation. Compilation means that all those heads of the various bureaus and departments will have to dig up all their rules and regulations back from the time of beginning of government and then say to the Federal Register officials, "Here are all our rules and regulations. Publish them all." If they must codify them they have to point out to the codification board what of the rules and regulations are in full force and effect today. It gives a sort of résumé or quintessence of all past rules and regulations with obsolete, repealed, and changed regulations omitted. Instead of having huge volumes of compiled rules you will only have a few volumes of codified rules. In the interest of economy I cannot see how there can be any possible objection to reducing the amount of material that shall be published.

Mr. TABER. Why not bring in a bill to repeal it? That is what should be done.

Mr. CELLER. That is another question.

Mr. TABER. No. It is the question.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman might very well offer a bill of repeal and we will give it consideration, but while we still have the original bill on the statute books as the law, I think it should be properly amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

POST-OFFICE SITE AT HUDSON FALLS, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12076, for the exchange of land in Hudson Falls, N. Y., for the purpose of the post-office site.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey to the owner of the land abutting the easterly side of the post-office site at Hudson Falls, N. Y., the following-described piece or parcel of land forming a part of said post-office site:

Lying and being in the city of Hudson Falls, county of Washington, State of New York, and described as follows: Beginning at a point in the northerly side of Pearl Street distant easterly 145 feet from the intersection of the easterly side of Main Street with the northerly side of Pearl Street, said point being the southeast corner of the present post-office site; running thence along the northerly side of Pearl Street, south 81°57' west a distance of 10 feet to a point; thence north 5°48' west a distance of 36.67 feet to a point in the westerly side of lands now or formerly of D. S. Griffin; thence along lands of said Griffin south 21°12' east a distance of 37.62 feet to the point or place of beginning; in consideration of the conveyance to the United States of the following-described piece or parcel or land as an addition to the said post-office site:

Lying and being in the city of Hudson Falls, county of Washington, State of New York, and described as follows: Beginning at a point 85 feet north and 145 feet east of the intersection of the easterly side of Main Street with the northerly side of Pearl Street, said point being the northeast corner of the present post-office site; running thence north 81°57' east a distance of 12.59 feet to a point; thence south 5°48' east a distance of 46.18 feet to a point in the easterly side of the present post-office site; thence along the easterly side of said post-office site north 21°12' west a distance of 47.38 feet to the point or place of beginning.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF CODES OF CRIMINAL AND CIVIL PROCEDURE, CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1379, to amend section 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the Canal Zone, and section 542 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the Canal Zone, as amended (47 Stat. 886), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 103. A docket must be kept by the clerk of the district court denominated a criminal docket, in which he shall enter each criminal action and whatever proceedings are had therein, and a statement of the costs. The clerk shall receive, deposit, and account for all public moneys collected by him in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the receipt and disposition of moneys by clerks of the United States district courts in the continental United States exclusive of Alaska."

SEC. 2. That section 542 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone (47 Stat. 1004) be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 542. It shall be lawful for the clerk of the district court, referees, and commissioners appointed by the district court, the marshal, magistrates, constables, and other officers and persons hereinafter mentioned, together with their assistants and deputies, to demand and receive the hereinafter mentioned fees and no more; but all fees collected by officers drawing a regular salary or fixed compensation from the Government, except the clerk of the district court and the marshal, shall be paid over to the collector of the Panama Canal. The clerk of the district court and the marshal shall receive, deposit, and account for all public moneys collected by them in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the receipt and disposition of moneys by clerks of United States district courts and United States marshals, respectively, in the continental United States exclusive of Alaska."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 981 of title 4, Canal Zone Code, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1122), is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 981. It shall be lawful for the clerk of the district court, referees, and commissioners appointed by the district court, the marshal, magistrates, constables, and other officers and persons hereinafter mentioned, together with their assistants and deputies, to demand, and receive the hereinafter mentioned fees and no more. All fees collected by officers drawing a salary or compensation from the Government, other than those collected by the clerk of the district court and the marshal, shall be paid to the collector of the Panama Canal. The clerk of the district court and the marshal shall receive, deposit, and account for all public moneys collected by them in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the receipt and disposition of moneys by clerks of United States district courts and United States marshals, respectively, in the continental United States exclusive of Alaska.'

"SEC. 2. That section 843 of title 6, Canal Zone Code, is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 843. The clerk shall receive, deposit, and account for all public moneys collected by him in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the receipt and disposition of moneys by clerks of the United States district courts in the continental United States, exclusive of Alaska.' "

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended to read as follows: "An act to amend section 981 of title IV and section 843 of title VI of the Canal Zone Code."

SANDUSKY RIVER, FREMONT, OHIO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12135, providing for a preliminary examination of the Sandusky River, at Fremont, Ohio, with a view to control of its floods.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Sandusky River, at Fremont, Ohio, with a view to control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 33, sec. 701), the cost of such examination to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CROW TRIBE OF INDIANS, MONTANA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11218, to provide for the disposition of tribal funds now on deposit, or later placed to the credit of the Crow Tribe of Indians, Montana, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That tribal funds now on deposit or later placed to the credit of the Crow Tribe of Indians, Montana, may be used for per-capita payments, or such other purposes as may be designated by the tribal council and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and section 11 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 751), is hereby modified accordingly.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HATTIESBURG DIVISION, UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12162, to create an additional division of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, to be known as the Hattiesburg division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 28, sec. 170), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 90. The State of Mississippi is divided into two judicial districts to be known as the northern and southern districts of Mississippi. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of December 1923 in the counties of Alcorn, Attala, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Clay, Itawamba, Lee, Lowndes, Monroe, Oktibbeha, Pontotoc, Prentiss, Tishomingo, and Winston, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Benton, Calhoun, Carroll, De Soto, Grenada, Lafayette, Marshall, Montgomery, Panola, Tate, Tippah, Union, Webster, and Yalabusha, which shall constitute the western division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bolivar, Coahoma, Leflore, Quitman, Sunflower, Tallahatchie, and Tunica, which shall constitute the Delta division of said district. The terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Aberdeen on the first Mondays in April and October; for the western division, at Oxford on the third Monday in April and the first Monday in December; and for the Delta division, at Clarksdale on the fourth Monday in January and the third Monday in October. The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of December 1923 in the counties of Amite, Copiah, Franklin, Hinds, Holmes, Leake, Lincoln, Madison, Pike, Rankin, Simpson, Smith, Scott, Wilkinson, and Yazoo, which shall constitute the Jackson division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Adams, Claiborne, Humphreys, Issaquena, Jefferson, Sharkey, Warren, and Washington, which shall constitute the western division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Clarke, Jasper, Kemper, Lauderdale, Neshoba, Newton, Noxubee, and Wayne, which shall constitute the eastern division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of George, Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Pearl River, and Stone, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Covington, Forrest, Greene, Jefferson Davis, Jones, Lamar, Lawrence, Marion, Perry, and Walthall, which shall constitute the Hattiesburg division. Terms of the district court for the Jackson division shall be held at Jackson on the first Mondays in May and November; for the western division, at Vicksburg on the third Mondays in May and November; for the eastern division, at Meridian on the third Mondays in March and September; for the southern division, at Biloxi on the third Monday in February and the first Monday in June; and for the Hattiesburg division, at Hattiesburg on the second Mondays in April and October. The clerk of the court for each district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place in his district at which court is now required to be held, at which he shall not himself reside, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. The marshal for each of said districts shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place of holding court in his district."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TERM OF COURT AT DURHAM, N. C.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11926, to provide for a term of court at Durham, N. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fifth paragraph of section 98 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 28, sec. 179), is amended to read as follows:

"The terms of the district court for the middle district shall be held at Rockingham on the first Mondays in March and September; at Salisbury on the third Mondays in April and October; at Winston-Salem on the first Mondays in May and November; at Greensboro on the first Mondays in June and December; at Wilkesboro on the third Mondays in May and November; and at Durham on the first Monday in February and the fourth Monday in September: Provided, That the cities of Winston-Salem, Rockingham, and Durham shall each provide and furnish at its own expense a suitable and convenient place for holding the district court until Federal buildings containing quarters for the court are erected at such places."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WELLPINIT SCHOOL DISTRICT, WASHINGTON

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2849, to provide funds for cooperation with Wellpinit School District No. 49, Stevens County, Wash., for the construction of a public-school building to be available for Indian children of the Spokane Reservation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish some member of the committee would explain whether when the Government has invested this $75,000 to cooperate with this school district, Indian children thenceforth will be allowed to go to this school without having to pay tuition? The thought occurs to me that if this be the case, as is the case in other bills of this nature, that sometimes these matters result in rather good investments on the part of the Government.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is the plan, that the Government will benefit through the attendance of Indian children at these schools.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000 for the purpose of cooperating with Wellpinit School District No. 49, Stevens County, Wash., for the construction and equipment of a public-school building in the vicinity of Wellpinit, Wash.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money authorized to be appropriated herein shall be subject to the condition that the school maintained by said district in such building shall be available to all Indian children of the Spokane Indian Reservation on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL DISTRICT, HAYS, MONT.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3372, to provide funds for cooperation with the public-school district at Hays, Mont., for construction and improvement of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of our discussion in reference to Calendar No. 777, I wonder why it is necessary in this bill to provide that the Secretary of the Interior may continue to pay tuition.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The gentleman is not reading it correctly; at least that is not the interpretation we placed on it. This bill has a reimbursable feature in it. These bills were passed by the Senate. We did not see any reason to have this reimbursable feature in them, inasmuch as that is the policy in all these bills, but since it had been passed that way by the Senate we did not remove it from the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Beginning in line 8 of page 1 is a proviso reading:

That said schools shall be available to both white and Indian children without discrimination, except that tuition may be paid for Indian children attending in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. This bill provides that over a period of 30 years the Treasury shall be reimbursed for the $50,000 expended in this school district, and this will be done by having the Secretary diminish the amount of the payment for the Indian children at the schools.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Why should the language of this bill be different from the language in the bill we just passed?

Mr. COSTELLO. The other bill just provided for reimbursement.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. On the second page of the bill the gentleman will note that the money is to be returned either from tuition to be paid for Indian children or in such other manner as may be directed by the Secretary of the Interior. If there were other funds out of which the money could be paid they would be. The bill specifically says the Government must be reimbursed, but spreads it over a 30-year period.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the Hays Public School District, Hays, Mont., for construction and improvement of grade- and high-school buildings: Provided, That said schools shall be available to both white and Indian children without discrimination, except that tuition may be paid for Indian children attending in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That expenditures of moneys authorized hereby shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be reimbursed in not more than 30 years without interest, either through reducing the annual Federal tuition payments for the education of Indian pupils attending such school, by the acceptance of Indian pupils in such school without cost to the United States; or in such other manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct: And provided further, That plans and specifications shall be furnished by local or State authorities, without cost to the United States, and upon approval thereof by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, work shall proceed under the direction of local or State officials, payment therefor to be made monthly on the basis of work in place and upon vouchers approved by a responsible official of the Indian Service.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJUSTMENT OF BOUNDARY OF FORT MARION NATIONAL MONUMENT, FLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12220, to authorize the adjustment of the boundary of the Fort Marion National Monument, Fla., in the vicinity of Fort Marion Circle, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to adjust the boundary of the Fort Marion National Monument, Fla., in the vicinity of Fort Marion Circle, and for said purpose is authorized to convey to adjacent property owners, upon such terms and conditions as may be deemed satisfactory to him, title to such portions of monument land as he may determine to be no longer necessary for said monument, or he may accept in consideration therefor title to such portion of any adjacent property as he may deem desirable to satisfactorily adjust the boundary of said monument.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DONATION OF LAND AT NEWBURGH, N. Y., FOR AVIATION FIELD

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3737, to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire by donation land at or near Newburgh, in Orange County, N. Y., for aviation field, military, or other public purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by donation approximately 236 acres of land at or near Newburgh, in Orange County, N. Y., for aviation field, military, or other public purposes: Provided, That in the event the donor is unable to perfect title to any land tendered as a donation, condemnation of such land is authorized in the name of the United States, and payment of any and all awards for title to such land as is condemned, together with the cost of suit, shall be made by the donor.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF CUSTOMHOUSE AT SALEM, MASS., FROM JURISDICTION OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT TO DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10934, to authorize the transfer of the customhouse at Salem, Mass., from the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department to the Department of the Interior.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior the customhouse at Salem, Mass., and such adjoining property, both real and personal, as may now be under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire the above property for the purpose of establishing same as an historic site or otherwise preserving the buildings and grounds in connection therewith: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may retain sufficient space in the building for the necessary operation of the Bureau of Customs.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRESCRIBING A CONDITION PRECEDENT TO THE AWARD OF CERTAIN CONTRACTS BY FEDERAL AGENCIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12260, prescribing a condition precedent to the award of certain contracts by Federal agencies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. I object.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DEVELOPMENT OF NAVAL AIR BASE AT TONGUE POINT, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10129, authorizing an appropriation for the development of a naval air base at Tongue Point, Oreg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this seems to be a highly controversial bill. It authorizes the appropriation of a million and a half dollars immediately. The Navy Department has written an adverse report, and it seems to me this bill has no place on the Consent Calendar; therefore I object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I withhold my objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman it is true that the Navy Department has not recommended the favorable consideration of this bill, but after this opposition developed in the hearings, it was stated by the admiral of the Bureau of Aeronautics that he considered this point the secondary primary base on the Pacific Coast, and he further stated that just as soon as we were able to establish a primary base in the San Francisco Bay area he was heartily in accord with this proposition. Immediately thereafter the committee brought in a bill to establish a primary base in the San Francisco Bay area at Alameda. It is highly important that a secondary base be established at the mouth of the Columbia River, at the point indicated, which now belongs to the Government, having been given to the Government some years ago by the patriotic people of that community. This base will not be developed until the base at Alameda has been developed and later on during this session of Congress we expect to offer a bill providing for the development of the Alameda base. This is merely an authorization and will have to go to the Appropriations Committee for final determination as to whether or not the money will be made available.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. May I ask the gentleman a question? In a matter involving so much dispute and where there is so much money involved, why cannot the Naval Affairs Committee get a rule, then report this bill out and have it fully debated on the floor of the House?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is true we have introduced a resolution asking for a rule, but ordinarily these bills are placed on the Consent Calendar and submitted to the Members of the House in this manner first. Every Member of the committee after a week's hearing voted unanimously to report this bill, and I may say to the gentleman that this is an authorization for a naval base. There are only two places on the Pacific Coast where naval bases are located. One is at Seattle, Wash., and the other is at San Diego, Calif. It is highly important that the Columbia River Valley section and the San Francisco Bay area be adequately defended by some aviation activity.

Mr. DREWRY. Did I understand the gentleman to say that every member of the committee voted to report this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I mean every member who was present on that day.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Here is a statement of the Navy Department.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I know the Navy Department is against it.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. May I read just this one sentence?

As a result of its limited space and inferior operating conditions, in the opinion of the Navy Department, the Tongue Point site cannot be considered adequate in any respect for use as a fleet air base.

Does the gentleman think a bill with a report of that character should be brought up here and passed by unanimous consent in face of that report?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. May I say to the gentleman that we do not agree with the statement of the Navy Department, because the testimony was to the contrary. The testimony showed that this location is entirely adequate to take care of the character of Navy base we propose to build there. I want to say for that great section of Oregon out there that they have no national defense of this character whatsoever.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I know much about Tongue Point, and I am sincerely hopeful that my colleagues on this side of the aisle will not object to the bill. It is necessary and does not appropriate any money, being simply an authorization.

Tongue Point is on the Columbia River where there is no naval base today. There is no base from Puget Sound south for 1,000 miles. The Pacific Northwest is a territory with a big population and with vast and valuable interests. There should be a base located on the Columbia River at Tongue Point. I am well aware of the words contained in the report which the gentleman just read. We understand the prejudice which existed in the minds of the men who made that report. It is entirely unjustifiable.

Mr. Speaker, for twenty-odd years we have been contending and begging for a naval base at the mouth of the Columbia River. Just think of it, the Columbia River is the only major river in the United States that has no base at all to take care of the Navy.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I may say that my sympathies are with the Columbia River section, but let me ask the gentleman this question. The Congress has also passed a bill known as the Wilcox bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. But there will be a base established in that immediate vicinity.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is an entirely different proposition. One is for the Army and one is for the Navy. There are big bases all over the country for different military movements. One is for the Army to defend the coast and the other for the Navy to defend against an attack from the high seas.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. The city of Astoria years ago paid $100,000 for Tongue Point, this site, with the distinct understanding it would be improved by the Government of the United States for a naval base.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And I may say to the gentleman that there will be no effort on the part of those of us who are advocating the establishment of a naval base at Tongue Point until the primary base has got under way down at Alameda in San Francisco Bay.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that if the Naval Affairs Committee in the face of this opinion from the Navy Department is willing to undertake to go ahead with this base, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the statement just made by the gentleman from Georgia that no effort would be made to secure an appropriation for this purpose until the base now being constructed is completed——

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; I did not say that—under way.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman repeat what he did say?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The position we take, supported by the testimony of Admiral King, is——

Mr. UMSTEAD. Never mind the gentleman's position; I am asking for his statement.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will give it to the gentleman. That just as soon as the Alameda base is under way, which is to be a primary base, then we will go before the Appropriations Committee and ask them to consider the appropriation of $1,500,000 for a secondary base, which is to be at Tongue Point.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Why do you not wait until that happens before you bring the bill in?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Because we think the Alameda base will probably be taken care of pretty soon, because it is already on the calendar.

Mr. UMSTEAD. What will be the ultimate cost of the project authorized by this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not over $1,500,000.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, as much as I dislike to do so, in view of the fact this bill involves that amount of expenditure and in view of the further fact that your naval appropriations subcommittee is constantly confronted with authorizing legislation over which it has no control, and in view of the recommendation of the Navy Department, I shall have to object.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I withhold it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

The clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11369, to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee what will be the ultimate cost of the construction included in this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Now, Mr. Speaker, if my distinguished friend from North Carolina is to be consistent, after I give him the information, he will not interpose any objection to this bill.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I shall reserve the right to determine my consistency for myself; I am asking the gentleman now for information which he is supposed to have.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. This is a departmental measure, recommended by the administration. This is a replacement program of ships known in the Navy as the auxiliary fleet. The program extends over a period of approximately 10 years and will cost, when all these ships have been replaced, consisting of 135 or 140, approximately $175,000,000, over that period.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Minnesota withhold his objection?

Mr. KVALE. I will not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

LEYDEN INTERNATIONAL BUREAU

The clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12222, to permit the temporary entry into the United States, under certain conditions, of alien participants and officials of the Leyden International Bureau, attending an international conference to be held in the United States in 1936.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill what the Leyden International Bureau is.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this is an organization of young men who seek to link together the youth movements of the world in the cause of international peace and goodwill through the means of friendships resulting from a system of correspondence between young people of different nationalities and through mutual understandings of conditions resulting from such correspondence and from intermediate group meetings, and from annual international conferences.

This has nothing to do with this idea that they will not serve in time of war or anything of that sort. This bill is along the lines of the bill for the jamboree of the Boy Scouts and similar legislation where we gave them authority to come in without payment of the limited fees.

The bill was unanimously reported by the committee, and there is plenty of precedent for it where organizations of this kind have been given similar permission. They are only permitted to come in temporarily and will have to leave the country after they have had their convention or meeting.

Mr. FADDIS. How many of them will come in?

Mr. McCORMACK. From the information I have, about 200.

Mr. FADDIS. How long will they be here?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not imagine they will be here more than 2 or 3 weeks. The meeting is to be less than 1 week, but I assume they will be here perhaps 2 or 3 weeks.

Mr. FADDIS. Is there any limitation on how long they may be here or where they will go?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, yes; the administration of the measure limits it. So my friend may understand, I will state to the gentleman that I introduced the bill for a very distinguished gentleman, who is a former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Henry H. Bond.

I introduced the bill for my friend who was formerly commissioner of corporations of Massachusetts—a very fine gentleman. He was asked when he was before the committee whether this was any pacifist organization, and he said, "Absolutely no."

Mr. BLANTON. Our colleague from Massachusetts has such a splendid record on Americanism that I would hesitate to oppose any bill that he might introduce because I think we can safely depend on him. But I want to ask him if it is not a fact that we have reached the conclusion that the people of the United States are going to have to look to themselves to insure their own peace, and not depend on other nations of the world? Even when we have treaties with them they break the treaties when they get ready.

So we have to depend on ourselves and let other nations alone.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know; I am sure my friend from Texas and I look eye to eye. But here is the way I look at it: We have to look to our policies in the light of existing circumstances.

Mr. BLANTON. I think just now when such a big country as France has been taken over by Communists, and the people are sending their valuable belongings out of the country, we had better let these people of foreign nations stay at home. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

CLAIMS OF THE ASSINIBOINE INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9144) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INSPECTION OF VESSELS PROPELLED BY INTERNAL-COMBUSTION ENGINES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12419) to apply laws covering steam vessels to seagoing vessels of 300 gross tons and over propelled by internal-combustion engines.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That existing laws covering the inspection of steam vessels be, and they are hereby, made applicable to sea-going vessels of 300 gross tons and over propelled in whole or in part by internal-combustion engines to such extent and upon such conditions as may be required by the regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steam Vessels, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That this act shall not apply to any vessel engaged in fishing, oystering, clamming, crabbing, or any other branch of the sea-food industry: Provided further, That as to licenses required for masters and engineers operating vessels propelled by internal-combustion engines operating exclusively in the district covering the Hawaiian Islands, said masters and engineers shall be under the jurisdiction of the hull and boiler inspectors having jurisdiction over said waters, who shall make diligent inquiry as to the character, merits, and qualifications, and knowledge and skill of any master or engineer applying for a license. If the said inspectors shall be satisfied from personal examination of the applicant and from other proof submitted that the applicant possesses the requisite character, merits, qualifications, knowledge, and skill, and is trustworthy and faithful, they shall grant him a license for the term of 5 years to operate such vessel under the limits prescribed in the license.

SEC. 2. The term "seagoing vessels" as used in the preceding section shall be construed to mean vessels which in the usual course of their employment proceed outside the line dividing the inland waters from the high seas as designated and determined under the provisions of section 2 of the act of February 19, 1895.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIMITATION OF SHIPOWNERS' LIABILITY

The Clerk called the bill H. R. 9969, relative to limitation of shipowners' liability.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERSTATE REFERENCE BUREAU

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 481, to make available to Congress the services and data of the Interstate Reference Bureau.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and ask the sponsor of the joint resolution to explain it. I doubt whether any of the Members understand why it is necessary or advisable to spend $40,000 for the maintenance of this Interstate Reference Bureau.

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, the Interstate Reference Bureau was organized several years ago to bring together the various members of the State legislatures. I understand about 7,500 members of State legislatures throughout the 48 States are members of this organization. I think the secretaries of the different States and various other State officials belong to it. The Spellman Foundation has recently given $500,000 for the erection of a building in Chicago in which this and the municipal councils throughout the country shall coordinate their efforts toward better government. This merely brings the United States in and makes available to Congress all of the information collected by the representatives of these 48 States, information in regard to taxes or to any law any one of the 48 States has passed. That information is compiled and collected and then sent out to the legislatures or to their committees when they desire the information. This makes available to Congress these facilities.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Might it not result also in the coordination of laws among the several States, tending to uniformity?

Mr. SECREST. Yes; and to stop overlapping taxation in order that greater economies may be effected in the various States, so that the States may get together in cooperative agreements or compacts. Through this the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey already have standing committees, known as coordination committees, to work out legislative problems common to themselves. Indiana, Illinois, and Kentucky have joined together through this organization in a compact in respect to legislation regarding liquor taxes in those States. I think the saving will be greater than any expenditure that we may make.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. HOLMES. Is there any effort in this legislation to set up another dictatorial bureau which will undertake to dictate to the States, the form of legislation which shall be enacted by the States?

Mr. SECREST. No; this bureau is set up by the 48 States themselves, and today many of the State legislatures appropriate to sustain their proportion of the cost of the organization. This belongs to the 48 States themselves, and we merely make available what they do with their money to the United States Government, or to any Member of Congress, or to any branch of the Government. Last year practically every branch of the Government attempted to get this information, but the expense prohibits it unless we cooperate with the association.

Mr. HOLMES. Is there any provision in law providing any Federal building with headquarters for this organization in Washington?

Mr. SECREST. None at all.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WAIVING VISA FEES, ETC.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H. R. 12222) to permit the temporary entry into the United States under certain conditions of alien participants and officials of the Leyden International Bureau attending an international conference to be held in the United States in 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That alien participants in the annual international conference of the Leyden International Bureau, its officials and executives, who are accredited members of delegations to said conference of the Leyden International Bureau to be held in the United States in 1936, all of whom are nonimmigrants, if otherwise admissible into the United States under the immigration laws, shall be exempted from the payment of the tax of $8 prescribed by section 2 of the Immigration Act of 1917, and exempted from the fees prescribed by law to be collected in connection with executing an application for a visa and visaing the passport or other travel document of an alien for the purpose of entering the United States as a nonimmigrant, and such aliens shall not be required to present official passports issued by the governments to which they owe allegiance: Provided, That aliens shall be in possession of official identity cards issued by their own government or issued by the officers of the Leyden International Bureau indicating their status as members of said bureau and nationality, and duly visaed without charge by American consular officers abroad: Provided further, That such aliens shall comply with regulations not inconsistent with the foregoing provisions which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor and Secretary of State: And provided further, That nothing herein shall relieve an alien from being required to obtain a gratis nonimmigration visa if coming to the United States as a nonimmigrant, or an immigration visa if coming to the United States as an immigrant.

SEC. 2. That such aliens shall be permitted the free entry of their personal effects, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SIXTEENTH TRIENNIAL CONVENTION OF WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill (S. 3950) to aid in defraying the expenses of the Sixteenth Triennial Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to be held in this country in June 1937, was passed, and that the same may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NAVAL AIR STATION AT ALAMEDA, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4020, to authorize the acquisition of lands in the city of Alameda, county of Alameda, State of California, as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to find out from someone what the cost of the project authorized by this bill will be.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. The ultimate cost will probably be fifteen or sixteen million dollars.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Then, Mr. Speaker, if that is correct, I think this House should have more information than it can obtain from a hearing on the Consent Calendar, and I shall object.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I shall be glad to withhold the objection.

Mr. MAAS. The committee has held extensive hearings. The bill has already passed the Senate. This is considered one of the most important defense projects in the whole country at the present time. We have developed new flying boats to be used as patrol boats, and we must have a base for them in the San Francisco area. It has high priority in the Navy Department, and we were all convinced of the necessity of it. I hope the gentleman will permit this bill to be passed.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not doubt the correctness of a single statement which the gentleman has made, but I do not think it is good practice to bring these bills in here carrying large appropriations and pass them on the Consent Calendar, and then when it comes to the Appropriations Committee we are told that we can do nothing but provide the funds or else we will thwart the will of the Congress of the United States.

I shall therefore have to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I will be glad to withhold the objection if the gentleman wishes to make a statement.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman intends to ultimately object?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the circumstances, nothing would be availed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement relative to the ultimate cost which was referred to, which is the amount that will undoubtedly be spent over a number of years. The Navy Department has plans for three major naval air stations on the Pacific coast, two of which have been established, one north and one south, but nothing for the San Francisco Bay area. The other day, when we were talking about the construction of two battleships, a great deal was said about the development of the Air Service, and that is what this is for. It is for aircraft. This measure has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, and I trust the gentleman will not object.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I hope the gentleman understands that there is nothing personal whatsoever in my attitude, but I have faced this so many times in our committee that I believe it is bad practice. I do not think it is the proper way to bring in a bill carrying large expenditures of money, and I think it is my duty under the circumstances to object, Mr. Speaker, and I will have to do it.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR WEST VIRGINIA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2456, to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAMSAY. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will withhold the objection for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary without objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that all bills which we have here providing for additional judges have been approved by the judicial council.

Mr. RAMSAY. In addition to that, it has been twice recommended by the judicial council. Judge Baker, of the northern district of West Virginia, appeared before a subcommittee composed of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] and myself, and stated that it was absolutely necessary that they have some aid in West Virginia. He said also that within the next 10 years they would have over a thousand condemnation proceedings; that during the last summer he had had no vacation whatever and had actually worked in his office on Sundays. This does not provide an extra judge at all. This does not provide that there be a permanent extra judge. The judge in the southern district was in the hospital for 6 months. He is about ready to retire. At least he has reached that age and can retire whenever he desires. This bill only provides that in case one of those judges retires, the new judge appointed will take his place and during the present time will be able to aid Judge Baker in particular in the northern part of the State. I know that the judge is overworked. I know they need this extra judge in West Virginia.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSAY. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. What necessity is there for two districts in a small State like West Virginia?

Mr. RAMSAY. West Virginia is not so small as the gentleman might think.

Mr. KNUTSON. Comparatively speaking, it is quite small. It is not as small as Rhode Island, but it is quite small.

Mr. RAMSAY. There are States not as large as one congressional district in West Virginia which have two judges. West Virginia needs two judges. They have a tremendous amount of business. If the gentleman will look at the report he will see.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSAY. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. What is the nature of the 1,000 condemnation proceedings anticipated in the future?

Mr. RAMSAY. It is to acquire property in the public parks, in the Monongahela Reservation, and also the building of the Tigers Valley Dam, which is quite an expensive project, which is costing $15,000,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS TRUST FUND BOARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12353, to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall object, I cannot guess these changes in legislation approved by the Library Committee. This bill states that it should be amended by striking out the first seven words of the last paragraph of section 2, to wit, "Should any gift or bequest so provide." I cannot guess what is in the rest of the paragraph. The Ramseyer rule has not only been disregarded, but has been flouted by this committee; and for this reason I object.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS, MINNESOTA

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 415, to carry out the intention of Congress with reference to the claims of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota against the United States.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the author of this joint resolution tell us whether this matter has not been brought before the courts and the courts determined the rights of the Indians in connection therewith?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I may say to my colleague, that under a decision of the Supreme Court the Indians do not have a right to appeal directly to the Supreme Court as was the original intent of Congress. This decision of the Court was handed down since Congress enacted the original jurisdictional bill. I think the Indian Bureau feels this legislation to be necessary to a safeguarding of the Indians' interests. As it now stands they have no right of appeal, and they should have the right of appeal.

Mr. COSTELLO. Can they not get before the Supreme Court on a writ of certiorari?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not a lawyer, but it is felt by attorneys and by the Indian Bureau that this legislation is desirable.

Mr. COSTELLO. I think the report contains a statement to the effect that the Bureau of the Budget is opposed to the bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. They, of course, are opposed to almost everything.

Mr. COSTELLO. What amount of money is involved in this claim?

Mr. KNUTSON. No one knows. I do not think a great deal. My statement is based upon a decision in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia several years ago when a claim of the Chippewas was tried but has not been appealed. Practically all the claims they have, I would say, are of the same order.

Mr. COSTELLO. The principal thing involved in this bill is whether Congress has the right to legislate regarding tribal funds. Is not that correct?

Mr. KNUTSON. A question of law is involved.

Mr. COSTELLO. Had not the court decided that the Congress did have authority over those funds whether they were tribal funds or individual funds?

Mr. KNUTSON. That is one of the cases I just cited, but attorneys for the Indians take the other position; and the Indians will not be satisfied until the Supreme Court has decided on it. We have at the present time the opinion of only the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas by the Special Jurisdictional Act approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 555), the claims of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota against the United States were referred to the Court of Claims "with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party as in other cases", it being the intention that both parties should have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court; and

Whereas the Supreme Court has since decided that notwithstanding such a provision there is no right of appeal, in view of the Judicial Code, as amended, unless the Jurisdictional Act specifically provides that the Supreme Court shall review a case on appeal anything in the Judicial Code to the contrary notwithstanding: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the claims of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota under the said Jurisdictional Act of May 14, 1926, shall be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal from the Court of Claims, anything in the Judicial Code, or amendments thereto, notwithstanding: Provided, That in any case heretofore decided by the Court of Claims said appeal shall be perfected by either party to the controversy within 1 year from the passage of this joint resolution, and an appeal shall be taken in all cases hereafter decided by the Court of Claims within 3 months from and after the date final judgment or decree is entered therein in the Court of Claims: And be it further provided, That in determining the claims of said Indians the Court shall construe the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L. 642), and all agreements entered into thereunder, as contractual obligations binding alike upon the United States and the Indians, and any appropriation or disposal of any of the property therein dealt with in disregard of the terms of said act and said agreements as a violation thereof.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 14, strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BERN CONVENTION OF 1886

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 569, to authorize an appropriation for the expenses of participation by the United States in a conference at Brussels to revise the Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works concluded at Bern, September 9, 1886, and revised at Rome, June 2, 1928.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this seems to be one of these habitual conferences in which we are continuously participating over in some foreign country. Although its purpose may be perfectly laudable, I cannot yet say whether it is or not. I wish the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] would explain the purpose of the joint resolution.

Mr. BLOOM. For the last 50 years the United States has been trying to join the Bern Convention which is for the protection of literary and artistic property. A bill passed the Senate at the last session, or the first part of this session, with this idea in view; and the same provision is in the copyright bill before the House Committee on Patents. It is a very worthy thing and is for the protection of authors, composers, and publishers in this country. The United States has been trying to join this convention for 50 years.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It seems these artists, composers, and publishers are pretty well protected when they can come into a little village in my district up on the tip of the thumb, as we call it, and insist upon a little country orchestra, gotten together more or less for the edification of the people in the district who hold little informal dances on Saturday night and are charged $40 or $50 a year to play their music. I carried a musician's union card for a number of years.

Mr. BLOOM. I remember that card.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am sympathetic up to a certain point with the composers, but as a musician I think I helped more to disseminate their art than they are doing themselves. I think encouragement should be given within the confines of the United States to distribute these works of art whether they are in the form of music, poetry, or whatnot, among our people.

Mr. BLOOM. That is what this bill does.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And I cannot see where a conference over in Brussels helps this situation.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield to a base-drum virtuoso?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. Does the gentleman think that any point should be made of carrying out these conferences which invariably exchange ideas and good will and are fruitful and helpful to all participants?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I was in hearty agreement with a bill which we passed this afternoon with reference to a conference down at Buenos Aires, having in mind the perpetuation of peace between North and South America. I think we should participate in that, but I wonder if this conference is really worth the money we will have to invest.

Mr. BLOOM. May I explain to the gentleman what this bill provides?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it occurs to me that every time we invite foreigners to come over to this country for a conference, such as the Leyden International Bureau Conference, there are always some Members of the House who make a big fuss about and say we should not permit foreigners to come in. How can we with good grace be permitted to send our people to foreign countries to participate in conferences in those countries if we are going to raise such a fuss every time it is suggested that foreigners come to this country?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, may I say that this bill provides just the opposite to what the gentleman from Michigan is talking about. This is a conference to give to the composers in this country the same right that the foreign composers get in this country. In other words, a reciprocal right to the authors and composers. It has nothing to do with copyrights. The copyright law is our own law, but this is merely to give to our own people, our writers, authors, and composers, the same rights in foreign countries that we give foreign composers in this country. This bill endeavors to protect their rights all over the world and has nothing to do with the copyrights.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the United States in the conference to convene at Brussels, Belgium, for the purpose of revising the Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works, concluded at Bern, September 9, 1886, and revised at Rome, June 2, 1928, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic, reporting, and other services by contract, if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses; purchases of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and maps; stationery; official cards; entertainment; printing and binding; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF BIG BLUE RIVER

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12370) to authorize a preliminary examination of Big Blue River and its tributaries with a view to the control of their floods.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of Big Blue River, an affluent of the Kansas River, and its tributaries with a view to the control of their floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations hertofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES IN COMMEMORATION OF SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11533) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, the G. A. R. and the United Confederate Veterans, in their conventions last year at Amarillo, Tex., and Grand Rapids, Mich., unanimously decided to hold a reunion at Gettysburg, and they want to have these 50-cent pieces coined in commemoration of that event.

Mr. TABER. How much is it going to cost?

Mr. HAINES. It is not going to cost the Government one penny.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there have been several bills on the calendar for the coinage of 50-cent pieces, and two bills, I believe, to change the design of 50-cent pieces. Now, do not let anyone be fooled with respect to these 50-cent pieces. This is just a racket for the purpose of raising money in order to put on the celebration, and we had better understand that is the purpose back of the coining of this money. In some instances they become rackets because of the fact that they come back here and ask us to even change the design. Why? Not because they are not satisfied with the original design, but because it results in making the coin more rare. It makes the coin more rare, thus enhancing its value and it can be sold for more money, and thereby raise a great deal more money to put into the coffers of the committee putting on the celebration.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a worthy cause, and I dislike to object to the bill. I considered it was my duty to object to these bills. I have had a barrage of protests leveled at me for objecting to bills that I thought I should object to and in a weak moment I consented to let one of these bills go through, and to be consistent, I let others go through. But I think we should understand that the only purpose of these bills is to raise money to put on these celebrations, and not to commemorate any particular event.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think what the gentleman says is true; but this bill is meritorious. It does not cost the Government any money. Of course, I recognize the gentleman's viewpoint, but I think a celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, together with a reunion of the forces of the North and South, is an event which would entirely warrant and justify the passage of this particular bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think if any event does justify it, this one does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint 50,000 silver 50-cent pieces, such coins to be of standard size, weight, and fineness of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the model for master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. Coins commemorating the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg shall be issued at par, and only upon the request of a committee of not less than eight persons duly authorized by the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania.

SEC. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by the committee duly authorized in section 2, and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg.

SEC. 4. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coinage or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for the security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

SEC. 5. The coins authorized herein shall be issued in such numbers and at such times as they may be requested by the committee, duly authorized by said Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, only upon payment to the United States of the face value of such coins.

With the following committee amendment: On page 2, line 20, strike out all of section 5.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 567. Joint resolution to provide an additional appropriation for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1936.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3842. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Territorial Government of Wisconsin, and to assist in the celebration of the Wisconsin Centennial during the year of 1936;

S. 4229. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of Bridgeport, Conn., as a city; and

S. J. Res. 231. Joint resolution to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Swedes in Delaware.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 3952) entitled "An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Lee", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BAILEY, Mr. BURKE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8599) entitled "An act to provide for a change in the designation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, to create a marine casualty investigation board and increase efficiency in administration of the steamboat-inspection laws, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. COPELAND, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. WHITE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10267) entitled "An act to provide for adjusting the compensation of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, assistant superintendents at large, assistant superintendent in charge of car construction, chief clerks, assistant chief clerks, and clerks in charge of sections in offices of division superintendents in the Railway Mail Service, to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. FRAZIER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO LIMIT THE FEDERAL DEBT IN PEACETIME

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert a short statement of my own in the RECORD as an extension of remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, following up the suggestion recently made by Myron H. Bent, Washington correspondent for the Brooklyn Times-Union, I am today introducing a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution to limit the debt of the United States in peacetime. The advisability and absolute necessity of such an amendment is apparent to all who give any thought to the future of our country.

If we include contingent liabilities, the Federal debt has been doubled since March 4, 1933. John Marshall said, "The power to tax is the power to destroy." We are laying the foundation for self-destruction through the building of a gigantic debt structure with only the sky as the limit. The limit of our national debt in peacetime should be around twenty billions, based on the population shown in decennial census, the sum of twenty billions being fixed on the basis of the 1930 census, thus allowing an increase in debt as the population increases.

Under my proposed amendment every appropriation measure would have to be accompanied by a tax bill whenever the limit is exceeded. Such an amendment as is proposed would be a godsend to Members of Congress, saving them from the importunities of organized minorities. Many of the projects for which we now appropriate huge sums would not have a ghost of a show if the proposal for an appropriation had to be accompanied by the necessary tax-raising measure. Tax bills do not attract votes.

The proposed amendment would make the Government's credit foolproof. It could not be threatened with debt. The debt at the present time could not be increased. It would put a brake on any more wild Government spending and thus protect unborn generations. It would do more to force a return to sanity than any other one measure that I know of.

We should have another amendment to the Constitution making the President ineligible for reelection with one term of 6 years. We now have the spectacle of a President making a frantic effort to reelect himself through the lavish expenditure of the people's money. These two amendments would anchor constitutional government in a safe harbor.

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 525) to enable the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission, established for the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution of the United States by the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the preparation and completion of plans for a comprehensive observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution of the United States", approved August 23, 1935 (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), is authorized and directed to prepare and publish certain historical and educational material, as specified in the approved plans of the Commission, for distribution to libraries, schools, and organized study groups, as well as to Constitution State and local commissions, and individuals.

SEC. 2. (a) The Commission is authorized and directed to (1) prepare and provide for the general distribution of photolithographic copies of a painting of the "Signing of the Constitution" accepted by the Commission; and (2) prepare reproductions of approved portraits of the signers and the history of the Constitution, and of its time, together with their facsimile signatures and appropriate biographical sketches, for distribution to libraries, schools, organized study groups, Constitution State and local commissions, and other proper sources.

(b) To carry out the provisions of this section, the Commission is authorized to have printing, binding, photolithography, and other work done at establishments other than the Government Printing Office, as provided for in section 12 of the Printing Act, approved January 12, 1895 (U. S. C., title 44, sec. 14), as amended by the act of July 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 475): Provided, That nothing in this act shall preclude the furnishing of the necessary number of copies of all such publications for the use of the Library of Congress, and for international exchange, as required by the United States Code, title 44, sections 139, 139a, and 228.

SEC. 3. The Commission, in order to execute the functions vested in it by law, is authorized to employ, without regard to the civil-service laws, and fix the compensation, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, of a historian and such assistants as may be needed, for stenographic, clerical, and expert services, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

SEC. 4. The Commission is authorized to prepare, and provide for the general distribution of, suitable medals and certificates for commemorating the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution.

SEC. 5. In carrying out the provisions of this resolution or any other provision of law relating to the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution, the Commission is authorized to procure advice and assistance from any governmental agency, including the services of technical and other personnel in the executive departments and independent establishments, and to procure advice and assistance from and cooperate with individuals and agencies, public or private. The Superintendent of Documents shall make available to the Commission the facilities of his office for the distribution of publications, posters, and other material herein authorized, if so requested.

SEC. 6. The Commission shall have the same privilege of free transmission of official mail matter as other agencies of the United States Government.

SEC. 7. The members and employees of the Commission shall be allowed actual traveling, subsistence, and other expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties.

SEC. 8. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution and such sum when appropriated shall remain available until expended.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, this bill originally called for an appropriation of $350,000 for a celebration that is to last 2 years, starting September 17, 1937, which is the anniversary of the signing of the Constitution, and ending on April 30, 1939, which is the anniversary of the inauguration of Washington.

This sum was determined upon at a meeting at the White House held a short while ago, over which the President presided. Practically the entire committee was present, including the Republican and Democratic members, and the committee arrived at the amount of $350,000 as the proper sum to defray all expenses.

I want to impress upon the Members that ultimately this is not going to cost the Government of the United States one cent. After all the expenditures have been made there will be a profit in the Treasury of the United States of from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000.

This celebration will be along practically the same lines as the bicentennial celebration. It will be educational and the data will go into the schools, colleges, churches, patriotic societies, and all other organizations throughout the country.

Let me call your attention to one little matter that has recently come to my attention. I have heard many people say, "What is the use of writing about the Constitution when everyone knows all about the Constitution, because it has been reproduced and printed so often?" I have here a little book that was called to my attention by a Member of the House, who stated that you could get all the information you wanted on the Constitution from this book for the sum of 10 cents. I bought the book and looked it over and had it checked and rechecked, and from the very first word in the preamble to the Constitution mistakes were found. Let me read you what this book contains in the way of mistakes. A check of this publication against the original text and against known facts has disclosed that it contains about 1,497 deviations from the original document in capitalization, punctuation, and spelling, as well as approximately 40 erroneous statements and descriptions.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I shall be delighted to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman tell us whether the book on the Constitution gotten out by the Rockefeller Foundation is correct?

Mr. BLOOM. No; it is not correct.

I have here a very small card which contains the preamble. If you will examine this card, you can see how many mistakes there are in respect of the preamble to the Constitution.

Without going into that any further, I make the statement now that you cannot bring one book on the Constitution to this Commission in which we cannot find mistakes.

Referring again to the little book which I have here, I may say that if you would like to have a copy of it, as corrected, I have brought a number of copies over here, and I should like to have you take one of them home and read it so you may see the errors that were found.

Now, here are some of these mistakes. On page 31 is a picture of President Roosevelt delivering his message to the Seventy-ninth Congress. This is the Seventy-fourth Congress.

On page 19 of the book there is a picture of the Robert Morris house in Philadelphia. It says that it was the first official Presidential residence, and that Washington lived there from 1793 to 1794.

Let us see what the mistakes are. It was not the first official Presidential residence, but the third. Washington occupied it from 1790 to 1797, and this is not a picture of the house. [Laughter.] I want you to see how ridiculous this is. And yet a Member of the House told me that he could get all the information he wanted on the Constitution from this 10-cent book.

This book is published by one of the largest publishing houses in this country. From the beginning of the book up to the last page you will find the equivalent of 1,500 mistakes.

Now, what your Commission is trying to do is to publish the Constitution and the history of the Constitution as it really took place. It is educational in every respect and this money we are asking for is merely for educational work.

As I said before, it will not cost the Government one penny but will make a profit for the Government.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I will.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I could not hear what the gentleman said in the beginning. Does the gentleman offer an amendment reducing the amount?

Mr. BLOOM. No; $200,000 is the amendment that was read into the bill instead of $350,000.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second because I wanted to ask the gentleman from New York a question. The first question is not relevant to this particular book, but I saw in the newspaper a while ago that the gentleman stated that the first shot of the Revolution was fired at Concord. I am wondering if the gentleman is accurate about that.

Mr. BLOOM. Does not the gentleman think I am having trouble enough in getting this passed without bringing that up? [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. I notice on the back cover of the book there are two stars. I suppose that is a two-star print. If it is, I am wondering whether it would not be a good idea to have this work done at the Government Printing Office, and yet paragraph (b) of section 2 provides that the work may be done at other printing establishments than the Government Printing Office.

Mr. BLOOM. The reason that was inserted is because it is necessary to get out all this material very rapidly. Two years ago the House passed an appropriation for the publishing of additional volumes of the writings of George Washington. We have not been able to get the Government Printing Office to print any additional volumes beyond the eleventh volume in 2 years, and unless we can get our printing done quickly and not be dependent upon the Government Printing Office, it will delay us a year or two and the celebration will be over before we get any printing done. That is why that is put in the bill. We ask for bids for the printing and have it done wherever we can get it done cheapest; if the Government cannot give it to us, we are entitled to go to other places.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Then in section 3 on page 3 of the bill there is a provision that ignores the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923 insofar as the appointment of a historian and such assistants as may be needed for stenographic, clerical, and expert services. Would it not be a good idea to have some regard for those acts?

Mr. BLOOM. It would delay us. I am trying to avoid getting out a book like this I have been illustrating. We must issue a book that is correct and we must have special people to do that work, and you cannot do it with the ordinary people that the civil-service people would send you.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman please tell us how it is not going to cost any money?

Mr. BLOOM. In your time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. There is no way of reckoning exactly what it will bring in. Of course, the more money you give me to publish the books, the more money you will get back. I venture to say that the publication of the stamps will bring us in a lot of money. They will bring in more than the bicentennial stamps brought in, and they brought in more than a million and a half profit. I do not know what they will do after today, but they will sell perhaps three or four million of these books. The profit is tremendous.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. This bill was before the House earlier in the afternoon.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The bill had the considered attention of the committee reporting it before it was reported?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The bill as originally introduced provided for an appropriation of $350,000?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman tried to get the bill enacted by unanimous consent of the House for $350,000, with the understanding that that was the absolute minimum amount necessary to do what the gentleman contemplates doing. The House will not agree to that. The gentleman now has reduced the amount by $150,000, in an hour, and says that he can get through with the $200,000.

Mr. BLOOM. Just correct that in regard to that "get through." I did not say that we can get through with $200,000.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what I am getting at.

Mr. BLOOM. Please do not say that I said it.

Mr. MICHENER. Then, the gentleman does not contemplate that this is to be the last appropriation. Because he could not get $350,000 he is coming in now under suspension of the rules and asking for $200,000, to get the nose of the camel under the tent, and later he will be back asking Congress for the remainder, $150,000, or possibly $350,000 more. Is that correct?

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman wants me to publish all the material in the same way that he asked us for during the Bicentennial Celebration—and I believe I convinced the gentleman on the floor at that time when he asked a similar question that you will only get what you pay for. That is all you are going to get. If you want $200,000 worth of celebration, that is what you will get. If you want a $350,000 celebration, you will get that, and if you do not want to appropriate and you want no celebration, that is what you will get.

Mr. MICHENER. The point I am making is——

Mr. BLOOM. I know the point the gentleman has in mind. He thinks that I have been dickering. I did not dicker at all. If there was any dickering, it was done by somebody else and not by me. You are going to get just what you pay for, and you have always gotten 100 cents on the dollar, and the gentleman admitted that himself.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; from the gentleman we generally get 150 cents on the dollar, but I want it distinctly understood that the gentleman is not getting his bill through here today with the House understanding that we are going to put this celebration on for the dickered amount. The gentleman is just getting a start, and he will be back here later for the rest of it. We might as well understand that.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman will speak for himself and I will speak for myself at the proper time. If the gentleman does not want to vote for it, that is his business.

I think the gentleman's remarks are entirely uncalled for.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I notice in this typewritten notice attached to the bottom of page 50 the following statement: "The Liberty Bell did not proclaim the tidings." That is the tidings of the ratification or adoption of the Declaration of Independence, I assume?

Mr. BLOOM. That is page 50. Page 50 is the Liberty Bell.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Is this a sort of debunking process? Are you going through the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States and strip it of all its traditions that have come down through time?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, whose time is the gentleman using?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is using his own time, the Chair assumes.

Mr. BLOOM. No; the gentleman asked me to yield, and I said "on your time." I stopped long ago.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is the gentleman using my time?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; and I have been using it right along.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not yield any more time to the gentleman.

Mr. BLOOM. That is the gentleman's business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already yielded 17 minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am afraid that nobody got my suggestion except the reporter, but I hope it will be in the RECORD.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield any further time.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to what has just taken place on the floor as an illustration of what the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] called dickering. We have a very serious matter before the Congress. The gentleman is proposing in the beginning $350,000. Somebody, he says not he, dickered to get the thing started today with $200,000. Then the gentleman on the floor of the House, by a little art, succeeded in getting control of the time in opposition to the bill and used 17 of the 20 minutes which might be used when the membership of the House and the sincere, honest, well-meaning gentleman from Illinois, who had charge of the time and did not know he was yielding his time away. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] says that the more money you give him the more he will bring back to the country. If we give him $200,000, he will bring more. If you pursue that kind of tactics, possibly that might be brought about, but personally I do not like to see it when we are dealing with so serious a matter as the Constitution. When this matter was up in the first instance I did not oppose it, but I did call attention to just what is taking place today, that we are starting another celebration to go over a period of 2 years. It might be a good thing, but do not get any idea now that you are ending it, because the gentleman will be here asking for more money so that he may go out and get more money. But I notice that he always asks for more money in order that he may get more money. It seems to me rather strange that the Congress should be asked to appropriate money to the gentleman under those circumstances. There will be no opposition to this. Why? Because we all believe in the Constitution; because we do not like to do anything that is going to interfere, but in these days of economy we had better be a little careful about statues and about celebrations of this type or any other type telling us about the Constitution. We had better pay closer attention to observing the Constitution by living up to the spirit of what the old document stands for rather than spending money to determine whether the old document has the original semicolons, commas, and periods, which some of the forefathers and framers suggested in the beginning.

I am not going to take any more time. Everybody will vote for this bill, but let me call attention to the fact that the official objectors prevented the passage of the bill carrying $350,000, and in less than an hour we have this same bill back saying that the work could be done for $200,000. If the official objectors were ever justified in the world, they have been justified today.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RIO GRANDE CANALIZATION PROJECT

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11768) authorizing construction, operation, and maintenance of Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that purpose.

HAIL! THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, apropos the bill just passed, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a very short poem entitled "Hail the Constitution", by Mr. Cal J. McCarthy, historian and poet, of Elizabeth, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following poem by Cal. J. McCarthy, historian and poet, of Elizabeth, N. J.:

HAIL! THE CONSTITUTION

By Cal. J. McCarthy

Hail! The Constitution, great
Protector of each sovereign State.
The first law of our native land.
With equal rights on every hand.
Rising high above the Nation,
Protecting all in every station.
Protector of our liberty,
Assuring peace, tranquillity.
The Articles of Confederation,
Then unsuited for the Nation,
Yielded to the Constitution.
America's greatest institution.
For union, one and all stood by,
A union! was the people's cry.
Thirteen Colonies, large and small,
Convened to plan for the good of all,
Assembled in convention
Away from alien intervention
Foresighted men stout of heart
Analyzed each and every part.
These men of vigor, vim, and tact
Labored for a national pact.
One for all, and all for one,
So our democracy was begun,
Assuring all the right to live
And shielding those who cared to give Words of wisdom to a nation
United in a federation.
Conceived by patriots pledged to do
A work for all, both strong and true.
Ideals fostered by honest men,
A work designed by wit and ken.
Molded by the delegates,
Arranged and sanctioned by the States,
Drawn when darkest days were here
By patriots, statesmen, who knew no fear.
After months of careful thought
The new covenant was wrought.
To be binding on the States
It was signed by delegates.
May its phrases crystal pure
Our liberty and rights insure.
Protector of each sovereign State.
Hail! The Constitution great!

POINT OF NO QUORUM

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 25, noes 40.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 183, not voting 173, as follows:

CANALIZATION OF RIO GRANDE

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11768) authorizing construction, operation, and maintenance of Rio Grande canalization project, and authorizing appropriation for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 11768, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the completion of the engineering investigation, study, and report to the Secretary of State, as heretofore authorized by Public Resolution No. 4, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved February 13, 1935, the Secretary of State, acting through the American section, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, in order to facilitate compliance with the convention between the United States and Mexico concluded May 21, 1906, providing for the equitable division of the waters of the Rio Grande, and to properly regulate and control, to the fullest extent possible, the water supply for use in the two countries as provided by treaty, is authorized to construct, operate, and maintain, in substantial accordance with the engineering plan contained in said report, works for the canalization of the Rio Grande from the Caballo Reservoir site in New Mexico to the international dam near El Paso, Tex., and to acquire by donation, condemnation, or purchase such real and personal property as may be necessary therefor.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $3,000,000 for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of section 1 hereof, other than for operation and maintenance, including salaries and wages, fees for professional services; rents; travel expenses; per diem in lieu of actual subsistence; printing and binding, law books, and books of reference: Provided, That the amount herein authorized to be appropriated shall include so much as may be necessary for completion of construction of the diversion dam in the Rio Grande wholly in the United States, in addition to the $1,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for this purpose by the act of August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 961): Provided further, That the total cost of construction of said diversion dam and canalization works shall not exceed $4,000,000: Provided further, That the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not apply to any purchase made or service procured when the aggregate amount involved is $100 or less; purchase, exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger- and freight-carrying vehicles; hire with or without personal services, of work animals and animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles and equipment; acquisition by donation, condemnation, or purchase of real and personal property; transportation (including drayage) of personal effects of employees upon change of station; telephone, telegraphic, and air-mail communications; rubber boots for official use by employees; ice; equipment, services, supplies, and materials and other such miscellaneous expenses as the Secretary of State may deem necessary properly to carry out the provisions of the act: And provided further, That any part of any appropriation made hereunder may be transferred to, for direct expenditure by, the Department of the Interior pursuant to such arrangements therefor as may be from time to time effected between the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior, or as directed by the President of the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill calls for the canalization of the Rio Grande and construction of a diversion dam to implement the treaty of 1906. On May 21, 1906, under the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt, a treaty was made with Mexico to provide for the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande and to remove all causes of controversy between our own sovereign Nation and that of Mexico. Under this international compact of the highest dignity this Government guarantees to deliver to Mexico each year 60,000 acre-feet. There have been times when not only we have not delivered in pursuance of the treaty but the converse has been true and we find Mexico appropriating over 125,000 acre-feet of water; not only violating the treaty but depriving us of the control of that water and precipitating a course of action hardly compatible with the policies of the good neighbor. Unless, therefore, we have this diversion dam and a canalization, the details of which are embodied in the bill before us, it will be impossible for us as a sovereign Nation to control this diversion of water and fulfill our duties as a signatory to the covenant.

The Elephant Butte Dam, which was built in 1917, has further frustrated our efforts, because it has caused unnecessary floods in the Rio Grande, in the resultant loss of scouring action as well as by the meandering tendencies of that unruly stream. There have been unlawful appropriations of that water on our own territory and in Mexico, and that is why we seek to buy this land right on American territory, giving us the utmost control over it. The Secretary of the Interior has written a letter in favor of it, stating there will be no further irrigation areas resultant.

The Secretary of State thinks it is highly desirable not only to implement the treaty, but to prevent unnecessary international complications and to control the river insofar as floods are concerned. The bill, therefore, has the unanimous consent of both of these departments.

As an antecedent of the pending bill, under Public Resolution 247, $60,000 was appropriated for an authorization to the American section of the International Boundary Commission to make a thorough survey. This survey has been made and supplemented by the most rigid of investigations. I believe that our high duty under the laws of nations, with attendant consequences in flood control, and justice to our own citizens in the areas affected warrants this unusual suspension of the rules.

I ask, therefore, that the rules be suspended and the bill be passed.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, several years ago a commission was appointed to bring in a report concerning this legislation, but as far as I can determine that report has not as yet been made available to the membership of the House. It is interesting to ask why we should authorize the appropriation of $3,000,000 for a project which has been pending for 30 years. We had a flood in the North a few weeks ago. Pennsylvania, New England, New York, and other States of the East were ravaged by floodwaters, but there was no special legislation rushed through.

It is very easy to say we will spend this money, but, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been asking, where are we going to get it. There is only one place, and that is from the harassed taxpayer. Emphasis is placed on the fact we have a treaty, but I always notice when we get around to the observance of treaties it is generally in a case where we do the paying. At no time during the last 3 years have I heard the administration stressing that the foreign countries have not observed their treaties with us concerning the war debts. These certainly are just as sacred and would bring money into the Treasury. It is true, of course, anyone can make a meritorious project out of most any proposal. I am not disputing the fact that perhaps if all the details were available, if we had this report at hand, and if we had plenty of money we might go ahead with this project. I must emphasize, however, we have reached a stage in our finances where we must stop and think about every dollar we spend, whether it be spent in New Mexico, Texas, Massachusetts, or any other part of the country. The prolific spending of money must stop. The Congress passes bills involving millions of dollars with little or no consideration. The people are becoming incensed at this lack of consideration for the taxpayer. Why the hurry with this bill which has been brought up late without notice? Suspension was to be asked today. Why do we have to rush this bill involving an appropriation of three and a half million dollars today? There must be some reason, and I would like to ask the gentlemen on that side to give me the explanation.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the chairman, because he is such an efficient chairman and one whom we all esteem. I must yield to him.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. From the argument the gentleman is making, I wonder if he knows the purposes of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, I do.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Will the gentleman kindly state to the Members of the House the purposes of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have already stated its purpose. The main purpose is to get three and a half million dollars out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Does the gentleman know that the bill calls for three and a half million dollars or less?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It might go to four or five million dollars before they are through.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman knows this is for the canalization of that river on the national boundary and to comply with our treaty with Mexico. That is the purpose of the canalization of the river.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, I recognize that and I said so in the first instance, but I do not see why we have to pass a bill involving an appropriation of this size when our public finances are in the state they are in at the present time.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Does the gentleman know that the citizens of our country are not getting their fair share of the water down there?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I cannot yield further. I would prefer the gentleman make his own argument in his time.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Just one more question. I noticed in the paper somewhere where the President of the United States gave the gentleman's section about $4,500,000, and justly so, for flood control.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If he has done so, we would like to know where it has gone. We have been hoping they would give some real attention to these distressed communities. Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I understand, does not expect to lend a dollar out of the $50,000,000 authorized by this Congress for the rehabilitation of industry.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I trust the gentleman will not oppose the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield further. Seriously, I think we may well ask ourselves whether we ought to spend this money at the present time. In 1935 the Budget reported it was not in harmony with the financial policy of the Government, but since then there has been a change in attitude. It is now said the Budget commission is in harmony with the expenditure. I wonder why the change in position. Certainly the treaty was just as much in evidence then as now. It cannot be on account of the condition of the public finances, because the Government is more in the red at the present time than it was last year.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill should be defeated at this time because the Government is not in position to spend the three and a half million dollars. After all, the main question to be considered is whether we want to put more taxes on the American people by the appropriation of three and a half million dollars which could easily be deferred?

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I fear our friend the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has just spoken, is in a rather bad humor, either because of the lateness of the hour or because this bill was not on the program today as he understood it. To begin with, this is not an appropriation. It is purely an authorization. Furthermore, may I say this bill has the hearty approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of State, the International Boundary Commission, and the overwhelming majority, as I understand it, of the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, including several of the members who belong to the same party as our friend the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, this canalization project is located in the State of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY]. The purpose is to canalize the Rio Grande from Elephant Butte Dam, a Government irrigation project that has been there for more than 25 years, down to where it hits the boundary line of old Mexico, near El Paso, Tex.

My friend the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY] made an unusually good statement of the facts in this case. The truth is that under the treaty with Mexico which we entered into with that country in 1906, the Republic of Mexico was to get 60,000 acre-feet to be taken from the Rio Grande at the international boundary line. Due to the fact there is no diversion dam there and due to the further fact the river is not canalized from that point, which is near El Paso, up to the Elephant Butte Dam in the State of New Mexico, the Mexican people have been getting in some years more than they were entitled to, and thus depriving American citizens of their own water.

This is not a flood proposition. We went along the other day without regard to any partisan or political consideration and voted for the flood-control bill that you Republicans so actively supported, but this is an international question. This is an international problem and comes under a treaty that is to live for all time, and I undertake to say that the provisions of that treaty ought to be carried out, but it is impossible to do so unless there is some way to control the water. This is a desert country.

This does not bring in one single foot of new land. This does not increase the amount of land under irrigation in this country by one single acre. It is just to say to the people of New Mexico and the people down there on the Texas border near my city of El Paso that we will help the American citizens to retain and to have and to hold that which is theirs, and not let the Mexicans take our water because, if you have ever lived in a desert country you know how valuable water is, and during the last 5 years there have been many, many times when they doubted if there were enough water to supply the actual needs. This is fair to Mexico. It means a lot to the people of New Mexico and Texas.

I hope, in all fairness, you will vote for this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I confess I am not an expert upon this subject, but it seems to me that we are about to spend $4,000,000 more of the taxpayers' money. The New Deal goes around and around and around and comes out where? Out of the pocketbooks of the taxpayers in 20 minutes' time to the tune of $4,000,000.

Twenty years ago if the Congress had sought to appropriate $4,000,000 it would probably have spent 2 days on it. Now it is a mere bagatelle to be passed in a few minutes under suspension of rules.

I have the utmost respect for the gentleman [Mr. DEMPSEY] who represents the great State of New Mexico. If we must have a Democrat here from that State—which God forbid—all I can say is that he is an honest, hard-working, able Member of the Congress [applause], and if the people of New Mexico have to elect a Democrat, no one would suit me better, but it seems to me $4,000,000 is a pretty high ante to put in the campaign pot to elect even such a deserving Democrat as the gentleman from New Mexico.

In these days everybody in the country is asking whether we are going to balance the Budget and when and how.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I do not want to be embarrassed by having the gentleman ask me a difficult question about canalization, because I know nothing in the world about canalization; all I am talking about now is $4,000,000, and I know as much about $4,000,000 as the gentleman from Texas; in fact, I know that the State of New York, from which I come, will pay 35 percent of this $4,000,000 for canalization in New Mexico and Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. All right, go ahead.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The amount involved is not $4,000,000,000 or $4,000,000, as the gentleman has stated. Has the gentleman read the bill?

Mr. FISH. I am one of the active members of the committee. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. But the gentleman was not present when the hearings were held.

Mr. FISH. Whether it is three and a half million dollars or $4,000,000, or whether it may end up by being $8,000,000, as it probably will, we are still talking in terms of millions, and we are voting these millions away in 20 minutes' time. I know very well you have the votes. I know I am wasting my efforts in talking here, but what I want to bring out is this: Only a few months ago the President himself came before the Congress and said that we have almost balanced the Budget, yet the Secretary of the Treasury issued a statement within the last 48 hours to the effect that the Budget is unbalanced by $6,000,000,000.

Of course, there is a little difference between $6,000,000,000 and $4,000,000. This is only another expenditure of $4,000,000 in order to help elect a deserving Democrat. If I were going to vote for anything of this kind I would vote for this bill because Mr. DEMPSEY is a deserving Democrat. [Applause.]

In these days when everybody is seeking methods to balance the Budget we must not forget who pays the bills. You have soaked the rich, and now you are going to collect on the poor Members of Congress. You have taken all the money you can get from the rich and now you are going to take it out on the Members of Congress in order to help elect one of our colleagues. All formulas for soaking the rich have been exhausted, and from now on the people with moderate and small incomes will have to pay the bills. Why not distribute $4,000,000 apiece to every deserving Democratic Member of Congress for home consumption in one final omnibus bill and adjourn until after election?

I know nothing about canalization, but I do know something about $4,000,000 which you are going to add to the rapidly mounting deficit, and the people have got to pay that bill also. [Applause.]

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say this. We have got to deliver 60,000 acre-feet of water per year to Mexico. That is settled by a treaty between the United States and Mexico. You cannot make or regulate or control or measure the delivery of water without a dam. A diversion dam is as necessary as water. In order to accomplish that we are asking this House to authorize the construction of that dam and stop this annual controversy going on between the United States and Mexico as to whether they get 20,000 acre-feet or 100,000 acre-feet per year. [Applause.]

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I first want to state to the gentleman from New York that I deeply appreciate the nice things he said about me with reference to what kind of a Democrat I am and how high I rate in New Mexico. I think he is a rare judge of ability. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to this bill. This bill has the approval of the Director of the Budget. Contrary to what you have been told, the Director of the Budget advises the able chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee that it is in accord with the financial program and the policy of the President. The Secretary of State—and it is under the Secretary of State that this work will be done—tells us that the work is necessary not only to preserve Government property and private property but potentially life itself.

That is a pretty strong statement coming from the Secretary of State. It does seem to me that a bill of this kind with the merit it has should have passed by unanimous consent. This House is very familiar with the provisions of the bill. Over a year ago by unanimous consent, after considerable discussion, the House passed a bill providing for a survey to make plans to do this very job.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman stated that we are all quite familiar with the bill. I agree with that statement. Does not the gentleman think, therefore, it might be a pretty good idea to devote the rest of his time to making a campaign speech for the gentleman from New York [Mr FISH]?

Mr. DEMPSEY. If I were a Republican and living in New York, I would certainly support the gentleman from New York. This river is a river without banks, at places. It is a meandering stream which changes its course every time we have a small flood. Today it is on one man's land and tomorrow it will be on another man's land. The bill is not brought here as a flood-control bill, although it might well have been brought in on that basis. Last fall the people of the Mesilla Valley were driven from their homes and destruction of property to the amount of a million dollars followed. Of course, we are not a large industrial State with large industrial cities and counties out there. We are just little old farmers but our homes are as precious to us as the businessman's business is to him. If this river ran through some great industrial city in the East I would be here supporting a bill of this kind because of its merit rather than fighting it as some gentlemen are who represent industrial cities.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Is the gentleman willing to have the gentleman from New York fish in the river?

Mr. DEMPSEY. We would be very happy to have him go out there and fish. I would like to have him come out in the next campaign and help me some with the Democrats.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. In the letter from the Secretary of State he says "I therefore recommend the passage of the bill", and so forth, if the bill is amended in a certain way. Are those amendments to be offered?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The amendments are not to be offered because a new bill was drawn in which the amendments were incorporated. The bill before us now contains the amendments suggested by the Secretary of State.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. According to the report, the bed of the river is owned at the present time by private individuals?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. It is also estimated it will cost the Federal Government $347,520 to buy that land.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Not to exceed that.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think, if we are going to expend at least two and a half million dollars to improve the land of these people, that they ought to furnish the land where we are going to build the works and build the canalization.

Mr. DEMPSEY. But we are not improving the land of these people in New Mexico. In the district this river flows through the farmers were assessed $90 for every acre they owned in the valley for a dam at Elephant Butte, which cost $14,200,000. The farmers will pay for that dam by the sweat of their brow, and that dam is what makes it possible to give Mexico some of this water.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is an authorization bill. We know that the rules of the House requiring that we first have an authorization bill, and that is where the camel kind of sticks his nose under the tent, and then we have an appropriation bill. This is an authorization bill. It authorizes the expenditure of a large sum of money, it is difficult to tell exactly how much as it depends on how much they want to expend, but not exceeding the sum of $4,000,000.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I have not the time. It seems the claim is made that some water is going into Mexico that should go into New Mexico and into Texas. Thirty years have elapsed without any such action before, and a year ago, on the 13th of February, Congress passed a bill authorizing an engineering investigation and study and report to the Secretary of State with reference to this proposition. That engineering report and investigation is not yet available according to my information and according to the way the bill is drawn, but they want us to authorize the appropriation of the $4,000,000 for the improvement of certain lands and make it more fertile and more valuable. That is the situation, and that is to be done without completing the engineering study and investigation.

They authorize a lot of other things, including ice and rubber boots for official use by employees, and equipment and services and supplies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Not at this point.

This bill will cost the Treasury of the United States, the people that we are supposed to represent, who sent us here to represent them, $4,000,000. It may cost more, but it will not possibly cost less, because such things never cost less than they are estimated to cost. They always cost more. Now, are we not going to show a little sense here tonight? Can we not just stop to figure where the money is coming from? This bill would not be asked for unless it is going to make that land more valuable, unless it was, in effect, an irrigation project, another irrigation project to make the land produce more, make the land more fertile and raise more crops, while at the same time we are appropriating $440,000,000 a year to take land out of cultivation; that is, we are raising more crops now than the Secretary of Agriculture thinks ought to be raised in this country. Why should we waste another $4,000,000?

This is another one of those items that is kind of sneaking up on us. One of the principal reasons given in the letter of the Secretary of State for this proposition is that the Secretary of State submitted a revised list of projects to the Public Works Administration, including among them the canalization project in question which it was estimated would cost somewhat more than $4,000,000. However, no allotment of public-works money was made for the project at that time or since.

That is evidently one of the items that was going to sneak in under these omnibus appropriations that we are making. It is bad enough now with the tremendous pile-up and overload of projects that have been thrust onto the Treasury of the United States to support, by these omnibus appropriation bills without another.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Not at this point. Will we never stop loading up the Treasury with a tremendous volume of appropriations that our taxpayers will not be able to stand, that will pile up a deficit that our country can never stop? Is it not time we should think of the farmers whose prices for crops are menaced by this sort of thing, and stop making such authorizations and such appropriations as that which is called for by this bill?

I hope that the Congress will today say "no" for once in this session.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS].

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the gentlemen who have spoken against this bill, but the trouble is, I fear that neither one of them has even read the bill. I say that from the facts which they have discussed. I have great admiration for the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who just preceded me. I know he wants to protect the Treasury, but when he says this is $4,000,000 he just raises it a million dollars. One million dollars has heretofore been appropriated, and this authorizes another $3,000,000 to complete the project.

Another thing that the gentleman says was that no engineering plans had been made for this. Evidently he has not considered the matter. At the last session of Congress we passed by unanimous consent an appropriation of $60,000 which was used for the purpose——

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I do not have time to yield now.

We passed an appropriation of $60,000 for this engineering plan, which has been made, and it was on their report that this bill comes now before the House.

Now, we have obligations with Mexico. We have a treaty which we must carry out. In 1906, before this treaty was entered into, when they were claiming damages of $35,000,000 because we were utilizing water in the United States, this treaty was entered into, by which we were to furnish so many cubic feet per year. The Secretary of State says we cannot do that unless we canalize that river and complete this dam. That is the purpose that this $3,000,000 is asked for here today.

The gentleman further said it would bring more ground into cultivation. Here is the report of the Secretary of the Interior on that proposition, in which he says:

> The plan developed does not increase the area under irrigation in the United States and does not add irrigable acreage to the Rio Grande project.

Not only that, but other witnesses testified before the committee to the same effect.

If we are to carry out our treaties with Mexico, which I know this House feels we should, for the interest of our own people in that section and to protect their rights we have to control the river beds, we have to canalize that river; and I ask that the House now vote for this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 101, noes 48.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-eight Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 173, nays 79, not voting 176, as follows:

To Mr. MALONEY, for 2 weeks, on account of important official business.

To Mr. MORITZ, indefinitely, on account of important business.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 2883. An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories; to the Committee on Education.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill and joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1432. An act to amend section 5 of the act of March 2, 1919, generally known as the War Minerals Relief Statutes.

H. J. Res. 567. Joint resolution to provide an additional appropriation for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1936.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 9244. An act providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida at Panama City, Fla.; and

H. R. 10193. An act to amend the act to fix the hours of duty of postal employees.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 5, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARING

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on the Public Lands on Tuesday, May 5, 1936, at 10 o'clock a. m., in room 328, House Office Building, to consider further H. R. 7086, to establish the Mount Olympus National Park, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

832. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 28, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Purgatoire (Picketwire), and Apishapa Rivers, Colo., with a view to the control of floods and the conservation of water, authorized by the act of Congress approved July 1, 1935; to the Committee on Flood Control.

833. A letter from the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, transmitting a part of the Commission's study and investigation of the work, activities, personnel, and functions of protective and reorganization committees; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. DOUGHTON: Committee on Ways and Means. H. R. 12556. A bill to create the Treasury Agency Service, to provide for the more adequate protection of the revenue and a more effective enforcement of the revenue and other laws administered by the Treasury Department, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 2579). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LANHAM: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 11959. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 2580). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SEARS: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 11501. A bill to authorize the acquisition of lands in the vicinity of Jacksonville, Fla., as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon; without amendment (Rept. No. 2581). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 4132. An act to amend section 4b of the National Defense Act, as amended, relating to certain enlisted men of the Army; without amendment (Rept. No. 2582). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FULMER: A bill (H. R. 12576) to require that bidders for star-route-service contracts be residents of the State within which the route originates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. TERRY: A bill (H. R. 12577) to amend Public Act No. 325 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CELLER: A bill (H. R. 12578) to provide for the admission of certain documents in evidence in the courts of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BOYKIN: A bill (H. R. 12579) to levy a license tax of a sum equal to 5 percent of all moneys paid upon wagers upon horse racing; to provide the method of enforcing and the penalties for the violation of this act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: A bill (H. R. 12580) to amend the Migratory Bird Treaty Act of July 3, 1918 (40 Stat. 755), to extend and adapt its provisions to the convention between the United States and the United Mexican States for the protection of migratory birds and game mammals concluded at the city of Mexico, February 7, 1936, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mrs. NORTON (by request): A bill (H. R. 12581) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CITRON: A bill (H. R. 12582) to prohibit the employment of children and convict labor in connection with contracts and purchases by the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KNUTSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 579) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEAM: A bill (H. R. 12583) for the relief of Frank Zych; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROWN of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 12584) for the relief of H. E. Wingard; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GREENWOOD: A bill (H. R. 12585) granting an increase of pension to Princess May Stone; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mrs. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 12586) for the relief of Lily O. Nestor; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KOPPLEMANN: A bill (H. R. 12587) for the relief of John W. Barbrick; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LEA of California: A bill (H. R. 12588) granting a pension to Floyd M. Tallman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEE of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 12589) for the relief of Dr. Charles McGehee; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LORD: A bill (H. R. 12590) granting an increase of pension to Amanda Trafford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAVERICK: A bill (H. R. 12591) granting a pension to Henry Lee Couch; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Utah: A bill (H. R. 12592) for the relief of Orson Thomas; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 12593) for the relief of Emile Beaudoin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THURSTON: A bill (H. R. 12594) for the relief of W. J. Steckel; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WITHROW: A bill (H. R. 12595) for the relief of Eva L. Morse; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

10821. By Mr. ANDREWS of New York: Resolution of the Pulaski Club, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., urging rescinding of order of Labor Department with reference to enrollment of Civilian Conservation Corps youths allowing youths of families not on relief to be enrolled; to the Committee on Labor.

10822. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of L. D. Williams, superintendent of Hearne public schools, Hearne, Tex., favoring Senate bill 2883, vocational agriculture bill; to the Committee on Education.

10823. Also, petition of E. J. Kyle, dean, school of agriculture, Agricultural and Mechanical College, College Station, Tex., favoring Senate bill 2883, vocational agriculture bill; to Committee on Education.

10824. Also, petition of Dr. J. A. Gregoire, Hillsboro, Tex., favoring tax exemption to physicians on Federal income for charity practice; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

10825. Also, petition of Dr. William A. Hammond, Bryan, Tex., favoring tax exemption to physicians on Federal income for charity practice; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

10826. Also, petition of Dr. W. K. Logsdon, Corsicana, Tex., favoring tax exemption to physicians on Federal income for charity practice; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

10827. Also, petition of Dr. H. A. Mahaffey, Hillsboro, Tex., favoring tax exemption to physicians on Federal income for charity practice; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

10828. By Mr. KEE: Petition of citizens of West Virginia, favoring the passage of House bill 7122, providing for pensions for adult blind persons; to the Committee on Pensions.

10829. By Mr. REED of Illinois: Resolution of American Homestead Protective Association of Chicago, Ill., urging Congress to amend the Frazier-Lemke bill 2066 so that all city and town property owners may have the same recourse and the same protection as farmers under said bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

10830. By Mr. RICH: Petition of citizens of McKean County, favoring the Wheeler-Crosser bill (H. R. 11609); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

10831. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 5, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and Immortal One, may we draw nigh to Thee and breathe Thy holy name in prayer? Blessed be the name of the Lord our God, which hath not turned away our prayer nor his mercy toward us. We pray Thee to make our tempers patient, our lips gentle, and may we bear the fruits of goodness. Arm us, Heavenly Father, with the strong, manly virtues, that we may be chivalrous champions of the right against wrong. We pray for any who may dumbly suffer for others' sake and for any who keenly feel the faults of those they love. Consecrate each family tie; light heaven on all hearthstones and fill them with divine blessings. Keep this everlasting truth in all our minds: "The path of the just is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Let Thy will be done in every heart as it was in the heart of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3744. An act to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes; and

S. 4524. An act to provide a civil government for the Virgin Islands of the United States.

P. W. A. GETS DOLLAR'S WORTH OF WORK FOR EACH DOLLAR SPENT

Mr. BEITER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, with the great depression of 1929 now in full retreat and our long-fought battle back to industrial normality near success, we may now survey the destruction of that great economic battlefield and ponder on how differently our strategy might have been planned, on how more wisely we might have employed the weapons that were so hastily forged when this administration assumed the high command in the battle.

From this depression we have learned another costly lesson on the value of preparedness. We entered the combat to succeed an administration which had been retreating before savage adverse economic forces which had laid waste the land. We adopted new and offensive tactics and rallied the full resources of the Federal Government to rout the enemy, and for our attack we evolved the first substantial, effective attempt at a planned economy.

From the financial reports of the large corporations whose pay rolls in normal times provide a living for a great number of our people, we now have cheering indications that the tide of battle has turned and that a victory, due in no small measure to the successful working of this planned economy, is at hand.

We may now analyze the strategy employed to achieve this victory and, with the thought of utilizing it in the event of another depression, evaluate it calmly and contemplate improvements in it to prevent in the future the repetition of those errors which could not have been avoided because of the necessary haste employed in putting our plan into execution.

Obviously our most grievous sin was our lack of preparation for the emergency of 1929. The warnings of economic prophets had fallen upon deaf ears during the days of easy money, and disaster, following in the wake of a market collapse, found America an improvident nation, taken completely off guard, stunned by the enormity of the catastrophe, and too bewildered to muster the necessary defenses.

True, there was a period of panicky conferences of the Nation's leading financiers, who assured us that confidence alone would win the battle, that the worst of the depression was over, and, ignoring the lengthening breadlines, that prosperity was just around the corner. And there were eloquent but futile pleas that industry pull itself out of the depression by reemploying the unemployed. But while these haphazard efforts were successful in bolstering up a few failing corporations and in salvaging a few scattered investments, no effectual attempt to relieve the Nation's widespread distress was made until after President Roosevelt's inauguration.

Emergency agencies were hastily organized, and plans were laid for priming the business pump with Federal money to hasten the restoration of economic normality. The Congress made vast appropriations, but the lack of preparatory studies and adequate plans for the execution of these relief programs made most difficult the task of stemming the depression and turning the tide of battle. The Public Works Administration, the principal agency charged with creating useful employment, opened its campaign without the aid of surveys, which would have expedited greatly its huge undertaking.

To encourage the employment of jobless workers in construction and in the industries supplying materials, P. W. A. invited departments of the Federal Government and States, counties, municipalities, and other local governmental bodies to submit applications for funds to carry on useful projects. Only the Federal departments were prepared to expend this money judiciously, only they had surveyed the work to be done, and had available the blueprints to carry out the job.

Local governmental units were taken completely by surprise. The invitation to enroll in a public-works program found them for the most part unprepared to submit applications for works. And yet every community in the country, from the largest city to the smallest hamlet, felt the urgent need of additional municipal improvements to safeguard the health of its people, to provide decent modern care for its sick and indigent wards, to give modern educational accommodations to its children. Every community was aware that its municipal plant was in need of some improvement, and every community was faced with a grave unemployment problem, yet few of them had prepared the plans and estimates on which to base a request for Federal aid, which would serve the dual purpose of employing their jobless and modernizing their plants.

There was no national survey showing the location of needed works, no outline for a campaign which sought to attack the largest unemployment centers and provide there employment for workers who wanted jobs in the building of undertakings whose value to society should not be questioned by the taxpayers who would bear their cost.

There were two possible methods of operation for P. W. A. It might have sprung into action hastily, scattering with lavish hand the money entrusted to it in the construction of poorly planned undertakings of questionable social worth, or it could proceed cautiously and necessarily more slowly, evaluating each application, checking the plans with the idea of securing a dollar's worth of work for each dollar spent, making certain that the Federal Government would find its loans repaid.

Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes chose the latter course, and I believe he showed great wisdom in his choice. Applications for Federal funds to be used in construction of State or municipal projects poured into his office by the thousands. The fantastic, the wasteful, the useless were carefully weeded out by trained engineer examiners and approval was given only to those projects which promised to keep a substantial number of workers from relief rolls and which served some useful need in the community in which they were to be erected.

This selection of the undertakings in which the Federal Government was to participate was a long, laborious process. The care exercised in determining that no Federal money should be wasted required time and brought from hostile critics the charge of unnecessary delay. The program moved slowly, but moved as rapidly as judicious administration would permit. The haste demanded by critics would have necessitated waste, and extravagance in America's first public-works program would have so seriously discredited the theory of public works that its employment in future depressions would be indeed difficult.

Instead, in reviewing the accomplishments of P. W. A., we find that it has been so successful in routing the depression that its future use as a tested theory seems inescapable. P. W. A. has undertaken the construction of approximately 24,000 projects. Of this number, 15,500 were carried on under the auspices of the regular departments of the Federal Government and the remaining 8,000 and more by P. W. A. in cooperation with the local government units which received grants of Federal money. A recent statement of Administrator Ickes reveals that approximately 3,400,000 men have been given 1 year's employment on P. W. A. projects. Mr. Ickes and the administration should be proud of the fact that the P. W. A. construction program, involving between three and four billion dollars, has not been marred by scandal, and that even the most captious critics are agreed in granting that its projects have been supervised intelligently and constructed soundly, that the funds entrusted to it have been expended with wisdom, honesty, and economy. The record of P. W. A. in carrying on the greatest short-time construction program undertaken by any single agency in world history is indeed one of the greatest achievements of President Roosevelt's administration.

Yet it must be remembered that this entire program was conceived, put into execution, and substantially completed in the short period since P. W. A. was established in June 1933. P. W. A. started from scratch, without the aid of surveys, without even the detailed plans for projects submitted to it. This Herculean task of planning and executing these more than 8,000 projects in its non-Federal program has all been accomplished within 3 short years.

I am certain that Administrator Ickes will agree with me that had his Department been equipped with a scientific inventory of the Nation's needs in public works, with the plans of individual projects which might advantageously be built, P. W. A.'s vast program would have made its beneficial effects felt on industry in a far shorter space of time and would have accelerated more speedily the national recovery process.

We hear a great deal about preparedness from military and naval leaders, but little has been said about the value of preparedness to ward off economic catastrophes. Yet a casual perusal of our history will show that the possibility of economic upheavals is far greater than that of war. It seems to me that one of the most urgent needs of our Government at the present is that of a well-equipped agency whose function shall be in times of economic peace to make all preparations for mustering the Nation's strength in the event it is needed in an economic crisis when business fails in its role as the employer of the Nation's workers. The first steps in long-range planning have already been taken. Under Administrator Ickes, the National Resources Board was organized and has been operating with a grant of P. W. A. funds. This agency is primarily concerned with providing an inventory of our great national resources and with preparing a program for their intelligent development. While its work will doubtless be of great aid, not only in directing future expansion but in mapping areas for improvement to be developed if America is faced with the problem of providing work relief in another depression, we should have some other agency whose chief concern should be the development of plans for specific projects in every part of the country. This agency should be so organized and equipped that its files will contain full information on the construction needs of every community, so that in the event of a serious unemployment crisis, work may be started at once on some useful undertaking, providing a welcome, economically sound substitute for a Federal dole.

At the present time the Public Works Administration, of all Federal agencies, is best prepared for the work of long-range planning. It already has on file thousands of applications for worthy undertakings which have had to be filed, because sufficient funds for their execution were not available. Hundreds of these projects have been carefully examined and approved by P. W. A. engineers, economists, and lawyers and their construction waits only the need for employment and the appropriation of the necessary funds. These approved applications might well serve as a nucleus for a permanent collection of plans for public works, which might well be assigned to the care of P. W. A., which would be entrusted with the task of keeping the file up to date, ready for use in any emergency.

I feel certain that I echo a sentiment popular throughout the country when I say that we should charge some Federal agency with the permanent duty of compiling and keeping a timely inventory of the Nation's public-works needs. Americans of the future calling upon this survey to assist them and their fight through another depression, and finding it ready for use, will be grateful for our foresight.

UTAH PIONEER TRAILS AND LANDMARKS ASSOCIATION

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2611) to authorize the Utah Pioneer Trails and Landmarks Association to construct and maintain a monument on the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, Salt Lake City, Utah.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman make a statement in regard to this bill, whether it is going to cost the Federal Government any money or not, and what the actual situation is. The House as a whole, I think, needs some information in reference to this matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been passed by the Senate, and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize an organization known as the Utah Pioneer Trails and Landmarks Association to construct a monument on the Fort Douglas Military Reservation to mark the place where the Mormon pioneers entered the Valley of Salt Lake. The bill carries no appropriation, and its only purpose is to give this organization the right to construct this monument on a military reservation.

Mr. SNELL. They construct and maintain it out of their own funds?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes; under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SNELL. But they furnish their own funds to erect and maintain this monument?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. It is satisfactory to the War Department and takes no land that is needed for other purposes?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a permit, under regulations to be prescribed by him, to the Utah Pioneer Trails and Landmarks Association to construct and maintain on the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, Utah, a suitable monument, including roadway and footpath thereto, to commemorate the site where Brigham Young, Mormon pioneer leader, on July 24, 1847, declared "This is the place", the location and plans to be approved by the Secretary of War, and all work to be done without expense to the United States and under such military supervision as is deemed advisable by him.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

NATION-WIDE REVOLT PREVENTED IN 1933 WHEN CONGRESS PASSED THE N. R. A. AND C. C. C. CAMP MEASURES

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the production curve and business curve always turn down when wages drop faster than prices of commodities. From October 1929 to April 1933 farm prices dropped faster than the prices of other commodities that had to be bought by the farmers and home owners. The unbalanced drop is what caused the greatest depression and economic panic our Nation ever experienced. During these 3½ years the business curve and the buying-power curve kept coming down and down and down, and during all of these 3½ years Mr. Hoover, Mr. Mellon, and Mr. Morgan and the rest kept telling us that this business curve would turn its nose up around the corner next week, next week, and next week.

The sad part of that national calamity was that the dictators would not let President Hoover do anything to prevent this decline of weekly wages and farm prices. They told him to sit still and keep quiet and wait until prosperity came around the corner.

We all know that we were within a few months of a revolution in this country when the Roosevelt administration and the Seventy-third Congress put into effect the N. R. A. and the C. C. C. camp movement. Both Democrats and Republicans now agree that had Congress not passed these two bills and put them into effect we would have had an industrial and social revolution in this country.

As soon as these acts of Congress started to operate in 1933, wages and farm prices started to be stabilized. The business curve in production instantly turned upward. The farmer received more for his commodities. Labor received more per day. In other words, buying power was increased and we cannot have prosperity unless we have ample buying power. We cannot have ample buying power unless all men have work at a reasonable wage.

Just as soon as the farmers and the laborers and the little-business men become conscious of the always true fact that production and prosperity always go hand in hand with ample wages and shorter working hours, then we will be in a position to throw off this boogaboo of man-made depression.

We all know that the recent depression was a man-made depression. International bankers and Liberty Leaguers and their kind made this man-made depression. They will do it again if they can flashlight the people into believing their soap-bubble propaganda. This upward turn in business was a direct result of the application of the N. R. A. and the institution of the C. C. C. camps throughout the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that I was among the first to get back of the C. C. C. camp movement. This was years before 1933. Inasmuch as a large portion of my life's work has been in helping young men and young women to find themselves when they get out in life's school, I was exceptionally enthusiastic about these camps when they were inaugurated in 1933.

At that time I designated them as "the most far-reaching citizenship-building and nation-building institution that this Government has ever set up", excepting, of course, the home, the school, and the church. However, I must admit that I did not think that they could accomplish for the boys and for the Nation all the wonderful things they did accomplish.

Hundreds of thousands of boys who were undernourished and discouraged—yes; fine young men, graduates of our high schools and colleges, who because of the man-made depression were spending their time in the bowling alleys, pool rooms, and loafing places on the highways and byways looking for work—were discouraged to the degree that they were becoming desperate. I might say that we could not blame them for that. So, great was the day when the C. C. C. camps called these boys, and because of the open-air facilities, the splendid food, and the opportunity to work, and all the other factors that enter in, we are making splendid and useful citizens out of these hundreds of thousands of boys.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of the C. C. C. camps, they have done so much to help the boys, the State, and the Nation that it is hard to visualize or comprehend. However, it is interesting to note just a few of the things these camps accomplish in Pennsylvania.

(A) Gave employment to 107,100 men.

(B) The Government helped pay for the C. C. C. camps up to March 1936 to the extent of $75,903,000.

(C) That the C. C. C. camp boys sent $15,575,000 of their earnings back to their homes to take care of their fathers, mothers, and family.

(D) Reduced the annual average of forest-fire destruction 40,000 acres.

(E) The boys put in 57,000 man-days fighting forest fires between April 1933 and April 1936.

(F) They protected the forest to the extent of building 2,500 miles of truck and trail roads.

(G) They built 2,200 miles of foot and horse trails.

(H) They constructed 460 vehicle bridges.

(I) They cleared fire hazards from 13,520 acres of forest lands.

(J) They reduced fire hazards along 3,600 miles of roadways.

(K) They have built 58 towers and lookouts.

(L) They built and now maintain over 1,600 miles of telephone lines.

Of course, these are only material accomplishments. The big accomplishment is that these camps make men out of boys. They build better communities for us to hand down to our children.

In my district we have six C. C. C. camps and there is no way of judging the social values that our next generation will receive because of this work, and the dollar value they will receive will amount into the millions.

Yes, my friends, the C. C. C. camps, or institutions similar to them—we may call them by another name—are here to stay. We would have many a revolution today if we attempted to take them away, because youth knows that this sort of development of our national resources is a development that will mean food, shelter, and clothing to them as they grow older.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, on tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

FLOOD CONTROL OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address which the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] delivered on April 27 before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Hon. JOHN H. OVERTON, Senator from Louisiana, before the convention of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in Washington, D. C., on April 27, 1936:

Mr. President and members of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, permit me to express my very warm appreciation of the honor which you have conferred upon me in requesting me to address this magnificent convention of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, composed of representatives from all parts of the United States.

When I selected as the subject of my discourse the topic of flood control of the lower Mississippi Valley there was then pending upon the calendar of the United States Senate a bill that I had introduced, providing for the completion and expansion of a plan of flood control in the alluvial valley of America's greatest river.

I am happy to stand before you today with the realization that this bill was last week passed by the Senate without a voice raised in opposition to it and with only one dissenting vote cast against it.

The bill has now been sent to the House of Representatives for action, and, together with an overwhelming majority of the people residing in the valley, I entertain the fervent hope that it will within the next few days be reported by the Committee on Flood Control of the House and at an early date be passed by that body and approved by the President of the United States.

This bill, S. 3531, presents no new or novel plan of flood control. It provides for the completion, modification, and enlargement of the plan proposed by Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Army Engineers, in 1928 and adopted by Congress in the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928.

The main features of the 1928 act were the declarations by the National Congress that flood control in the lower Mississippi Valley is a national responsibility; that the States in the valley and their local subdivisions had contributed $292,000,000 to protect themselves from the floodwaters borne down upon them from an area representing 41 percent of the territory of the continental United States; that no further local contribution should be required except mainly the furnishing of rights-of-way for levees on the main stem of the Mississippi River and the maintenance of the levees after construction; and that the National Government would at its own expense pay the cost of construction of levees and floodways and the cost of flowage rights.

The bill that I had the honor of sponsoring does not undertake to modify the philosophy and purpose of the Flood Control Act of 1928; it does not undertake to enlarge Federal responsibility or to decrease local contribution. Its chief object is to provide for the completion of the project undertaken pursuant to the act of 1928, to modify it in accordance with the engineering recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission and the Chief of Army Engineers, and to authorize an additional appropriation of $272,000,000 for its execution.

The plan recommended in 1928 by the Army Engineers and the Mississippi River Commission, based upon almost half a century of intensive study of this great problem is a plan of levees and of floodways. It was declared then by the Commission and by the Army Engineers, and is today their firm judgment, that a system of levees only is wholly insufficient. The levees must be supplemented by floodways. They are being built as high and as broad as it is feasible, practicable, economical, and safe to build levees. But when major floods descend the mighty Mississippi, in the majesty if its strength and in the fierceness of its wrath, laughs to scorn these great artificial barriers, crevasses through and breaks them down and spreads its devastating and destructive floods into the alluvial plain. In its uncontrolled ravages it plays no favorites and respects no area. It selects its own outlets and discharges its ruinous floods alike over woodland and swampland, prosperous farms and happy homes, towns, and cities. From time immemorial the great Father of Waters has demanded and, levees or no levees, it will continue to demand relief outlets for the excess waters of its supercharged channel. It is inevitable that we accede to the river's inexorable demand, but wisdom, prudence, and foresight dictate that we provide and control the necessary diversion channels.

Therefore, under the adopted plan, the completion of which is sought by the Overton bill, it is proposed that we instead of the river select and provide the necessary outlets. It is contemplated that the surplus floodwaters which the main and leveed channel cannot hold be subtracted from the river and through other channels be safely borne to the Gulf of Mexico. These diversion channels are to be located where they will be most effective and where they will do the least damage. These floodways and spillways will be leveed so as to confine the surplus waters thus permanently divorced from the Mississippi River, and the owners of properties within the floodways shall receive agreed or just compensation for all flowage rights and easements conveyed or taken.

This plan of levees and floodways is a plan that has been constantly and unqualifiedly recommended by the Mississippi River Commission and the different Chiefs of Engineers since 1928. It is according to them the sure, safe, and most economical plan that can be adopted. It is sufficient unto itself. If carried into effect, as contemplated by my bill, it will solve forever the flood-control problem of the lower valley. Gen. Edward M. Markham, present Chief of Army Engineers, declares that this combination of levees and floodways is the only answer that they have been able to uncover, discover, and make to this age-old problem of flood control in the lower Mississippi Valley.

It has been proposed to dispense with floodways by the use of flood-detention reservoirs on the headwaters of the streams tributary to the Mississippi. After a thorough study of reservoirs, the Mississippi River Commission and the Chief of Engineers in 1928 submitted, through the Secretary of War, a report on the subject; and it was their deliberate and expert judgment, confirmed the other day by the testimony of General Markham before the Senate Committee on Commerce, that reservoirs do not dispense with the necessity of either floodways or levees. A system of reservoirs that would have a constant and substantial influence in lowering flood stages would cost $1,250,000,000, as against the plan contemplated in the pending bill that is estimated to cost for its completion the sum of $272,000,000. The people in the valley favor and the engineers recognize the value of reservoirs as additional factors of safety. But I am safe in making the assertion that it is the consensus of expert engineering opinion and the view of the overwhelming majority of the people in the valley that reservoirs are not a safe substitute for either floodways or levees.

Permit me to make the observation that, in my humble judgment, the time has come in the history of this Nation when the Federal Government should busy itself not only with the regulation and control of Mississippi floods but with all major interstate flood situations throughout the Nation that are destructive of life, property, and industry, regardless of where they occur. A most thorough consideration is now being given, and, I may add, a determined effort is being made by Congress to provide, in the so-called omnibus bill, a formula of national policy having for its object Federal intervention to prevent these major flood disasters. And, in conclusion, I express the hope that before this Congress adjourns a reasonable and practical omnibus flood-control bill will receive the sanction of Congress and the approval of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who is, from a national viewpoint, giving sympathetic consideration to all major problems of flood control throughout the continental United States.

PUBLIC DOCKS, WHARVES, AND WAREHOUSES

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill (H. R. 9011) to amend the twelfth item of section 460 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1336), as amended by section 29 of the act of June 6, 1900 (31 Stat. 331), which was introduced by me and referred to a committee but upon which no action has ever been taken.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

There was no objection.

RECORD OF THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HAINES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address which I delivered at Quakertown, Pa., on April 14:

I want the citizens of this progressive community to know that it is both a privilege and pleasure for me to join with you upon such an occasion and because of the fact that you have in Congress one of the finest men it was ever my privilege to be associated with. OLLIE FREY (for we like to call him "Ollie") is a most worthy representative of his people. He has the respect of all who know him and is recognized as an able legislator and intensely interested in the people he has the honor to represent. I want to express the hope that you will give him your united support and send him back, for it is only by length of service that men can be of the most value, and this is so true in the legislative halls of the Nation.

We are in the midst of another great national campaign.

You have already heard, and will continue to hear, a great deal concerning the accomplishments of the Democratic Party, under the wise leadership of one of the greatest men of all times, Franklin D. Roosevelt. The record of this administration is subjected to the most vicious attacks ever uttered against any man; hence, it is most fitting that I should, upon an occasion like this, refresh your memories and call to your attention the dark days of the recent past. Our memories are very short, and perhaps it is a good thing that we can forget; but it will do no harm for me to recall the dark days through which the Nation had to pass under another administration, and caution you not to be deceived or to permit yourselves to be exploited for the selfishness of those who want to destroy the efforts toward industrial and social security and the splendid gains we have made in the past 2 or 3 years. What was the condition of the country in 1932–33? I know our political enemies don't want us to "bring that up", but let's examine the record.

Let's go back to March 4, 1933, and find what the condition of the country was at that time. I say to you that the country was in utter despair and chaos. The awful picture of desolation that obtained at that time is something we would all like to forget, for we had a great mass of our fellow citizens who did not know what to do or where to go. We were a panic-stricken, bankrupt people in a great land of full and plenty on every hand, with hungry men, women, and children in our large centers of population destitute and homeless, roaming from one place to the other, living upon the generosity of others almost in as bad a condition. That ghastly picture of hunger and privation, bringing untold suffering, chilled the huge ranks of the unemployed with stark fear and burdening them with the sense of hopelessness and destruction. I say to you, ladies and gentlemen, it was the coming of Franklin D. Roosevelt at that time that saved the Nation and brought cheer and hope into the breasts of millions of fine Americans who were about to give up. We had 70 percent of our people at that time who did not have enough income to provide themselves with the real necessities of life. A voice rang out on that memorable March 4, saying no one is going to starve in this country, and because that promise has been kept, it is now necessary that an administration must defend itself. I'll confess to you that it is the first time in my more than half a century's experience that I have known any administration to be abused and criticized for bringing back better conditions. The Democratic administration, under the leadership of Mr. Roosevelt, has tried to keep that promise, not by words but by action.

It is not the first time, however, that men have been abused for taking up the cause of the masses. George Washington, Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Woodrow Wilson, and even Theodore Roosevelt were abused in their day, some of them suffering abuse almost equal to that which is now to be heaped upon this great President of ours. Woodrow Wilson was crucified by powerful political enemies, and even today some men in high places would like to drag his fair name through the dirt and slime, which is the most shocking thing that can come from men who call themselves patriots. It is not for me, however, to rise here and defend these great men, for their records have been made, and you and I have been made better by their having lived and toiled and sacrificed.

Today we are erecting monuments to their memories, as we will do to Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt when God calls him home, but to me it is most unfortunate that a great people must resort to such low and degrading principles to achieve political ends. I say to you here and now that when the pages of the history of these days will have been written, no name will be more honored than that of the present occupant of the White House, for our posterity will be the recipients of the advanced program we have launched, and which will be continued and brought to completion if our people are wise as I think them to be. All the progress the world has ever made it owes to dissatisfied men and women. I am not alarmed at all because of the dissatisfaction in some quarters, but I am rather encouraged when I know that all of this leads to the reforms which the people themselves will demand. Mr. Gladstone, the greatest of all statesmen, made this statement: "That in every political controversy in the last 50 years the leisured classes, the titled classes, have been in the wrong. The common people, the toilers, these have been responsible for nearly all the social-reform measures which the world accepts today." If we will examine the pages of our own national history we will find this to be true here in the United States. You can point to no great reform in this country of ours without finding that it was bitterly opposed by the wealthy and special-privileged groups.

Now, what was the condition of our great country just prior to this Democratic administration? Well, the farmers, which comprise almost one-third of our population, could not sell their products because the city and town people could not buy.

They had no purchasing power, for, mark you, my friends, when our people have no purchasing power we simply cannot expect to move the wheels of industry. The farmers were bankrupt. A million farmers lost their farms in a period of a few years during those dark days. Industry was practically at a standstill during that same period, for just as surely as you and I are here, if the farmers are not prosperous, the entire Nation suffers, for it does reflect itself immediately. This Nation cannot hope to go on with half our people prosperous and the other half destitute. Between the years 1920 and 1932 more than 10,000 banks closed their doors, and many of these banks did not reopen again. During Mr. Hoover's term of office more than 6,000 banks were closed. If you will examine this record that I am talking about, you will learn that some of these banks paid no dividends to their depositors and that it brought wrack and ruin to individuals and communities, as well as untold hardships.

What a calamity that was, and will it ever be forgotten? I know our friends on the other side don't want us to bring this matter up, but we are examining a record and, of course, the record is not complete unless we examine all of it.

I know something about this, my friends, for I had a lot of my own people affected. The courage of Mr. Roosevelt saved the day, and his action in declaring a bank holiday gave the necessary breathing spell and saved our people from making further runs on banks that would have led to complete financial disaster. Thank God the farmers are gradually getting back on their feet; but again, if it had not been for a sympathetic administration, no one could tell what would have happened to the farmers after the courts ruled out the Triple A. Without a doubt the farmers would go back into the old rut from which they were rescued. We have tried again to help them in the new Soil Conservation Act, which we hope the courts will not invalidate. The farmers are such a potential force in this Nation, for we differ from most of the great nations of the world in that we grow more foodstuffs than we can consume, so that it is of such vital importance that we are interested in his welfare, for it reflects itself immediately upon our own national welfare, and affects the workers in the mills and manufacturing plants, as well as the commercial and financial activities. There is so much that can be done for the farmers that will be helpful to the balance of the Nation that it is of the greatest importance that we have his welfare in mind.

Only 14 percent of the farmers in the United States enjoy electric energy on the farms at this time, and less than 15 percent of these farms have running water in their homes. I am sure everyone can appreciate the potential business value to every line of human endeavor if we could give the farmers an adequate purchasing power, so as to give the stimulus so necessary in our cities and towns. Start the farmers on the road to prosperity and you will enjoy national prosperity, but not until you do this can you realize it. Of course, we have the problems of the towns and cities to solve. When the Government plans for slum clearance and better homes for Americans, we are immediately accused of being socialistic and communistic, as well as every other objectionable name to our form of government. We have millions of men and women living in houses unfit for human habitation. This administration would like to see every man, woman, and child in this country live in decent homes, have a job, paying an adequate wage, and I am quite certain you will agree with me that we have tried to give the necessary stimulant to aid private industry to absorb those that are employable.

When we give consideration to this great group of our fellow citizens, we are told that we are interfering with private industry and slowing up the wheels of industry.

Would those who oppose our program prefer that we pay a dole rather than give work to our people on projects approved and sponsored by local communities? No matter what we attempt to do, we are in a campaign, and fault will be found with everything. We are accused of throwing away the taxpayers' money; we are told to balance the Budget. We are told that our national debt is so burdensome that we are placing obligations upon our posterity that they will not be able to carry. All of this is loose talk, for if you will examine the record you will learn that the per-capita indebtedness of the United States is not as high today as it was in 1919. In 1919 the per-capita debt was $246.09, while today it is $238.44, even though we have had to spend a lot of money to preserve the Republic. Note I say "preserve the Republic." I believe that had the old policies been continued, we might not now enjoy the kind of Government we have nor experience the gains so much sought after. It might be well, too, for you to know that instead of having a per-capita annual interest rate of $9.58, as we had in 1919, today we have an interest rate per capita of $6.04.

It is because of wise administration and the interest of the taxpayers is being protected that this is true.

It is doubtful if any country in the entire world can show a more constructive achievement of a like period than that accomplished by this administration. Since the bank holiday and the passage of one of the major acts of this administration, namely, the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, bank failures have been few; in fact, only 31, and nobody paid any attention to them, for our people knew their money was safe, and they were paid off almost immediately. Compare this with the more than 6,000 failures immediately preceding this administration, and you can have the most partisan enemy of our party admit that we did accomplish something. Today our banks are safe. Safer than at any time in our national history, and the work of relief is progressing, even though we are faced with obstacles never dreamed of in March 1933. Those were the days when citizens all over the Nation wrote and wired to Representatives to "back up the President; go along with anything he might request."

Now I note that the same group are very loud and vociferous in their abuse of the President. They want to make me feel that everything that was done is wrong, even though they have been rescued. I can't help but think that they are now biting the hand that fed them. Businessmen are not consistent, because the record is before us, and I note that unemployment has declined on January 1, over January 1 of 3 years ago, 30 percent; cotton has advanced 92 percent; wheat has advanced 111 percent; corn, 152 percent; industrial production, 51 percent; steel, 251 percent; automobiles, 326 percent; wholesale prices, 33 percent; total exports, 34 percent; imports, 37 percent; listed stocks, 134 percent; and listed bonds, 22 percent—also a 19-percent advance in power production—and yet, if you read the headines and editorials in our newspapers, you would reach the conclusion that the country is going to the dogs. It just doesn't make sense to me, but, of course, when you know that more than 80 percent of the newspapers are controlled by special interests, who have controlled this Government for so many years, it is perfectly obvious that one must not expect any consistency. Back in 1930 we passed a tariff bill that became a law, and this was the beginning of the end in this country. Every economist of any note advised against its enactment, but the party then in power heard their "master's voice" and did its bidding. After becoming a law we immediately felt its effect upon our economic structure, for here's that part of the record: In 1929 we sold about five and one-fourth billions of dollars' worth of American products to other countries. In 1 year it went to less than four billions, and in 1931 a little more than one and one-half billions. Think of it, a loss in trade with other countries to the tune of $4,000,000,000 in 3 years.

And yet we have a great group of people in this country who believe that we can sell to other countries if we don't buy from them. It was evident that those who were responsible for this legislation anticipated the loss of world trade, for immediately they began to erect factories in other countries and, instead of manufacturing the finished product in our own country, employing Americans, these people sent billions of American capital into foreign fields, and instead of employing our people, as they did in the past, American dollars were spent in these other countries to employ those nationals, and our people were sent into the ranks of the unemployed. Today, through the wise leadership of Mr. Roosevelt, we are entering into reciprocal agreements with other countries and are again beginning to trade with one another. You hear a lot of criticism of this and you are being led to believe that we are allowing other nations to dump goods into the United States to the disadvantage of American industry. This isn't true, my friends, for if you will examine the record you will find that we have a balance of trade with almost every other nation we deal with and are selling more to them than we buy from them. We simply cannot have any world trade upon any other basis, and I am sure the American people will not be misled when they know the facts. Farmers are being led to believe that agricultural products are being dumped into the United States at their expense. Less than one-half of 1 percent of the wheat we need comes from other countries, and we have always wanted this wheat. Only 12 percent of our corn is ever on the market for sale, and we always buy some grades of corn from other countries; but, mark you, every time we buy some product from another country they buy something from us in exchange; hence it works to the advantage of the average citizen when we have world trade and when nations deal one with the other. I am no free-trader, I assure you, but I do not believe in destroying the economic structure of the world by the erection of tariff barriers, and which ultimately leads to war. Examine the record and you will learn that almost all wars are the result of these kinds of barriers.

I believe in adequate tariff for the protection of American workmen, but I do not believe that we can hope to employ our people and sell some of our surplus to other nations unless we will in turn permit them to sell to us. No group in America have been affected more than the farmers in respect to these tariff barriers. He must buy his machinery in a highly protected market and sell at such prices as he can obtain at home. Through the passage of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act more than 35,000,000 acres of American farms had to be taken out of production, for we lost world markets to that tune. The Democratic Party is not, nor has it ever been, the enemy of business. It is, on the other hand, the friend of business; but it is the enemy of the special-privilege group who in the past have exploited our people for their own selfish ambitions and benefits. Business has benefited under this administration and would have benefited more had not the Court thrown out one of its major acts and which was contributing so much. Today businessmen are alarmed again, not because of any act of the administration but rather because of their experience right now in price cutting, longer hours, and lower wages. I have had numbers of businessmen speak to me, write me letters, telling me how sorry they are that the N. R. A. was invalidated. My friends, this was a plan given to the Congress by the organized business groups in the United States. It was enacted at their request, over the better judgment of leading lawyers, members of the Ways and Means Committee, who at that time questioned its constitutionality. One of the leaders in the Liberty (Lobbyist) League brought it to the committee and spoke long and earnestly for it. Today that same man is doing everything he can to embarrass this administration, even though he himself was a confidant of the President and a former Member of the House. When it was clearly shown that he was not a liberal nor in sympathy with the President's program, he retired to private life and to the aid of the old group who have contributed so much to bring economic distress to our people so many times.

I want to tell you, too, that there wasn't a business or manufacturing organization in our country who spoke against that bill. They were all favorable to it until—yes; until—we took care of labor. Just as soon as we gave labor a part and considered their welfare we invited the displeasure of that group which led them to go to the courts. They all made money, as I can prove to you by the record. There are some things, however, that businessmen won't learn, and that is that if they want to prosper they must permit others to do likewise. I believe, in this modern day of mass production and labor-saving, labor-supplanting machinery, chain distribution, we have no right to interpret the act of our fathers, those who founded this Government, other than in the light of this modern day. I say to you, therefore, that this administration wants businessmen to make profit. Every act was aimed with that in mind, but we also insist that the laborer is worthy of his hire.

To prove that this administration is the friend of business, I want to keep the record before us. I need only point you to their own reports, and you can then see how harmful this administration has been to them. If I had the time, I could mention hundreds of individuals and corporations, and from their own reports prove to you that we have helped them. Instead of appreciating this, they are organizing to wage the most vicious campaign ever waged against any man in this country.

The thing that burns up many of these so-called industrial leaders is the fact that for one time in their lives they are unable to dictate to the White House. Recently a score or more of businessmen called on the President, telling him what they thought the Government should do. They were given a respectful hearing. One point they stressed was the need for the Government to stop spending money. After they finished the President turned to them, I am told, and told them that Government spending will continue just as long as such aid is necessary, and they were told that they might as well make up their minds to that. The President, in no uncertain language, told them that Government spending to relieve unemployment would continue as long as such aid is necessary. These men do not have the President deceived, for he knows they are trying to get him out of the White House, but let me tell you that just as long as the rank and file of our citizens know that they have a President who is interested in their welfare and their security, just that long will they support him in his humanitarian efforts. The President further told these people that just as long as they continued to chisel in reducing wages, extending hours of work, and fail to cooperate in putting the unemployed to work, just that long will they make thousands of votes for our administration, for the people do know that this party of ours is the party of the people and not of the special interests, who have had things their own way for so many years. I am sure the people of this Nation are not so ignorant as to be deceived much longer. They know that the New Deal is for them, and today they are beginning to realize that the N. R. A. was for their benefit, because they have had to experience longer hours and a reduction in wages.

Recently I received a postal card from a community in North Carolina advising manufacturers that there was a lot of labor available in their community and that young girls could be employed for 65 cents per day, married women for $1 a day, and men for $1.25 per day. I ask you, ladies and gentlemen, if you think we can have any security with such a wage scale; and you must not forget that when an industry in any community drags wages down to such a low level it will reflect itself in that industry throughout the entire Nation. The way to bring happiness and prosperity to our people is only through the payment of an adequate wage; not merely a wage that will permit men and women to purchase necessities but the luxuries, too, that are so dear to our people. Indeed, you likely know that 60 percent of the products we produce might be classed as luxuries, so that it is very important that a wage be paid to those who are employed to permit them to buy these things.

Leaders are surely short-sighted if they fail to appreciate the necessity for an adequate wage, and I am at a complete loss to understand why these same groups should want to "gang up" to defeat Mr. Roosevelt. I understand that a group have already organized to defeat Mr. Roosevelt, and that they are being headed by Mr. William C. Bell, president of the American Cyanamid Co. You will recall that this is the same company that tried to secure control of Muscle Shoals, and might have succeeded if it had not been for the courageous fight on the part of Senator NORRIS. On March 4, when President Roosevelt was inaugurated (1933), the common stock of that company was quoted at 3½. Recently it was selling at 30½. The profits of the company in 1932 were reported at $1,542,908; for 1934 they report profits of $3,846,720, or more than 100 percent increase. The New Deal certainly was injurious to that concern (?). The second member of that powerful group, Mr. Ernest H. Weir, head of the National Steel Corporation, was the same concern who led the fight against collective-bargaining provisions of the N. R. A.

On March 4, 1933, the common stock was selling at 15½, and only recently it sold at 83¼. In 1932 the net income of that corporation was $1,662,920, but in 1934, under the New Deal, the net income was $6,050,721, and for the first 9 months of 1935 the net income is reported as amounting to $8,603,758, or nearly seven times what it was during the last year of the previous administration. Surely the New Deal did hurt them (?).

The next is Mr. Sewell L. Avery, president of Montgomery Ward & Co. On March 4, 1933, the common stock of that company sold for 6⅞. Recently it sold for 40, and their own statement, issued January 1, 1933, showed a deficit of $5,598,554. The last statement I have seen of this company showed a profit of $10,807,636, or a clear gain of more than $16,000,000. Did the New Deal hurt that corporation? The fourth member of the war chest committee (the committee who will see that the money is collected to defeat Mr. Roosevelt) is Mr. A. W. Robertson, chairman of the board of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. On March 4 common stock of that company was selling at 30¾. Recently it sold for 98½.

The company's earnings show for the calendar year 1932 that they lost $8,903,540, but for the first 9 months of 1935 they made a net profit of $8,822,640, or a gain of more than seventeen and one-half million dollars. Now tell me, please, how can these gentlemen justify any organization to defeat a man or a party who has brought into their own coffers such increased profits? These four corporations show profits in excess of $40,000,000 in excess of the last year under the previous administration. If this doesn't please, what will?

I think the answer is in the words of a writer who recently stated: "These men prefer power to profits; not that they love profits less, but that they love power more." Let us continue to examine the record: Farm income in the past 3 years has increased by $3,000,000,000. Unemployment, while still bad, has decreased from 14,000,000 to 9,000,000; but what would it be today if the strong arm of your Government had not gone to the rescue? The value of securities issued for new and refinancing purposes increased from $1,732,000,000 in 1932 to $3,526,000,000 in 1935. The aggregate annual income of the American people increased from thirty-nine billions to more than fifty-four billions in the 3 years under Mr. Roosevelt, or more than fifteen billions, and yet you hear men and women go up and down our country telling the people that this administration is ruining the country. This simply does not make sense in the light of the record before us. The value of securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange has increased from fifty-four billions on December 31, 1932, to eighty-six billions on the same date 1935, or an increase of thirty-two billions in 3 years under Mr. Roosevelt. Commercial failures in the United States have dropped from 31,822 with liabilities of nine hundred and twenty-eight millions in 1932 to 12,185 with liabilities of two nundred and sixty-four millions in 1935. Contracts for residence construction increased from two hundred and fifty millions in 1933 to five hundred and fifty millions in 1935, and home-building permits increased from 27,000 in 1932 to 40,000 in 1935.

The urban home-loan debt has declined from twenty-one billions in 1931 to eighteen billions in 1935. The total wealth of the Nation has increased by more than fifty billions since the advent of Mr. Roosevelt's administration.

In 1932 the American industrial production was 63 percent of normal, in 1935 it was 82 percent. In 1932 the employment in America was 46 percent of normal and in 1935 it was 70 percent of the normal. The consumption of electricity increased from less than 12,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours to more than thirteen billions in the 3 years of this administration. Passenger airplane travel increased from 540,000 in 1932 to 825,000 in 1935, and the amount of freight thus transported increased from 1,600,000 pounds to four and one-half million pounds. The net income of railroads was the highest since 1931 and the prospect for further advancement is acknowledged on every hand. Registration of passenger motor cars increased from 20,800,000 in 1932 to more than 25,000,000 in 1935. The value of industrial production has increased from $31,000,000,000 in 1932 to more than $45,000,000,000 in 1935. The net profit of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for 1935 was $132,994,782 compared with $111,167,554 in 1934. The number of telephones in use in the United States increased in the past 2 years by 65,000. Mr. Gifford, president of that great company, recently stated to his own stockholders, "the forces of the depression are on the wane." The Bethlehem Steel Co. had a deficit in 1932 amounting to $19,404,431, while in 1935 they show a profit of $4,291,253, or a gain of more than $23,000,000. In 1932 the Anaconda Copper Co. had a deficit of $7,571,946, while in 1935 its profits were $11,181,348, or a gain of almost nineteen millions. In 1932 the U. S. Gypsum Co. had a profit of $1,599,416, while in 1935 its net profit was $3,491,000. In 1932 the United States Steel Corporation had a deficit of $71,175,705, while for 1935 it had a net profit of $1,084,917, or a gain of more than seventy-two millions.

In 1932 the Du Pont Co., whose money is largely financing the American Liberty (Lobbyist) League—at any rate, members of that family supply it—had a profit of $26,234,779, while for 1935 its net profit was $62,085,000, a gain in one period of 3 years under Mr. Roosevelt of almost $34,000,000.

No wonder out of these tremendous profits the Du Ponts can contribute so much money to defeat this administration, whose only sin against them has been they have been able to show these increased profits. In 1932 the Chrysler Corporation had a deficit of $11,254,332, while for 1935 its net profits were $34,975,000, or a gain of more than forty-five millions. In 1932 the General Motors Corporation had the very insignificant profit of but $165,000, but in 1935 it had the stupendous profit of $167,000,000.

The Johns-Manville Co. had a deficit of $5,167,104 in 1932, while in 1935 this same company had a profit of more than two millions.

In 1932 the Deere Co.—who make farm machinery—had a deficit of $5,167,104, while for 1935 their net profit was $6,105,000, or a gain of more than eleven millions. The Sun Oil Co. increased its profits from four millions to seven millions. The American Woolen Co. advanced from a deficit of five and one-half millions to a net profit of almost two and three-fourths millions. Armour & Co. in 1932, when they paid no processing tax, had a deficit of $2,526,000, while in 1935, when they paid a processing tax, they had a profit of $5,626,000. In 1 year the Republic Steel Corporation has transformed a deficit of $3,500,000 to a net profit of $4,455,000.

I told you that I was going to examine the record and not make a lot of exaggerated statements that could not be substantiated by facts. All we hear these days is a denunciation of this administration, calling us all the ugly names they can think of, even inventing new names, so as to bring discredit upon us. They will not meet any challenge to discuss the campaign issues upon the records of the previous administration compared to ours. They even go so far as to poison the minds of our people and try to make them believe that we want to change our form of government. No one is more patriotic than the Democratic Party. No man living has a greater interest today in his fellow man than the present occupant of the White House, and he is due all the love and respect and confidence the American people can bestow upon him. There is a reason, however, why these who have benefited by these great gains want to defeat Mr. Roosevelt, and it is because they know that for the first time they are going to be asked to pay their fair share of the expenses of this Government and not be permitted to continue to hide behind exemption on the profits they are able to make under this great free Government of ours. We Democrats believe that those best able to pay should bear the expenses of Government and make contributions to those whom they have denied an opportunity to earn their bread by the sweat of their brows through the installation of modern inventions that displaces human hands.

They know that the great mass of Americans have a great faith in the President of the United States. They would have you believe that the financial structure of your Government was in danger. Well, let's look at the record again. In 1932 the bonds of your Government sold on the financial markets as low as 83 cents on the dollar. Today these same bonds are selling as high as 115. When the World War ended the national debt was a little more than twenty-six billions. Under the laws enacted under Woodrow Wilson, and I want you to know that it was not due to the wisdom of any wise Secretary of the Treasury, this debt was reduced to sixteen billions by 1928. Recently the Government offered securities to its people to the tune of one and one-quarter billion dollars. As evidence of the faith of the American people in their Government, these securities were oversubscribed so heavily that it required more than a week's work to figure up just how heavily oversubscribed they were. I say to you that your Government was never in better shape than it is right now, and I don't want any of you folks to be deceived by the false propaganda being spread to discredit our party and leader. We have nothing to be ashamed of, but, on the other hand, I have given you a record of the achievements thus far that you can point to with pride. You have heard it stated that we have broken our promises. What promises? We promised that no one should starve. Haven't we lived up to that? We promised a stable currency. The American dollar is the most stable money in all the world. Today that money is backed by all the wealth of the Nation instead of some metallic metal. Have you ever known the national credit to be better than today?

It certainly is better than when bonds depreciated to 83. We are paying the lowest rate of interest for the money we borrow than at any other time and yet the credit of the Government is so high. All the countries of the world are anxious to send their gold to this country and investing in our stocks. Why? Simply because they regard our future more secure than their own. They say that we promised to balance the Budget. This is in process of fulfillment. Many of you men are experienced in business and I am sure you will agree with me that it would be unwise to place heavy burdens of taxation upon our people in times of depression. It is much more desirable to distribute the payment of debts over a period of years and make our posterity help to pay for the benefits that will be theirs by reason of the present projects undertaken by your Government to employ the unemployed. This national deficit, you know, was not invented by the Democratic Party. It is an inheritance of ours, and it might be well for us to again examine the record. The fiscal year under Mr. Hoover, ending June 30, 1931, showed a deficit of $902,717,000; the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, showed a deficit of $3,153,097,000; and the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, showed a deficit of $2,163,760,000, or a total of more than six and one-fourth billion dollars, under an administration that positively did nothing insofar as aiding the hungry men and women in America. The only help given to anyone was money loaned to large financial institutions, corporations, utilities, insurance companies, etc. I voted to do this and was glad to have it done, but I then believed, and now know, that had the previous administration gone to the aid of the States and municipalities, as did Mr. Roosevelt, we might have avoided many of the evils that developed during that period.

This six and one-fourth billion dollars is about one and one-fourth billions more than we have thus far spent for relief; and had Mr. Roosevelt known exactly what he learned when he took over the reigns of Government, he might not have made a promise for a balanced Budget at once. A great cry emanating from those in high places now accuses this administration of being wasteful and destroying the Republic. Well, they came to Washington and were accommodated—they were saved; but now, since they have been saved, they find fault with an administration that wants to do the same thing with a great group of honest Americans who, through no fault of their own, find themselves in a condition that is most desperate. Because we are helping this group the vilest abuse is heaped upon us by the American Liberty League and the Republican Party. In the face of the fact that the previous administration never worked upon a balanced Budget surely makes one wonder if they are sincere. I am sure you all are familiar with the fact that most of the States and all of our great centers of population are unable to care for their own and are appealing to the Federal Government to continue aiding them. For us to stop now would place burdens upon taxpayers locally that would be almost unbearable. The actual running expenses of your Government were cut over a billion dollars a year and the 25-percent reduction was carried out for the same kind of administration; and if it were not for the relief that we must give to the cities and the States, this Budget that you hear so much about would have been balanced long ago. Much of our present deficit has resulted from loans we made to banks and industry, railroads, insurance companies, farmers, and small-home owners. We hold recoverable assets to an amount of almost $5,000,000,000, the best security the Nation can offer, its farms and homes. In 1932 almost a million farmers lost their homes and more than that number of small-home owners. In 1933 and 1934 we saved another million farmers from losing their homes and farms and almost another million small-home owners were able to hold their homes and save the equity they had in these homes, representing their lifetime savings.

I ask you, in all fairness, if it isn't just as important that the Government aid this great group as to go to the rescue of these financial groups? We tried to reduce unfair trade practices among businessmen. We tried to banish the sweatshops; we tried to banish child labor, and have been working toward better working conditions for labor and better mutual understanding between employer and employee. We have by evolution, rather than by revolution, tried to inaugurate a system of equitable distribution of net profit in business and industry and laid the groundwork for social and economic security. Whether we shall realize these fine objectives may rest with the Supreme Court. Have you heard it said that we should copy the plan of Great Britain and that she has made greater strides toward recovery? Well, let's examine the record again: We find that England was in a depression 10 years ahead of us and that she is only now emerging with some degree of success. It must be remembered, however, that England had no great agricultural problem to solve. She had no banking break-down; she did not experience the unloading of more than $25,000,000,000 worth of securities not worth the paper they were written on. She had a securities act that prevented the unloading of these worthless securities upon an unsuspecting investing public. She had no labor troubles, such as confronted the United States, for labor in England is better organized than in any other part of the world, and she has experienced a labor government in the past, and is 25 years ahead of us in social security; indeed, we must hang our heads in shame and admit that we are the most backward nation in all the world, among the great civilized nations.

You defeat Mr. Roosevelt and let the old reactionary crowd get back into the saddle and we will go back and lose many of the gains we have made. If we taxed our people as England taxes hers, we would be working on a balanced budget, and I doubt very much if we would have had to borrow any money to pay for all the humanitarian and financial activities during the past years. England's public debt is more than thirty-three billions among 46,000,000 people, or a per-capita debt of $717. France, with a population of 42,000,000, has a debt of twenty-two billions and a per-capita debt of $524, while we in this country, with a population of more than 127,000,000, have a per-capita debt of $238. The national resources of our country are fairly estimated at about $350,000,000,000. We have a public debt of a little more than thirty billions, which is less than 10 percent of our assets.

What bank or banker makes a safer loan than that to any firm or corporation? No nation in all the world can show a better financial statement and the increase of the national income during the past 3 years is responsible for this.

We had some boom days during the 1920–30 period, but we now know it to have been unsound and was simply pointing the way to economic disaster. Will we never learn the lesson that it is wrong to ask men and women to work for a wage that will not permit them to live decently? This is the cause of most of our ills today, ladies and gentlemen, and I say to you again, with all the force at my command, that the way to economic and social security is through the full and complete cooperation of men and women in every line of human endeavor. We would have had much more success in our planned program if it had not been for the Court's ruling.

Every political candidate has promised to help the farmer, for all recognize that by helping him we will help the Nation. Regardless what some would make you believe, the A. A. A. passed in 1933 was the first successful attempt and plan for freeing the farmer from starvation prices and bitter poverty. Recently a farmer from my own district wrote me that he sold a load of corn in my home town. He received $168 for it. He told me that he would have gotten $54 for that load of corn in 1932. That, I think, is an argument that needs little defense on my part. All our wealth comes from the soil. Our factories simply process that which we obtain from the soil, the forests, and the mines. Deny to the soil that which it is entitled to and it affects every man, woman, and child in the towns and cities. When anyone criticizes something that is being done and says that it should not be done, ask him, "What acts operating would you do away with?

"Do you want to do away with the Securities and Exchange Act? Do you want to do away with the Banking Act that for the first time in the history of your country gives control of the money and the Nation's credit into the hands of your Government, instead of Wall Street? Do you want to do away with the Federal Deposit Insurance Act that has done more to restore confidence in our banks than anything else and which has made our banks the safest in our entire national history? Would you want to do away with the agency made possible by the Farm Credit Administration, that has saved these millions to farmers? Would you want to do away with the act that saved almost a million small homes? Do you want to do away with the act that is the beginning of better days for the aged, the cripple, the blind, and underprivileged?"

This act is not all that we would like to have, but it is the beginning of what we have in mind. Of course, we would all like to do away with relief, but until our industrial leaders can give employment to the host of unemployed in this country, we are obliged to continue relief. I am opposed to a dole, such as England has, and those who want us to follow the example of England might want a dole system in this country. No one knows what our opponents do want. They are searching in the dark for an issue and have as yet been unable to find one that will permit them to go to the voters of the Nation with a clean-cut, constructive program. England is now copying our planned program and has appropriated larger sums than we have, comparable to the size of the country. As for me, I would much prefer giving men a job, no matter what that job might be, for I know that men would prefer to walk the streets of their communities feeling that they have worked for what they are given. The New Deal has worked and will continue to work to the advantage of all our people. In our C. C. C. camps we have rehabilitated the lives of thousands of young men who had no jobs, no place to go to, and whose morale was being destroyed in idleness. These young men are being helped and will contribute much to the Nation, not in dollars and cents, perhaps, but they will be sent into fields of usefulness and thank God for an administration who tried to help them. When you hear of the great sums that the New Deal has cost, point to what has been done. While we have spent billions, we have also contributed to the wealth of the Nation to the tune of billions, but above all we have contributed to the moral uplift of men and women who were about ready to give up. I leave this case in your hands. If you want to go back to the old days under the previous administration, you have the choice in the next election. If you want to aid in the rehabilitation of the Nation through Mr. Roosevelt, you will want to vote for him and a sympathetic Congress.

IMPEACHMENT OF FEDERAL JUDGE RITTER

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two or three very short letters and statements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, who are these letters from?

Mr. GREEN. They will take up but very little of the RECORD.

Mr. RICH. The other day the gentleman asked for leave to extend his remarks, and he used about eight or nine pages of the RECORD.

Mr. GREEN. This will not require over a page or two of the RECORD.

Mr. RICH. Several days ago the gentleman asked unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks, and he has included nothing in the RECORD since that time. I have been looking for it.

Mr. GREEN. I have not had the opportunity as yet to get to it.

Mr. RICH. Is this going to cover what the gentleman asked permission 3 or 4 days ago to put in the RECORD?

Mr. GREEN. No; this is on another subject. This has to do with the judiciary and will not cover over a page or two of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, on May 31, 1933, another Member of Congress introduced a resolution to investigate the conduct of Halsted L. Ritter, a judge in the southern district of Florida. On the morning of January 14, 1936, the House Judiciary Committee by a majority vote adopted the report made by Congressman MILLER, a member of the Judiciary Committee. The report held that Ritter should not be impeached. On the afternoon of the same day, on the floor of the House, I rose to a constitutional privilege and impeached Ritter for high crimes and misdemeanors. This was no pleasant duty, I assure you. At that time I filed nine specific articles of impeachment and briefly discussed Ritter's unfitness for the bench. On March 2, 1936, the House of Representatives voted by a substantial majority to impeach Ritter. After several days' trial by the United States Senate, Ritter was on April 17, 1936, by a two-thirds vote convicted and removed from office.

Many of my colleagues have from time to time asked me what was the reaction in Florida to this action by the Congress. In response to this, I can better advise you by briefly quoting from three or four communications, as follows:

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA., April 20, 1936.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
Member, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GREEN: I received a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Tuesday, January 14, 1936, concerning the impeachment of Halsted L. Ritter.

May I express a word of appreciation for your loyalty and courage in presenting the articles of impeachment, for I know that it was no easy task by any means. I do not know Judge Ritter and never had occasion to appear before him, but followed closely the impeachment proceedings, and I am frank to say that I feel you tackled a job which needed attention with proper loyalty and courage, and believe that the vote arrived at was right and just.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours very truly,

HARRY A. HORN.

CITY OF ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., April 20, 1936.

Hon. R. A. (LEX) GREEN,
House of Representatives Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN GREEN: I feel that you deserve the genuine commendation and thanks of all of the good people of the State of Florida for your work in bringing about the impeachment of Halsted L. Ritter, Federal judge, the southern district of Florida.

It is such work as this on the part of our Congressmen that makes our people continue to have the highest respect of those in authority in this branch of our Government.

With best wishes, I am,

Very sincerely,

WALTER B. FRASER.

Mr. Fraser is mayor of St. Augustine, Fla.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., April 29, 1936.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
Room 1230, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE GREEN: For some time I have been intending to drop you a line and express my personal appreciation for your valued services in the matter of the impeachment of Judge Ritter, but other matters kept me busy until this morning.

As I recollect the matter, the House Judiciary Committee had decided to drop the impeachment charges, and I have been told that the chairman or some other member of that committee advised Judge Ritter to go home and forget the matter, whereupon you took up the cudgels and, almost single-handed, forced the matter upon the attention of the House and got the resolution of impeachment. For this service you are entitled to the undying gratitude of the legal profession.

I am expecting to be in Washington next week, and if there is a minute to spare, I hope to have an opportunity to stop by your office and assure you in person of my appreciation of your valuable services to your constituents.

Sincerely yours,

WM. H. ROGERS.

From the Ocala Star the following is quoted:

It is a sad thing to see a man who has occupied such a position of honor to hang his head in disgrace, but it is even sadder to contemplate a situation where the people of a great State lose respect for the integrity of their courts. And it is doubtful that Judge Ritter, or the court over which he presided, could have maintained the respect of those coming into it with the public believing him an unfit person to sit on the bench.

Respect for the judiciary must be maintained; there must be no suspicion of the men who wear the robes of the judiciary, if this democracy is to survive, if we are to maintain faith in its institutions.

A meed of praise is due R. A. GREEN, Congressman representing the Second Florida District, for a service he has rendered in the interest of a purified judiciary, the honor and integrity of the Federal bench. R. A. GREEN had the courage to present the impeachment charges against Judge Halsted Ritter and prosecute the case in the House, which resulted in his removal from the bench.

These are a few of the many written responses from Florida.

THE CASE IS CLOSED

I cannot straddle my constitutional oath as a Member of Congress and condone dishonesty and corruption. Honesty is the brightest jewel in the covenant crown of human conduct. In this case I tried to do my conscientious duty, and no more.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

GLADYS HINCKLEY WERLICH

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12183) for the relief of Gladys Hinckley Werlich.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Gladys Hinckley Werlich, widow of McCenery Werlich, late a Foreign Service officer of the United States at Paris, France, the sum of $4,100, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purposes of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "McCenery" and insert "McCeney."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MIKE CHETKOVICH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6518, for the relief of Mike Chetkovich.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. CLARK of Idaho objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

PERRY RANDOLPH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11493, for the relief of Perry Randolph.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the introducer of the bill here?

The SPEAKER. No reservation of objection can be made under the rule.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, their widows, children, and dependent relatives, Perry Randolph shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a cook, Company D, One Hundred and Twelfth Ammunition Train, Thirty-seventh Division, United States Army, on July 26, 1918: Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the enactment of this act by reason of its enactment.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to grant to the said Perry Randolph a discharge certificate showing that he is held and considered to have been honorably discharged as of such date.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON GAS LIGHT CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10724, to amend the charter of the Washington Gas Light Co., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate bill, S. 3977.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, provided the same shall be found by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to be in the public interest, the Washington Gas Light Co. may, for lawful corporate purposes, by a vote of two-thirds in number of the outstanding shares of stock of the company, increase its capitalization and from time to time issue such additional stock, in such amounts, for such considerations, of such classes, either with or without par value, and with such rights, privileges, and conditions, as said Commission may approve.

All shares of capital stock of said company hereafter issued for which the agreed consideration shall have been paid to the company, and all shares of capital stock of the company heretofore issued, as well as shares into which such shares heretofore issued may be changed, shall be deemed and taken to be fully paid and nonassessable, and there shall be no liability to the company or to creditors of the company on the part of any subscriber to, or holder of, such shares.

Said company may, upon obtaining approval of said Commission, change all of the shares of its capital stock at any time outstanding into the same or a different number of shares issued pursuant to the provisions of this act, by following the same procedure and complying with the same requirements as are now prescribed in section 639a of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, as amended (41 Stat. 1195), in respect of a change of name by a corporation.

SEC. 2. Provided the same shall be found by said Commission to be in the public interest, said company is further authorized to consolidate or merge with The Georgetown Gaslight Co., upon such conditions as may be approved by said Commission; and upon such consolidation or merger The Georgetown Gaslight Co. shall, without further proceedings, become dissolved and merged into the Washington Gas Light Co., and all property, rights, privileges, and franchises of The Georgetown Gaslight Co. shall, subject to encumbrances or liens thereon to secure the bonds or other securities issued by The Georgetown Gaslight Co., and to the payment of any valid claims against, or indebtedness of, The Georgetown Gaslight Co. existing at the time of such merger, pass to and be vested in the Washington Gas Light Co. as its property, with all the powers, rights, privileges, and franchises now possessed by either or both of said companies, including the right in the Washington Gas Light Co. to institute and prosecute in its own name any action in connection therewith: Provided, That pending actions against The Georgetown Gaslight Co. may continue against The Georgetown Gaslight Co. until the merger of said companies, and thereafter against the Washington Gas Light Co. Actions or claims against The Georgetown Gaslight Co. filed after the said merger shall be brought against the Washington Gas Light Co.

The Washington Gas Light Co., after such merger, shall have the full power and authority to manufacture, transmit, distribute, and sell gas in all parts of the District of Columbia and adjoining territory, for any purposes for which gas is now or may hereafter be used; and to lay, repair, and replace gas mains and pipes in any of the streets, avenues, and alleys of the District of Columbia: Provided, That said work and its incidents, including the replacement of pavement or roadway cut, shall be without cost or expense to the District of Columbia or to the United States: Provided further, That except as specifically provided in this act nothing contained herein shall be taken or construed as altering, repealing, or changing any provision of existing charter or franchise or rights of the Washington Gas Light Company or of any statute, law, ordinance, or regulation pertaining thereto.

SEC. 3. All charters, statutes, acts and parts of acts, laws, ordinances, and regulations inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of this act, but only so far as inconsistent herewith or repugnant hereto, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved to the Congress.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and the similar House bill were laid on the table.

NAMBE PUEBLO GRANT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3460, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the persons entitled to compensation on account of private claim 111, parcel 1, Nambe Pueblo grant.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to find and determine the person or persons entitled to participate in the award of the Pueblo Lands Board in private claim 111, parcel 1, Nambe Pueblo grant. The finding of the Secretary of the Interior shall be final and conclusive, and the person or persons so found entitled shall be compensated out of the appropriations authorized by section 3 of the act of May 31, 1933 (48 Stat. L. 108–109).

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAJ. E. P. DUVAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5503, authorizing the President to order Maj. E. P. Duval before a retiring board for a hearing of his case, and upon the findings of such board determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his resignation.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. DIRKSEN objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BERTRAM LEE SCHOONMAKER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 785, for the relief of Bertram Lee Schoonmaker.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho, Mr. COSTELLO, and Mr. HOPE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

J. L. SUMMERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12182, for the relief of J. L. Summers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. There is a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's table, and, without objection, the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill (S. 4447), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of J. L. Summers, formerly disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department, for the sum of $38.12, being the amount disallowed on voucher 11557 in the June 1934 cash account of said disbursing clerk.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and the similar House bill were laid on the table.

MAIZEE HAMLEY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10376) for the relief of Maizee Hamley.

There being no objection, the bill S. 3747 was substituted for the House bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

EDWARD B. WHEELER AND STATE INVESTMENT CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3715, authorizing the reimbursement of Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. for the loss of certain lands in the Mora grant, New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, there is a similar Senate bill (S. 427) on this subject, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edward B. Wheeler, of Las Vegas, N. Mex., and the State Investment Co., of New Mexico, who were declared by the Supreme Court of the United States (United States v. State Investment Co. (1924), 264 U. S. 206) to be the owners, respectively, of certain lands in the tract known as the Mora grant, located in San Miguel and Mora Counties, N. Mex., an amount to be computed by the Secretary on the basis of $2.20 per acre for every acre of lands embraced within the claim of any bona fide entryman on such lands holding under patent from the United States or under any entry allowed by the Department of the Interior, the recovery of which lands by the said Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. is barred by the stipulation entered into between such parties and the United States on January 23, 1918. Such payment shall operate as a full settlement of all claims of such Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. against the United States or the owners of such lands for damages for the loss of such lands.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 3715) was laid on the table.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James Fitzgerald the sum of $156.07 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States on account of the taking of such sum by a Federal prohibition agent from claimant's place of business on October 12, 1931.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Fitzgerald", insert "of Chicago, Ill."

Page 1, line 9, after the figures "1931", insert "and for the return of which he failed to make application: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ROBERT B. BARKER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9926, for the relief of Robert B. Barker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized to reimburse Robert B. Barker, senior contact representative, Veterans' Administration, in such amount or amounts as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may deem reasonable and just, but not to exceed the total sum of $233, for travel heretofore performed on official business of the United States, at personal expense, in recovering funds due certain Veterans' Administration wards from their guardians and developing evidence upon which indictments were based for violation of Federal penal statutes, for the periods November 1 to 7, December 4 to 16, and December 20 to 25, 1934, inclusive: Provided, That payment of any sum or sums due upon the approval of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall be paid from the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Veterans' Administration, 1936."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow the claim of Robert B. Barker, senior contact representative of the Veterans' Administration, in the sum of $213.82, payable from the current appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Veterans' Administration", for travel performed on official business for the Government in recovering funds due certain Veterans' Administration wards from their guardians and developing evidence upon which indictments were based for violation of Federal penal statutes, which expenses he paid from personal funds, covering the periods November 1 to 7, December 4 to 16, and December 20 to 25, 1934, inclusive."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

J. R. COLLIE AND ELEANOR Y. COLLIE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1042, for relief of J. R. Collie and Eleanor Y. Collie.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

LOUIS H. CORDIS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1075, for the relief of Louis H. Cordis.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the requirements of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in the case of Louis H. Cordis, of Portland, Oreg., formerly employed as a deckhand on the United States dredge Clatsop, and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to consider and act upon any claim filed by him under the provisions of such act, as amended, within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, for compensation for disability resulting from injuries received by him on September 15, 1928, while cleaning, in the performance of his duties as such employee, certain sand chutes: Provided, That compensation, if any, shall be paid from and after the date of enactment of this act. Such payments of compensation shall be made out of funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the payment of awards under the provisions of such act of September 7, 1916, as amended.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the words "1 year" and insert "6 months"; page 2, line 8, after the word "act", strike out the remainder of the bill.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LUCILLE M'CLURE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1827, for the relief of Lucille McClure.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lucille McClure, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,600, compensation as the widow of former Deputy Administrator of Prohibition H. S. McClure, of Spokane, Wash., whose death on January 15, 1929, was caused by injuries sustained while in the Government service: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to receive and consider the claim of Lucille McClure, of Spokane, Wash., widow of a former deputy administrator of prohibition, H. S. McClure, whose death occurred on January 15, 1929, allegedly as a result of injuries sustained by him while in the performance of his duties, under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes', approved September 7, 1916, as amended, except that the limitations of time in sections 15 to 20 thereof, both inclusive, are hereby waived: Provided, That claim hereunder shall be filed within 6 months from the date of the approval of this act: Provided further, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

F. L. FORBES ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3241, authorizing adjustment of the claims of F. L. Forbes, John L. Abbot, and the Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claims of F. L. Forbes for $1,035.30 as amount of judgment and costs in his favor, in the United States District Court at Lynchburg, Va., against Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co., contractor for the construction of a Government building under contract Tisa–3198, dated May 26, 1932, concerning a party wall; a claim of John L. Abbot for $350 as attorney's fees for assisting in the defense of Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co. in such suit; and the claim of Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co. for a balance of $248.30 on account of its costs in connection with the matter, and to allow said amounts in full and final settlement of their respective claims. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,633.60, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said claims: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TEXAS PACIFIC-MISSOURI PACIFIC TERMINAL RAILROAD OF NEW ORLEANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3544, authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Texas Pacific-Missouri Pacific Terminal Railroad of New Orleans.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Texas Pacific-Missouri Pacific Terminal Railroad of New Orleans for reimbursement of its expenditures for labor, material, and rental of equipment in repairing the damage to its car-ferry incline tracks located at Gouldsboro, La., within the limits of the New Orleans Harbor, which were damaged on September 18, 1931, by the sinking thereon of a concrete bank-protection mattress during the Government's construction operations under an approved project for revetment work within the limits of New Orleans Harbor, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim not to exceed the sum of $1,440.75. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,440.75 or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay said claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOSEPHINE RUSSELL

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4416, for the relief of Josephine Russell.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and determine the claim of Josephine Russell for disability resulting from injuries sustained by her on or about June 19, 1933, while employed by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, as a nurse in the Pine Ridge Hospital, Pine Ridge, S. Dak., under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, except that the time limitation in sections 15 and 20, inclusive, of said act are hereby waived: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4395, for the relief of the State of New Jersey.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of New Jersey and David S. Hill, United States property and disbursing officer for New Jersey, are hereby relieved from accountability for certain property belonging to the United States, of the total value of $4,467.76, which property was loaned to such State for use by the New Jersey National Guard and was unavoidably lost or destroyed when issued for use in connection with the Morro Castle disaster on September 8, 1934.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. POWERS: Page 1, line 10, after "1934", insert a comma for the period and add the following: "and providing for replacement without cost to the State of New Jersey like articles for reissue to and the use of the National Guard of New Jersey."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my memorial address on the late Thomas D. Schall the sermon delivered by Reverend Davis at the funeral.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT—CONFEDERATED BANDS OF UTE INDIANS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 381) for the relief of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians located in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers may be read in lieu of the report.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the statement.

(For conference report and statement see proceedings of the House of Feb. 28, 1936, p. 3005.)

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] for a brief statement.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, the conference report and the statement thereon just read by the Clerk involve S. 381. This bill was passed by the Senate as introduced and by the House with two amendments. The Senate disagreed to the two amendments of the House, and it was sent to conference. It is here on the conferees' report, which is unanimous.

SUBSTANCE OF THE BILL

The bill authorized the payment to the Ute Indians of Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico the amount of $161,400 for 64,560 acres of land taken by the United States for naval oil reserves. This is compensation at the rate of $2.50 per acre. The facts upon which this bill is based are these: By Executive orders of December 6, 1916—President Wilson—and September 27, 1924—President Coolidge—64,560 acres of land, which the United States held in trust for the Ute Indians, were appropriated and set apart by the United States for its own use as a naval oil reserve. The Indians have never been compensated for this land. This bill provides for the payment for the taking of such land at the rate of $2.50 per acre—the minimum set by existing statutes as to the price to be paid for shale oil lands.

Prior to its passage by the Senate and House, the bill had received the unanimous approval of the Indian Affairs Committee of both the Senate and House. It had also received the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

THE AMENDMENTS OF THE HOUSE

The House amended the Senate bill in two particulars: (1) The bill as passed by the Senate provided that the sum of $161,400 should be paid "without prejudice to the claim of said Indians for 4-percent interest on said sums from the date of said Executive orders."

The Senate disagreed to this amendment, but the conferees from the Senate receded from its disagreement, and this amendment of the House remains in the bill.

Second. The House also amended the bill so as to provide that there should be deducted from the same appropriation "all gratuities granted to said tribe as defined in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act of 1935." This amendment has been struck out by the conferees. It was struck out because the conferees found as a fact that it was unnecessary for the protection of the United States, in that the United States is still a trustee and guardian for said Indians of the proceeds received or to be received from the sale of 7,000,000 acres of land which, under an existing treaty with said Indians, has either been or is to be sold by the United States for the benefit of said Indians at not less than $1.25 per acre. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 64th Cong., 1st sess., vol. 53, pt. 3, p. 2294.) Further, it was determined that up until 1933, at least, all disbursements made by the United States for the benefit of said Indians had been made out of moneys in the Treasury of the United States belonging to said Indians. There are, therefore, few if any gratuities that have been expended for the benefit of these tribes.

Finally, the members of the committee agreed that the House amendment was unworkable in that the bill did not define what was meant by gratuities, and did not confer upon any official authority to make a determination as to the amount of such gratuities. Under these circumstances the amendment of the House made the bill ineffective.

It has always been my opinion since I became a Member of Congress that a conference report represents the best efforts and the best results attainable by the members of the conference. The House, of necessity, delegates to its conferees appointed authority to act on behalf of the House. Of course, it is understood that the conferees will to the best of their ability attempt to attain a conference report differing as little as possible from the bill as passed by the House; but we must remember that on the other end of the Capitol is another coordinate legislative branch of our Government just as insistent on its position as we are on ours. If the conferees of the respective Houses of Congress in all instances stood adamantly for their own position, then, of necessity, the legislative wheels of the Government would cease. Consequently there must be some compromise by both sets of conferees. Both the Senate and the House expect such compromise. In this particular conference report, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the House conferees, acting in good faith, keenly sensing their responsibility, did the best that they could, which is embodied in the conference report. Having done our best, we feel that we have a right to enthusiastically support the conference report and to ask the cooperation of our colleagues in its adoption. I feel confident that the conference report should be and will be adopted.

Speaking generally, Mr. Speaker, for a few minutes on the Indian situation in the United States today, and having in mind the present attitude of many Members of Congress toward Indian legislation, the Representative in Congress whose constituency consists partly of Indians is in a very embarrassing and precarious situation. This House has seen fit to create a Committee on Indian Affairs, to which committee all Indian legislation is committed. I have served on this committee now for 4 years. Some of the finest and most able Members of Congress are members of this committee. It is not considered a major committee, but I doubt whether there is a committee of Congress which has more work to do than the Committee on Indian Affairs. This committee works diligently; it works in good faith; and, so far as I have been able to observe, its deliberations on legislation are mature and intelligent. It may at times make mistakes, but certainly if the respective committees of the House have anything in common it is that they all at times make mistakes. Being a member of the majority party, which, of course, is in control of the committee and largely responsible for its work and action, I nevertheless want to compliment the minority members of this committee, who have exhibited during my membership on this committee a fair and splendidly cooperative spirit. Partisanship in this committee, I would say, is as little noticeable as in any committee of the House.

However, due to the attitude of some Members of the House, both on the majority and minority sides, this committee finds its work absolutely frustrated by such Members. I do not charge such Members with bad faith, but is it not presumptuous on the part of any one Member of Congress or on the part of several Members of Congress, for that matter, to arbitrarily take a stand against all legislation reported by a committee of this House. If members of the Indian Affairs Committee were to retaliate in kind, then it would be futile to ever call the Consent Calendar.

If there is a black spot in American history, it is this Government's treatment of the first Americans, our Indian population. It is one of the major problems of the Government today. It deserves far more study than it gets at the hands of Congress, and it will not be solved until Congress assumes a vastly different attitude. It will not be solved as long as a few Members of the House arbitrarily stand in defiance of the passage of any and all Indian bills.

I say to my colleagues who have taken this stand on the floor of the House that if you are so interested in stopping Indian legislation, then it is your duty as Members of Congress to apply for a place on the Indian Affairs Committee so that your responsibility and duty to the Indians of this country will be coincident with your desire to protect this Government against unjust Indian claims.

I trust that the conference report will not meet the same fate as many similar meritorious bills from the Indian Affairs Committee have met during this session; and, again, in conclusion urge my colleagues to vote favorably on this legislation.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] for a short statement.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, the general difficulty with these Indian bills seems to revolve around the term "gratuity." Every time an Indian claim is presented some Member of Congress wants to insert the word "gratuity", so that if the Indians do get anything they can set it off with some alleged gratuity.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Is it not true that the white man has received a considerable gratuity from the Indian?

Mr. BURDICK. The distinguished Member from Minnesota is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentlemen on this side of the aisle that in this particular bill the question of gratuity is taken care of. The matter of gratuities was settled up to 1933. Some might have accrued since that time, but the Government now has 7,000,000 acres of Indian lands which it holds as trustee, and it is amply protected should this bill pass as it is.

Further, permit me to state that a bill is now pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs, which it is expected will be reported out shortly, defining the word "gratuity." If this latter bill is passed it will remove much of the objection to Indian legislation for the reason that Congress will then know what a gratuity is. No act of Congress has ever defined the word; no decision of any court has defined it. In every case it is an undetermined something that defeats all attempts of Indians to recover what is due them. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] has made such a clear and able statement as to what this legislation is that I do not believe it is necessary to add more to his statement.

We yielded to the Senate in the request to eliminate the interest feature of the bill, and the Senate yielded to us on the question of gratuities. As the bill now comes before this body, there can be no valid objection to the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

EMMA HASTINGS

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10435) for the relief of Emma Hastings.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Emma Hastings the sum of $10,000. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of Emma Hastings against the Government because of the death of her husband, Charles R. Hastings, on October 30, 1935, when the truck in which he was traveling was struck by a Works Progress Administration truck: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$3,500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADVERTISEMENT OF DRUGS OR DEVICES

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce are giving consideration to a bill (S. 5) to prevent the adulteration, misbranding, and false advertising of food, drugs, devices, and cosmetics in interstate, foreign, and other commerce subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, for the purposes of safeguarding the public health, preventing deceit upon the purchasing public, and for other purposes, which was passed last year. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point by outlining four possible amendments to that bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO PARAGRAPH (B), SECTION 601, PAGE 21, OF S. 5

On page 21, section 601 (b), strike lines 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That no advertisement of a drug or device shall be deemed to be false under this act if it is disseminated only to members of the medical, pharmaceutical, or dental professions, or appears only in the scientific periodicals of these professions, or is disseminated only for the purpose of public-health education by persons not commercially interested, directly or indirectly, in the sale of such drugs or devices."

REASONS WHY THE ABOVE AMENDMENT SHOULD BE ADOPTED

Paragraph (b) of section 601, page 21, of S. 5, as it passed the Senate makes no distinction between advertising of a drug to the lay public and advertising the same to physicians and other professional men. Exactly the same test is set for advertising to the medical, pharmaceutical, and dental professions as is laid down for advertising to the laymen, which is unfair and unnecessary.

Many new drug preparations advertised only to the professions named are being brought out each year and the advertising directed exclusively to members of the professions. In such cases, involving new preparations, it cannot be said that the representations made are supported by demonstrable scientific facts or substantial and reliable medical or scientific opinion, as required by the Senate bill. The members of the medical profession, for example, are competent to determine whether or not the particular preparation, with the composition of which they are familiar, may have the claimed effect when administered, and they desire to test out that effect in their own practice. They are not deceived by any "puffing" or seller's praise indulged in by the manufacturer of the drug or device, whereas the layman has no expert knowledge or criteria upon which he can form an opinion except the advertising, and therefore advertising to the layman should be subjected to more rigorous standards.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 3744. An act to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 6, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

10833. Also, petition of the Akron section of the National Council of Jewish Women, urging the passage of the pure food and drug bill (S. 5) with elimination of the provision which permits a claimant whose goods have been seized to require trial in the court in his own district, elimination of the Bailey amendment, and retention of enforcement of the advertising provisions; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

10834. Also, petition of the College Women's Club, of Wilkes-Barre, favoring Senate bill 5, the pure food and drug bill, with exception of the provision which allows a claimant whose goods have been seized to require a trial in the court of his own district, and the Bailey amendment which prevents multiple seizures of misbranded products; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

10835. By Mr. RISK: Resolution of the Department of Rhode Island, Women's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, recording its strong objection to any proposition to amend the existing Constitution of the United States of America so as to upset the present division of political powers and administration between State and Nation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

10836. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Citizen's Nonpartisan Committee of St. Louis, Mo., to dissolve the United States Territorial Memorial Expansion Commission and requesting Congress not to appropriate any money for a memorial at St. Louis; to the Committee on the Library.

10837. Also, petition of the Nevada State Bar Association; to the Committee on the Library.

10838. Also, petition of the city of Phoenix, Ariz.; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord and praise Thy name, O Lord Most High. How great are Thy works, and Thy thoughts are very deep. Sing, O ye heavens, for the Lord hath done it; shout ye lower parts of the earth, break forth into singing, O ye mountains. Verify Thy word unto us, gracious God: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." We beseech Thee to free our understanding from fatal errors and deliver us from false illusions. As our deliberations carry with them abiding issues, he who is not rich toward Thee is poor, indeed. Quicken our appreciation of our high calling and press us forward, filled with hope, admiration, and love for our dear native land, and unto Thee be eternal praises. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN THE TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill (H. R. 12285) to rehabilitate and stabilize labor conditions in the textile industry of the United States; to prevent unemployment and to provide minimum wages, maximum hours, and other conditions of employment in said industry; to safeguard and promote the general welfare; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an announcement to the House.

A few days ago I received the unanimous consent of the House for the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] to address the House for 30 minutes today. Mr. ROBSION is confined to his house with the grippe and will be unable to be present. We will therefore have to renew the request at a later time.

JOSEPH G. CANNON

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow it will be 100 years since Joseph G. Cannon, one of our greatest statesmen, as well as a great Speaker of this House, was born, and I ask unanimous consent that 30 minutes may be set aside tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, for some of those who knew him best to pay their respects to his memory.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am perfectly willing for the House to pay a deserved tribute to this grand old man, but I want to ask unanimous consent to modify the request by having the House meet at 11:30 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment of my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, and that immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matter on the Speaker's table, 30 minutes be allowed for the Members to pay a tribute to the memory of former Speaker Cannon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12098) "making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes", having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 10, 23, 32, 33, 34, and 52.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 35, 36, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, and 59, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$26,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"For investigations relating to the establishment of a Federal zone along the international boundary, United States and Mexico, as authorized by Public Law Numbered 286, approved August 19, 1935 (49 Stat. 660), including salaries and wages; fees for professional services; supplies and materials; communication service; travel expenses; transportation of things; hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger- and freight-carrying vehicles; hire with or without personal services of work animals and animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles and equipment; and such other expenses as the Secretary of State may deem necessary, $4,650, to be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "and for payment of foreign counsel employed by the Attorney General in special cases, $600,000, no part of which, except for payment of foreign counsel, shall be used to pay the compensation of any persons except attorneys duly licensed and authorized to practice under the laws of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"No part of the funds appropriated by Title II of this act for salaries of judges, the Attorney General, Assistant Attorneys-General, Solicitor General, district attorneys, marshals, and clerks of court shall be used for any other purpose whatsoever, but such salaries shall be allotted out of appropriations herein made for such salaries and retained by the Department and paid to such officials severally, as and when such salaries fall due and without delay."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert: "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert: "$30,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$850,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$628,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "miscellaneous expenses, $2,785,000, of which amount not to exceed $885,000 shall be available for the Veterans' Placement Service, the Farm Placement Service, District of Columbia Public Employment Center, and all other purposes, including not to exceed $197,500 for personal services in the Department in the District of Columbia, and the remainder shall be available for payment to the several States in accordance with the provisions of the said Act of June 6, 1933, as amended: Provided, That apportionments for the fiscal year 1937 shall be on the basis of a total apportionment to all States of $3,000,000, and in order to supply the Government's apportionments to States under such Act during the fiscal years 1936 and 1937, which are not capable of being supplied under the foregoing appropriation, there is hereby appropriated so much as may be necessary to supply such apportionments, but not more than $1,675,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 9 and 58.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

State Department

On amendment no. 1: Appropriates $26,000 for collecting and editing official papers of the United States instead of $23,000, as proposed by the House, and $29,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 2, 3, and 4: Appropriates $10,000 for expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $7,500, as provided by the House, and corrects total accordingly.

On amendment no. 5: Appropriates $4,650 for an investigation relating to the establishment of a Federal zone along the international boundary, United States and Mexico, in lieu of providing an appropriation of $25,000 for an investigation and the construction of fences on the border.

On amendments Nos. 6, 7, and 8: Limits any salary or honorarium paid from the appropriation for arbitration of smelter-fumes controversy to a rate not in excess of $10,000 per annum, and agrees to Senate language requiring decision under the arbitration to be consummated within 2 years.

On amendment no. 10: Retains the House language requiring a deduction of 5 percent of moneys received in settlement of general claims of American citizens against the Mexican Government, which deduction is deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

On amendments nos. 11 and 12: Appropriates $90,000 in addition to the unexpended balance for expenses of the Special Mexican Claims Commission, as proposed by the Senate, instead of appropriating solely the unexpended balance, as proposed by the House.

Department of Justice

On amendment no. 13: Limits the operation of the statute requiring competitive bidding for purchases or services rendered in instances where the amount involved is more than $50, as provided by the Senate, instead of $100, as provided by the House.

On amendment no. 14: Appropriates $435,000 for enforcement of antitrust and kindred laws, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $420,000, as provided by the House.

On amendments nos. 15 and 16: Inserts language and provides funds in the amount of $7,765 for living-quarters allowances for the United States Court in China, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 17: Appropriates $3,300,000 for salaries and expenses of marshals, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,285,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 18: Appropriates $3,083,510, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries and expenses of district attorneys, etc., instead of $3,063,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 19: Reinserts in the bill language deleted by the Senate providing for payment of foreign counsel under the heading "Salaries and expenses of special attorneys, etc.", and provides an appropriation of $600,000 instead of $500,000, as proposed by the House, and $700,000, as provided by the Senate. Also inserts a limitation that none of the funds may be used to pay anyone except a duly qualified and licensed attorney.

On amendment no. 20: Limits the salary paid to any one person employed as a special assistant to the Attorney General to not to exceed a rate of $10,000 per annum, as proposed by the Senate, instead of limiting to $10,000 the amount that may be paid to any one person, as provided by the House.

On amendment no. 21: Appropriates $2,125,000 for salaries and expenses of clerks of courts, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,095,650, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 22: Inserts with minor changes language proposed by the Senate to require prompt allotment and payment of salaries of judges, district attorneys, marshals, etc.

On amendment no. 23: Limits the amount that may be expended for personal services at the National Training School for Boys to $111,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $113,625, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 24: Appropriates $225,000 for expenses of the National Training School for Boys in lieu of $215,000, as proposed by the House, and $236,470, as proposed by the Senate.

Department of Commerce

On amendment no. 25: Inserts Senate language providing for use of not to exceed $10,000 of certain appropriations for the Department of Commerce for purchase of letters patent, applications for letters patent, etc.

On amendment no. 26: Inserts Senate language limiting the use of the appropriation for air-navigation facilities under the Bureau of Air Commerce. The limitation prevents the use of more than $50,000 for investigation, research, and experimentation in developing and improving aids to air navigation.

On amendment no. 27: Strikes out language, as proposed by the Senate, which would permit replacement of airplanes for service and experimental use for the Bureau of Air Commerce.

On amendment no. 28: Appropriates $882,920 for establishment of aids for air navigation under the Bureau of Air Commerce, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $942,920, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 29: Appropriates $4,764,080 for maintenance of air navigation facilities under the Bureau of Air Commerce, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,523,080, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 30: Appropriates $328,800, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries in the office of the Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, instead of $321,400, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 31: Appropriates $410,000 for promoting commerce in Europe, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, as proposed by the Senate, in lieu of $394,300, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 32: Appropriates $192,400 for promoting commerce in Latin America, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, as proposed by the House, instead of $201,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 33: Appropriates $123,000 for promoting commerce in the Far East, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, as proposed by the House, instead of $129,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 34: Appropriates $33,700 for promoting commerce in Africa, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, as proposed by the House, in lieu of $38,000, as provided by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 35 and 36: Appropriates $527,000, as provided by the Senate for export industries, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, instead of $500,000, as proposed by the House, and adopts the Senate figure of $520,000 for a limitation on the amount expendable for personal services in the District of Columbia, instead of $495,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 37: Appropriates $30,000 for operation of foreign trade zones in lieu of $25,000, as proposed by the House, and $35,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 38: Makes appropriation for printing accumulated census data under the Census Bureau immediately available in the amount of $35,000, as provided by the Senate.

On amendment no. 39: Makes appropriation for salaries and general expenses under the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection available to pay for contract stenographic reporting services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as provided by the Senate.

On amendment no. 40: Appropriates $800,000 for testing, inspection, and information service, Bureau of Standards, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $780,000, as provided by the House.

On amendment no. 41: Appropriates $671,500, as proposed by the Senate, for research and development, Bureau of Standards, instead of $669,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 42: Appropriates $110,000 for standards for commerce, Bureau of Standards, as proposed by the Senate, in lieu of $109,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendments nos. 43 and 44: Corrects total and limitation on personal services in the District of Columbia, Bureau of Standards, to correspond with conference action on amendments numbered 40, 41, and 42.

On amendment no. 45: Appropriates $125,600 for salaries, office of the Commissioner, Bureau of Lighthouses, as proposed by the Senate, in lieu of $121,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendments nos. 46 and 47: Appropriates $4,424,000 for general expenses, Bureau of Lighthouses, as proposed by the Senate, in lieu of $4,034,000, as proposed by the House, and makes the amount of the increase, namely, $390,000, immediately available for repairs due to storm and ice damage, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 48: Appropriates $156,420 for salaries in the Commissioner's office, Bureau of Fisheries, as proposed by the Senate, in lieu of $154,800, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 49: Appropriates $62,000 for fishery industries, Bureau of Fisheries, as proposed by the Senate, in lieu of $60,800, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 50: Appropriates $15,000 for the enforcement of the black bass law, Bureau of Fisheries, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 51: Appropriates $12,500 for the Fisheries Cooperative Marketing Act, as provided by the Senate, in lieu of $10,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 52: Eliminates an item, inserted by the Senate, to provide for acquisition of a site for a fish hatchery in Montana.

Department of Labor

On amendments nos. 53 and 54: Appropriates $140,000 for promotion of health, safety, employment, etc., as proposed by the Senate, in lieu of $124,500, as proposed by the House, and provides a limitation of $83,580 on the amount expendable for personal services in the District of Columbia, as provided by the Senate, in lieu of $70,000, proposed by the House.

On amendments nos. 55 and 56: Appropriates $850,000 for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in lieu of $748,000, as proposed by the House, and $884,600, as provided by the Senate, and places the limitation on personal services in the District of Columbia at $628,500, in lieu of $600,000, as proposed by the House, and $640,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 57: Retains the language inserted by the Senate for the United States Employment Service, which will provide apportionments to all States under the terms of the Wagner-Peyser Act on the basis of a total apportionment of $3,000,000. Appropriation is made of $2,785,000, as proposed by the House, in lieu of $2,807,500, as provided by the Senate, and the House limitations on personal services in the District of Columbia is retained. In addition to the specific appropriation, the Senate language which is agreed to makes an indefinite appropriation of such amount as may be necessary, not to exceed $1,675,000, to supply apportionments to States that cannot be supplied out of the specific appropriation of $1,900,000.

On amendment no. 59: Inserts a Senate provision making an appropriation of $275,000 for the participation of the Federal Government in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, in June of 1936.

THOS. S. MCMILLAN,
MALCOLM C. TARVER,
LOUIS C. RABAUT,
JAS. MCANDREWS,
ROBERT L. BACON,
FLORENCE P. KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, are we going to have an opportunity to interrogate the gentleman from South Carolina who is in charge of the bill?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take just a little time to discuss the amendments, and then I shall yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report embraces 59 different amendments that were adopted by the Senate. The conferees of the two Houses have met and, as usual, we have, I think, made a rather happy compromise on all of the amendments with the exception of amendments no. 9 and no. 58. At a later time during the consideration of the report I shall ask the House to give us a vote on these two amendments.

I may say, generally, that the conference report is under the Budget estimate to the extent of approximately $7,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, this completes my statement on the report unless there are some questions.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Referring to amendment no. 22, relating to the appropriation for the salaries of the Attorney General, district attorneys, marshals, and clerks, what is the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is an amendment put on by the Senate to expedite the payment of salaries of these employees on the 1st of every month.

Mr. MAPES. My understanding is that the Attorney General or the Department of Justice in the past has had discretion or power to fix the salaries of some of these officers. Does this amendment affect such discretion in any way?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The fact is the amendment will not change the present policy in the Department with respect to the salaries paid any of the employees. The purport of the amendment is merely to provide that these salaries shall be paid promptly on the 1st of the month.

Mr. MAPES. What is the evil attempted to be cured by the amendment?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The evil has been that these employees have not been paid promptly on the 1st of the month. They used to pay the expense bills promptly, but not the salaries, and the idea of this amendment is to see to it that this situation is remedied.

Mr. MAPES. It seems to me that is a rather unusual situation. I had supposed that the salaries of the Attorney General and the marshals and the clerks were paid promptly at the beginning of the month.

Mr. MCMILLAN. We hope this provision will bring about that result.

Mr. MAPES. And that is the only purpose of the amendment?

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is the only purpose; yes.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take 10 minutes, but I do want to make one or two comments about this conference report.

On the whole, the conference report and bill are in pretty good shape. The Budget sent to the House the amount of $122,651,577. After the bill had passed the House the Budget estimates actually and in prospect were increased $1,440,000, so that the Budget estimate before the Senate was $124,091,577.

In spite of this increase, however, the Senate added to the House bill only $960,000.

The conference report cut that amount considerably, so that we find that the conference report which you have before you today is under the final Budget estimates by the amount of $7,639,382.

I think if all the appropriation bills went through in as good shape as this one we would be considerably under the President's budget and would save a lot of money for the Government.

I want also to suggest that this bill contains for new laws and new construction that did not exist in 1936 the sum of $8,697,000. If that amount for new construction and new laws is eliminated, this bill will be found to be under the appropriation for 1936. I think we can be well satisfied with the moderation shown by another body compared to extravagance shown in connection with other appropriation bills, particularly the Interior and Agriculture appropriation bills.

In closing, I want to take the opportunity to express my personal appreciation of the splendid work that the acting chairman of our subcommittee [Mr. MCMILLAN] has done on this bill. [Applause.] He has been most courteous and fair; he has understood his subject completely, and has been a worthy successor of Mr. OLIVER, of Alabama, whom we all regret has not been able to be present in the House this year.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. There was a request from the Budget to increase the appropriations $1,000,000. The Senate put it up to $900,000, and the conference report has allowed how much?

Mr. BACON. The conference report, as it appears today, is $734,180 over the bill as it passed the House; but in considering that point you must realize the Budget's additional estimates, amounting to a total of $1,440,000, were sent to the Senate after the bill had passed the House.

In other words, the increase in the conference report from the amount of the bill carried in the House is only about one-half of the amount of the Budget's additional estimates sent to the Senate and considered by them. The Budget estimates before the House were $122,651,577. The Budget estimates before the Senate were $124,091,577. The bill as it passed the House appropriated $115,718,015, and as it passed the Senate appropriated $116,678,015, and in this conference report the appropriation is $116,452,195. This last amount is under the final Budget estimates before the Senate by $7,639,382.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to have anything personal to say in respect to those who are in charge of this State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriation bill, any more than I do about the conferees on any other bill, but I do call attention to the fact that the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] still rings true, namely, Budget estimates are one thing and what Congress appropriates is another. What we appropriated last year is one thing and the amount we increase the appropriation this year is another thing. It is your responsibility and it is my responsibility to see that we do not wreck this Government on the shoals of financial disaster. In 1936, for this same State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriations bill, we appropriated $106,767,327. This year we have appropriated $114,467,400, that is, when the bill came from the House of Representatives, so that we increased the appropriation bill $7,700,074. The conferees have been working with the Senate, and they did a good job in holding the Senate down, but the conference report increases the bill $960,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I shall when I have made my statement. If I make any mistakes, I want the gentleman to correct me. In other words, we have increased the appropriation $8,860,070 over what it was a year ago. We talk about Budget estimates. We talk about what the departments want. Gracious, goodness me, if we permitted the departments of this Government to come in here and get everything they want, we would wreck this Government in the next 2 years. We are appropriating this year more than we appropriated last year to the extent of $8,860,070 in this particular bill, and before the day is over we will have another war appropriation bill here which will add $150,000,000 over what we spent last year and another Treasury and Post Office bill adding over $30,000,000. Just think what we are doing. That is, if you have mentality to think.

I say to you that Mr. Morgenthau, before the Senate committee last week, made the statement that we are going to be in the red over $6,000,000,000 this year. Think of it! We we are going to spend this year over $6,000,000,000 above our income! When we were considering the tax bill last month asking for taxes amounting to $800,000,000, that was only a drop in the bucket compared to our spending. What you must do is cut down these expenses—these appropriations. That is where you will have to save the money; that is the only sensible thing to do; that is where you will have to try and save the country. I appeal to you now that it is necessary for you to use good common sense in these increased appropriations. Do not let the Senate run over this House. Let our conferees go back and let them strive earnestly to cut down just as these conferees no doubt did, but we must say to the Senate "halt", and we must stop the Senate and we must stop the House of Representatives from making these exorbitant appropriations.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. McMILLAN. I make this statement for the gentleman's information. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] stated that were it not for the social-security legislation and the building program that the Congress passed last year and the previous year the appropriation carried in this bill here for these four departments would be less than was carried last year.

Mr. RICH. Very well. Let me answer that. Every year since I have been in Congress we have added new duties to the departments and they are just like snowballs coming down over the mountain. They get larger and larger each year because of the added duties we put on them. The departments of the Government are becoming great and eventually they are going to wreck the Nation. Jefferson said, "The best government is that that governs least."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States made the statement in Baltimore that the national income for 1932 was $35,000,000,000, and for 1936, $65,000,000,000. A report was made by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, in the Senate the other day that the national income in 1932 was $39,000,000,000 and for 1936 he estimated $54,000,000,000. There is a very great difference between the statement made by the President and the statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it seems to me that the President ought to get his figures from the Secretary of the Treasury before he makes any financial statements. He also made the statement that on the first of the year we are approaching a balanced Budget, when the Secretary of the Treasury says this week that we are going to be out of balance $6,000,000,000. Spending six billions more than we receive.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I have only 2 minutes. If the gentleman will get me 5 minutes, I shall yield to him. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau says that we will be $40,000,000,000 in the red at the end of 1937, and I begin to think the Secretary knows what he is talking about. He is worried; why would he not be? It seems to me that if the men in Congress knew how they are wrecking the country you would not be doing the things that you are doing here now, running the national debt beyond the ability of the oncoming generations to stand it. I say to the young people of America, demand that Congress stop this ruthless expenditure and waste of Government funds. Compel them to pay their own way and not hand the burden on to us to assume.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired. The question is on the conference report.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman's statement, I call the attention of the House to the fact that under the social-security bill approximately $3,000,000 are carried in this appropriation.

For the construction work on the Rio Grande there is a total of $2,800,000. For new construction of our penal institutions there was a total of $2,850,000. This is a total increase of $8,600,000 for these three projects. In other words, if this $8,600,000 was left out or eliminated from this bill, the appropriation for this year for these four departments would be less than carried in last year's appropriation bill.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

THE CANADIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, for 150 years under all administrations the power to fix tariffs affecting our foreign trade has been exercised by Congress in accordance with what were supposed to be the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Three years ago the last Congress passed legislation purporting to grant unprecedented powers in tariff making to the President of the United States. In justice to my Democratic colleague from the State of Maine, my nearest congressional neighbor, Hon. E. CARL MORAN, Jr., it is a pleasure to state that he was one of the two Democratic Members of the last Congress to vote against this extraordinary grant of power.

The Canadian trade agreement of last November was one of the early fruits of this new program designed according to the declarations of the Secretary of State steadily to lower our tariff barriers and promote the policy of the good neighbor.

In general it seems fair to say that Canada lowered the duties on things they desired to buy from us for the benefit of their consumers. Conspicuous among these items were the machinery and magazines that were the cheap products of our mass production. Canadians very much wanted these things at our lower costs.

On the other hand, the United States lowered its duties not on the things the United States wished to buy, because our market in most instances was already suffering from a glut but rather were our tariff walls lowered on the things Canada wished to sell to us. These were the products of their farms, their fisheries, and their forests.

Certainly no one in America has apprehended any shortage in these items except as the result of the restrictive policies of recent years.

In the first 3 months of this year under the new agreement exports from the United States to Canada of the things they desired and needed increased over the same period of last year by $7,715,000. Meanwhile Canada increased its shipments to the United States over the same period a year ago by $16,185,000. These products in large measure added to our glut and prejudiced our producers of agricultural products.

The difficulty of an equitable agreement between countries on hundreds of items of trade is greatly accentuated in the case of Canada and the United States, where we are trading a market of 100,000,000 consumers in this country for a market of 10,000,000 consumers in our neighbor to the north.

In addition, Canada very prudently provided that the far-famed most-favored-nation clause must now be modified to read "most favored foreign nation", which automatically excluded from its benefits, so far as we are concerned, the entire British dominions, with a population of over 400,000,000. Canada was left free to make any tariff concessions that might at any time seem advisable to any of the British commonwealth of nations and the United States was left helpless.

A SCRAP OF PAPER

All these disadvantages were understood when the agreement was announced.

It has remained for our Canadian neighbors, however, very promptly to educate our State Department and our people to some of the possibilities inherent in this agreement.

Everyone was startled to read in the Canadian dispatches of this past week that the new Canadian budget introduced last Friday proposed to restore the previously existing tariffs on four items of commerce with the United States.

The State Department advises that the United States is helpless since these items were not included in the first schedule of the Canadian agreement, but in the so-called intermediate tariff the rates in which it now appears are subject to change by Canada at any time.

What Canada has done in this instance for potatoes, raisins, eggs in the shell, and cut flowers can be done equally well for hundreds of other items contained in the so-called intermediate tariff.

Meanwhile the British preferential tariff may be lowered at will or altogether abolished and the United States must be crucified in the name of being a good neighbor. It seems evident that the Secretary of State should exercise more of his personal charm and transparent sincerity of purpose upon our neighbors to the north in order that they may not scrap their side of the agreement before the ink is scarcely dry.

Curiously enough, the same budget lowers the duties still further on certain manufactured products, demonstrating rather conclusively that the lowered rates of the Canadian agreement were in many instances not concessions to the United States but, rather, grants in aid to the Canadian consumer.

In other words, as the New York Times of May 2, 1936, revealingly reports:

The concessions are designed to benefit the Canadian consumer rather than the United States exporter.

The Times also adds:

The budget was notable for the Government's evident desire to conciliate the British exporters, as it grants to the British substantial concessions on cotton and rayon yarns and fabrics, earthenware, and iron and steel machinery.

The United States is without redress, although the effects upon our trade relations may be most profound.

The increases in the tariff are aimed squarely at the United States. Taking potatoes off the free list and restoring the duty of 75 cents per hundredweight shuts the door in the face of any possible American exports from the South or the North. Canada is still left with the full concession of shipping into the United States 750,000 bushels of seed potatoes at reductions of 20 and 40 percent, respectively, from our tariff.

The present favorable price for potatoes need not blind our producers or our State Department to the absolutely unfair character of this action.

The tariff on eggs is restored to 10 cents a dozen. Raisins are raised from 3 cents to 4 cents and there are similar increases on cut flowers and baby chicks.

Under the trade agreement with Canada, Maine received practically no benefits, and many serious duty cuts on items of great importance were bound upon the free list for 3 years.

Certified seed potatoes are one of the most important products of eastern and northern Maine. Of scarcely less importance are pulp and paper products and lumber and fish. All these items of trade were committed for 3 years against increased protection of any character.

Also of importance were such items as frozen blueberries, maple sugar, cream, and many other products of New England.

Already the herring industry in eastern Maine has been demoralized by the 50-percent cut in duty, and hundreds of honest citizens find their means of livelihood depleted or destroyed.

The Canadian fishermen and fish plants are meanwhile going forward full blast to take advantage of the concessions of our State Department under the authorization of the President and to develop a most extensive market for their products within the United States.

The only result of this "good neighbor" policy in eastern Maine is to increase the present and prospective burden of relief.

The recent action of the Canadian Government suggests strongly that from their standpoint the Canadian agreement is to a substantial extent a scrap of paper binding still upon our Government and our people but with myriad loopholes through which they can vary their trade policies as they please. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 9: Page 28, after line 10, insert:

"INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE

"For the expenses of participation by the United States in an Inter-American Conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses (and by indirect routes and by airplane if specifically authorized by the Secretary of State); hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; equipment, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and maps; stationery; official cards; entertainment; printing and binding; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $75,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 58: Page 113, after line 5, insert:

"SEC. 3. That in passing upon applications made for compensation under the provisions of the item for 'Payment to cotton ginners' contained in title I of the Supplemental Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936 (Public Law No. 440, 74th Cong.), and in making payments pursuant to such applications, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed, in the interest of saving as much administrative expense as possible and in order to avoid delay in passing upon such applications, to accept as sufficient proof in connection with any such application, proof of the number of bales ginned by the applicant during the period June 1, 1935, to February 10, 1936, inclusive: Provided, That no payment shall be made on any application for such compensation unless the application is filed prior to September 1, 1936."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 58 with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 3 and insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That in passing upon applications made for compensation under the provisions of the item for 'Payment to cotton ginners', contained in title I of the Supplemental Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936 (Public Law No. 440, 74th Cong.), and upon payments pursuant to such applications, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Comptroller General of the United States are authorized and directed, in the interest of saving as much administrative expense as possible and in order to avoid delay in passing upon such applications, to assume that the additional expenses incurred in connection with the administration of the act of April 21, 1934 (49 Stat. 598–607), equaled 25 cents per bale, counting round bales as half bales, during the period June 1, 1935, to February 10, 1936, inclusive: Provided, That no payment shall be made on any application for such compensation unless the application is filed prior to September 1, 1936."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. McMILLAN, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 7, 23, 24, 26, 31, 32, 33, 34, 41, and 44.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 8, 17, 19, 21, 22, 28, 30, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 46, 47, and 48, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,352,574"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,955,042"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$154,608,560"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$154,323,560"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "No payment shall be made from money appropriated in this Act to any officer on the retired list of the Army who, for himself or for others, is engaged in the selling of, contracting for the sale of, or negotiating for the sale of, to the Army or the War Department, any war materials or supplies." And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,103,527"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "$26,887,384, and, in addition, $501,714 of the appropriation 'Pay of the Army, 1936', which shall remain available until June 30, 1937"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,675,819"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,478,323"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$916,990"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 4, 9, 20, 25, 29, 35, 42, and 45.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 1: Increases the limitation upon expenditures of nonmilitary appropriations under the Chief of Engineers for personal services in the Office of the Chief of Engineers from $303,960, as proposed by the House, to $323,960, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 2: Amends the House provision in re damage claims incident to field exercises with view to facilitating settlement of such claims, as proposed by the Senate, modified to provide that payments will be accepted by claimants in full satisfaction of claims.

On amendments nos. 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14, relating to "Pay of the Army": Provides for the pay of 12,125 commissioned officers, instead of 12,000, as proposed by the House, and 12,350, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates for aviation pay of officers, $2,224,001, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,186,501, as proposed by the House; applies the $1,440 maximum for flying pay for nonpilots to "nonflying" officers, as proposed by the House, instead of to "nonrated" officers, as proposed by the Senate; provides for the pay of 165,000 enlisted men, as proposed by the Senate, instead of 150,000, as proposed by the House; appropriates $6,352,574 for rental allowances, instead of $6,309,574, as proposed by the House, and $6,481,574, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $5,955,042 for subsistence allowances, instead of $5,912,561, as proposed by the House, and $6,031,511, as proposed by the Senate, and liberalizes the limitations proposed by the House against the payment of retired pay to retired officers in private employ so as to permit payment when so employed if they do not personally engage in the selling of, contracting for the sale of, or negotiating for the sale of, to the Army or the War Department, any war materials or supplies, as proposed by the Senate, omitting, however, the Senate proposal which would countenance officers on the active list accepting private employment with other than persons or concerns furnishing war materials or supplies to the Government.

On amendment no. 15: Appropriates $3,103,527 for "Travel of the Army", instead of $3,096,027, as proposed by the House, and $3,126,027, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 16: Restores the reappropriation of $501,714, proposed by the House, partly to finance the cost of subsistence, and appropriates, in addition, $1,193,643, both in lieu of an additional appropriation of $3,390,714, proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 17: Appropriates $6,621,779 for "clothing and equipage", as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,759,522, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 18: Appropriates $12,675,819 for "Army transportation", instead of $12,139,083, as proposed by the House, and $12,825,819, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 19: Appropriates $13,039,668 for "Barracks and quarters and other buildings and utilities", as proposed by the Senate, instead of $12,139,668, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 21: Appropriates $5,301,806 for "Signal Service of the Army", as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,282,556, as proposed by the House.

On amendments nos. 22, 23, and 24, relating to the Air Corps: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate,the House provision making the appropriation available for the procurement of radio and armament for the 58 additional airplanes the House provided for beyond the number provided for in the Budget; provides, as proposed by the House, that Crissy Field may not be operated as an air station after June 30, 1936, instead of allowing the station to be continued without further expenditure upon structural improvements or installations not of a removal character, as proposed by the Senate, and restores the House provision designed gradually to do away with lighter-than-air activities apart from balloons.

On amendments nos. 26 and 27, relating to "Medical and Hospital Department": Provides for the care of supernumerary patients, in Army hospitals, as proposed by the House, and appropriates $1,478,323, instead of $1,465,198, as proposed by the House, and $1,491,448, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 28: Appropriates $536,427 for "Engineer Service, Army", as proposed by the Senate, instead of $518,427, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 30: Appropriates $1,483,608 for Chemical Warfare Service, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,467,297, as proposed by the House.

On amendments nos. 31 to 34, both inclusive, relating to seacoast defenses: Appropriates $8,518,994, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,793,994, as proposed by the Senate, and restores the distribution of such total sum exactly in the manner proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 36: Provides that expenses incident to the performance of duty by personnel of the National Guard and Organized Reserves in the care, maintenance, and operation of the ranges used in the conduct of the national matches shall be borne by the appropriation, "Promotion of rifle practice", as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 37: Appropriates $8,574,195 for the Organized Reserves, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $8,474,195, as proposed by the House.

On amendment nos. 38 and 39, relating to Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Appropriates $4,585,846, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,067,996, as proposed by the House, the increase of $517,850 being for the establishment of 51 additional R. O. T. C. units, and provides for the reestablishment of Medical Corps units after the current fiscal year, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 40: Appropriates $2,275,000 for citizens' military training camps, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 41: Appropriates $545,726 for the promotion of rifle practice, as proposed by the House, instead of $645,726, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 43: Appropriates $916,990 for cemeterial expenses, instead of $814,990, as proposed by the House, and $987,990, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 44: Strikes out the appropriations proposed by the Senate, totaling $8,000,000, for continuing work on the Sardis Reservoir, Miss.; the Conchas Reservoir, N. Mex.; and the Bluestone Reservoir, W. Va.

On amendment no. 46: Appropriates $130,000, as proposed by the Senate, incident to flood-control work in progress at or near the town of Niobrara, Nebr.

On amendment no. 47: Requires reports of post exchange operations to be certified by commanding officers that the operations were conducted according to law, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 48: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the House provision limiting to 10-percent profits upon contracts or subcontracts in excess of $10,000 for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete aircraft or ordnance material, or any portion thereof.

DISAGREEMENTS

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On nos. 4 and 9: Relating to "Pay of the Army."

On no. 20: Relating to the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point, N. Y.

On no. 25: Relating to the conveyance of certain land to the city of Little Rock, Ark.

On no. 29: Relating to the appropriation "Ordnance service and supplies, Army."

On no. 35: Relating to personnel of the National Guard and Organized Reserves participating without pay as competitors or range officers in the national matches to be held during the fiscal year 1937.

On no. 42: Relating to the appropriation "Cemeterial expenses."

On no. 45: Relating to the appropriation for rivers and harbors.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, because of the figures that are carried in this report, and because I do not want to trust to my memory to give the exact figures, I have prepared a short memorandum; and if the Members will give me their attention for a few minutes I will tell them exactly what this conference report carries.

Mr. Speaker, if this report be adopted and the House should agree to the motions I shall make with respect to the amendments reported in disagreement—and these motions, I might say, will comply with the understanding we had with the Senate conferees—the bill will carry a total of $572,446,844, which is $252,461 less than the sum recommended in the Budget.

For purely military objects the bill will carry $383,104,859, which exceeds the Budget recommendations by $8,079,349; and for nonmilitary objects the appropriations will aggregate $189,341,985, or $8,331,810 below the Budget estimates.

As to the military increase, $1,840,823 was in the bill as it left the House, all owing to a floor amendment. The additional amount of $6,238,526 is in consequence of Senate amendments and the action of the conference committee. It is distributed as follows:

50 additional officers to be commissioned in the Air Corps and 50 additional medical officers and 25 additional dental officers	$355,481
165,000 enlisted men, or 14,127 in excess of the number provided by the House	3,495,595
Motor-vehicle repairs (total availability, $1,186,500)	150,000
Repairs to barracks and quarters (total availability, $1,764,087)	500,000
Purchase of land, West Point	431,000
Modernizing 75-millimeter guns, including restoration of $7,500 added by House for increasing salaries of employees at Charleston (S. C.) Ordnance Depot	413,600
Organized Reserves, to give additional number of Reserve officers active-duty training	100,000
R. O. T. C., for the establishment of 51 additional units	517,850
C. M. T. C., to insure that there will be not less than 30,000 trainees	275,000
These items total	6,238,526

Under the nonmilitary head the bill as it left the House was $29,313,810 below the Budget estimates. In the action we are submitting to you for approval that amount is reduced to $8,331,810, the restored amount of $20,982,000 being distributed as follows:

Land for enlargement of a national cemetery	$100,000
Additional employee in connection with cemeterial activities	2,000

Rivers and harbors and flood-control projects	$20,750,000
Flood-control work on the Missouri River near Niobrara, Nebr	130,000
Total	20,982,000

This gives a rather general picture of the matter.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain charts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, at this time I want to discuss a feature of the War Department bill I feel is of very great importance. I refer to the 10-percent profits limitation amendment unanimously adopted by the House when the bill was before us on February 14. You will remember I offered the amendment and it was agreed to unanimously. The Senate has taken out that amendment and the conference committee has left it out. I have before me the hearings of the Senate Subcommittee on War Department Appropriations, and it is very evident that this amendment was taken out of the bill on a clear misapprehension of fact on deliberate statements made perhaps in the belief they were correct, but I challenge those statements, based on information I have. I believe I can show the Members of the House wherein those statements made to the Senate committee are grossly in error.

I want briefly to touch on the argument made as to why we should not have a 10-percent limitation amendment, but before doing so, I want to again give you a little history of the battle we have made to try to limit these enormous profits the different investigating committees over the last several years have disclosed were being made by various concerns. Any Member here who has looked into the matter knows the enormous profits that have been made, not only in the manufacture of munitions, but also in aircraft. These enormous profits have been revealed. I would be glad to have the Members of the House read the hearings of our naval aircraft investigation filed in the records of April 1934.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I am sorry, but I cannot yield until after I make this preliminary statement.

You will remember the disclosures made by Senator BLACK's committee investigating ocean- and air-mail contracts day after day. They showed, for instance, that Pratt-Whitney started out with a borrowed monkey wrench in a garage, so to speak, and, overnight, their stock went up to 97 on the boards, and in less than 2 years they had made many millions of dollars' profit, principally from Government contracts. Similar records have been made by other aircraft concerns, especially the ones which were fortunate enough to secure Government contracts. Going down the line on the proposition here day after day, these disclosures were again made by Senator NYE's munitions investigating committee; and I want briefly to refer, as the basis of my information—and I wish I had time to read them to you—to hearings of both the House Naval and Military Affairs Committees in 1934 investigating aircraft procurement by these Departments. I have these hearings before me and I refer you to these records, showing the enormous profits that have been made by these different concerns, not only in naval but in Army purchases of these different aircraft supplies. They were exorbitant.

TOBEY AMENDMENT

Bearing in mind what I have said, you will recall that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] in 1934 offered an amendment to the Vinson-Trammell Ship Authorization Act limiting profits on ship and aircraft construction for the Navy to 10 percent. That amendment was unanimously approved by the House. The mechanics for carrying it into effect were written into that bill, and the bill became law in March of 1934. It contains complete provisions as to how the 10-percent limitation was to be carried out and has been carried out. With that as a basis it is nothing but right, fair, and proper that, since profit on aircraft purchases of the Navy and ship construction of the Navy is limited to 10 percent, the same rule should apply to similar purchases for the Army.

The House adopted an amendment to this bill limiting profits to 10 percent. General Craig and Mr. Woodring in their statements raised five objections as to why they thought this should not be carried out. They offer no substantial proof other than their unsupported statements to back up their contention as to why these profits should not be limited by the inclusion of this amendment in the bill. I refer you to my speech of April 30 on this subject, which I believe fully answers the contentions raised by both of them. The Government records show the enormous profits these different concerns have made on sales to the Government. It is true they have changed their system of bookkeeping to show a diversion of profits. They have resorted to many frauds on the Government to hide their profits; for example, these recent investigations have shown that they make large enlargements and improvements of plant facilities and charge that as part of their overhead to cut down the amount of profits being made and thus beating the tax laws.

They are not showing profits as large as before we began these investigations, but they are making the profits just the same, and the best evidence of that is whenever any of these concerns get a Government contract, just watch the stock-market board and see how the stock of those concerns begins to jump.

When our committee was investigating the enormous profits these different concerns that were selling to the Navy were making, there was clearly brought out the totally inadequate system which was in vogue in both the Navy and War Departments in connection with checking the overhead cost, and we have not improved this system.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. As a result of those investigations, however, the gentleman will admit there has been a salutary effect and that the system of audits and the system of checks upon these organizations, their financial affairs, and costs has been materially improved.

Mr. McFARLANE. I would say just the contrary, and I will read Mr. Woodring's statement and make just a few remarks in that regard which will show that the system has not been improved.

This is what Mr. Woodring said on page 22 of the War Department hearings about aircraft procurement. It is true that the committee did investigate this matter and made certain recommendations in an endeavor to get honest competition in these Departments, but we have not got it yet. Here is what happened: The law that the Congress passed in 1926 provides for a very definite system of procurement. Let me call your attention to that Procurement Act and how these Departments have strayed away from it and have willfully and maliciously violated the law and are doing so at the present time.

I inserted in my remarks on March 23 a copy of the Aircraft Act of 1926, section 10, showing just exactly what the law provides as to aircraft procurement. Briefly the law states that if we want to buy experimental planes there shall be a negotiated contract with reference to how these planes shall be purchased. That is contained under section 10 of the Aircraft Act. Whenever aircraft is bought in quantities, section 10 (a) and 10 (e) provides that advertisements shall be inserted in the various trade journals so that everybody may bid and where honest competition open to the whole world may be had in connection with the purchase in quantities of aircraft under the Aircraft Act.

I placed in the RECORD not once, but several times the Comptroller's records concerning these official Government contracts as construed by the legal department of the Comptroller's office, which shows that more than 90 percent of the aircraft purchased from 1926 to 1934, at which time these investigations were held, was bought in violation of the law.

Mr. Woodring's statement is to the effect that he has worked out a system since these investigations were had and since he has learned that the law has been violated.

Mr. Woodring says:

> In looking up the law some 2 years ago I found that we were not carrying out the law, the Defense Aircraft Act of 1926, in the method in which we were procuring our aircraft, and as you know—you have heard a lot about it—we changed from a negotiated contract to a competitive bidding basis, which, I think, conscientious opinion holds is according to law.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman will grant that investigation was held 2 years ago.

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; but this testimony was given before the committee last month when the bill was up for consideration.

I want to read this provision so that the House may get the matter clearly before it. This is the kind of competition that Mr. Woodring said is competition, and this is the kind of procurement that we have in the War Department today. Let me read his own words:

> For instance, we will send out invitations for bombers for delivery in 10 or 12 months, and probably three different concerns scattered well over the United States to bid on bombers. Certainly under that kind of system the companies are going, with their engineering and designing and researching departments, are going to try and build, develop and build, and deliver on the line the finest bomber in order to win the competition and therefore get the business.
> The bidder is required to submit with his bid a completed airplane on the line for test, as he submits his bid, and these airplanes are thoroughly tested and contracts awarded to the manufacturer who has produced the finest performing airplane, after we have evaluated all the planes in competition.

So, instead of having proper competition as provided by the Aircraft Act, and instead of having free open competition according to the law, what happens? They send out a circular letter to a few firms for bids, and only to the ones they want to send this notice to. Then they buy an airplane on the line. That is what Mr. Woodring says they are doing; and, having done that, how can we say they are having honest competition which is open to the world?

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman is not correctly informing the House. I know that, with his conscientious zeal and his interest in this question, he would not want to misinform the House.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am taking Mr. Woodring's own statement; and if the gentleman will tell me where I have not informed the House correctly, I would like to have him do so.

Mr. KVALE. The specifications are not limited, and the announcements are not sent to only a restricted group in the industry. They are sent to all who may be interested in these announcements. I happen to know that to be the fact, because I have looked into this matter very carefully. As a matter of fact I sat upon the subcommittee and helped to conduct these hearings which developed the facts to which the gentleman refers. The gentleman knows this to be a fact.

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman I may say that I read Mr. Woodring's own statement before a Senate committee last month, and I will read in a minute about a recent purchase made supposedly under an experimental contract, but in fact a production contract made in clear violation of the law. Twenty airplanes were purchased from the Douglas Aircraft Corporation at $49,500 apiece for the skeleton plane without the engine, and so forth, which was the highest bid when, as a matter of fact, three other concerns bid around $29,000 apiece for them, or $20,000 less than the Douglas Corporation, from whom the planes were bought. These concerns stated that their bids were based on the Government requirement, and the bids were $20,000 cheaper than the bid of the Douglas company, but the Douglas company got the contract. That is under Mr. Woodring's system of competition. Thus, we find the War Department on this contract for 20 airplanes purchased under Mr. Woodring's revised aircraft system of purchasing that without any proper system of checking values he purchased these planes from the Douglas company, the highest bidder, although three other companies bid on this same contract, and their bids were from $20,000 to $30,000 per skeleton plane lower than that of the Douglas company, and according to the Comptroller's Office the bids of these three other concerns, all of them more than met the minimum requirements which the specifications set out. Thus, we find the Government on this contract alone paid more than $500,000 more than they could have bought similar equipment for, which more than met the Government's requirements.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. As I understood Mr. Woodring's statement as recently made, it was to the effect he now favors competition between manufacturers which should get the lowest price if there is good competition.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Woodring's statements made regarding the system of procurement of aircraft he has worked out, which he knows is contrary to the Aircraft Act, does not give us full, open competition as required by law. That is what I was complaining about.

Mr. RICH. Then, if in the future we demand that they publish this to the world and have them bid on certain specifications, then we ought to get the rock-bottom price on the equipment necessary in respect of airplanes and various other Government purchases.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. In just a moment. I want to make this statement first:

In further answer to the questions raised I have here recent official opinions from the Comptroller General's office showing that this is the way the War Department is making these purchases today. They are not making them through competition as required by law, and the Comptroller General's office holds they are not following the law today as the law is written. The Comptroller General's office finds they are not only violating the law in aircraft procurement today, as they have been ever since the act was written, but they are doing it with respect to all the different accessories required. For instance, we are paying around $3 apiece for spark plugs, when the Department, by competition, could buy them for less than half of that amount, and buy the same kind and character of spark plugs. The same thing is true of other things in proportion.

Mr. Speaker, this runs into much money. It runs into a tremendous amount of money, and yet we have the Department coming before the committees of the Congress asking to be allowed to continue this racket of buying their equipment in open violation of the law without competition, and also asking to be allowed to continue their same old procedure.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I will yield for a short question.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman's statement was that these articles are being bought in open violation of the law?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; they are.

Mr. CARTER. How does it happen that the Comptroller General's Office allows them to pay for them?

Mr. McFARLANE. That is just the point and that is the whole racket, and I am pleased that the gentleman has raised that point. The prime purpose of the Aircraft Act of 1926 was to take away from the Comptroller General the exclusive right to say whether or not the law had been complied with, and to place in the hands of the War and Navy Departments the right to say whether the law had been complied with, and we have had trouble over there ever since. The very minute they passed the Aircraft Act of 1926 they took away from the Comptroller General's office the right to say whether the law had been followed and left that right with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and they allow their underlings to construe the law just about as they please. They set up a system of procurement just about as they please, as Mr. Woodring has done, and as the records will show, the system in effect since 1926 has caused the few big companies to get nearly all the business, and we would never know what they were doing if they were not required to file these contracts with the Comptroller General's office after they have made their purchases. I think this answers the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I may say further that a careful check of the records down there shows they are not following the law in their aircraft procurement. A careful check of the records shows it is costing the Government millions of dollars because they are not following the law.

This 10-percent profits limitation law has worked fairly satisfactorily for the Navy. There have not been any of the objections that Mr. Woodring and General Craig have raised, based on the 10-percent profits limitation plan as it has been carried out by the Navy Department.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman states that the plan has worked very satisfactorily for the Navy. This is not the testimony before our committee, as the gentleman well knows, because he is a member of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman, I may say I have asked the Treasury Department about it and I also talked with the Navy Department. It is true they had an amendment they wanted adopted to take the scientific-instrument people out from under the method. They had amendments which practically nullified the law. The House, by exactly eight votes, passed that bill, but it is still pending in the Senate. We thought we had an agreement whereby the House would agree to accept the same provision for the War Department that now applies to the Navy Department, but the Senate conferees would not agree to that proposition, as I understand it.

Mr. MAAS. But the gentleman stated that the Navy Department says that this has worked satisfactorily. The Navy Department has not said that.

Mr. McFARLANE. I say that the Navy Department said this. Admiral King is against the bill and he is against any kind of limitations, as I understood his testimony before our committee. The gentleman from Minnesota will recall the testimony before our committee in regard to scientific instruments, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. And the testimony of the Treasury Department. My interpretation of that testimony is just as I have given it and the record will speak for itself.

Mr. MAAS. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. McFARLANE. I know I am not mistaken about it, and the records will bear out my statements. I decline to yield any further. The gentleman can get some time and argue that matter himself.

HOW WOODRING'S SYSTEM ROBS THE GOVERNMENT AND FAVORS THE AIR TRUST

Under permission given to revise and extend my remarks, I desire to answer some of the many statements of fact advanced during the debate on this question while the conference report was pending before the House.

The reason advanced as to why the War Department purchased these 20 airplanes from the Douglas Co. was that their saving in gasoline alone would amount to $12,000 per year.

I immediately sent the following telegram to the Bellanca Aircraft Co. and the Fairchild Aircraft Corporation, who were bidders on this same contract, both of whose bids were more than $20,000 per skeleton plane less than the bid by the Douglas Co.:

MAY 6, 1936.

BELLANCA AIRCRAFT CO.,
Newcastle, Del.:

Re War Department's circular proposal no. 35–29, dated August 24, 1934, under which Douglas received a contract for 20 airplanes at $49,500 each. Statement made on floor today in defending this contract that these planes would save more than $12,000 in gasoline during life of plane over any competing plane. Your bid over $20,000 lower. Please wire facts regarding this matter, adding any facts you wish known. Do you consider the War and Navy Departments' present system for aircraft procurement in strict compliance with the Aircraft Act of 1926? Please wire today.

W. D. McFARLANE, M. C.

And to this telegram the Bellanca Aircraft Corporation replied:

NEWCASTLE, DEL., May 7, 1936.

Hon. W. D. McFARLANE,
Member of Congress.

Re tel. on order for 20 Bellancas. Government would have saved $850,000 on planes and additional $373,000 in gasoline making a total saving of $1,223,000. Had Air Corps expended same amount for Bellancas as for 20 Douglases would have secured 40 Bellanca cargo planes flying 6,000,000 more miles and carrying 51,700,000 more pounds over 300-mile trips. Bellanca transport cargo airplanes safest in world; not a single fatality in millions miles operations. Fourteen Bellanca cargo ships were used by Air Corps in carrying air mail in January 1934, with best results. Detailed letter follows special delivery.

BELLANCA AIRCRAFT CORPORATION.

The Fairchild Aircraft Corporation replied as follows:

HAGERSTOWN, MD., May 7, 1936.

Hon. W. D. McFARLANE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Re tel. under circular proposal 35# 29 specifications show Fairchild cargo plane will fly 650 miles with 220 gallons fuel, or 2.95 miles per gallon carrying 3,783 pounds cargo at 130 miles per hour. Under same proposal Douglas offered to fly 1,130 miles with 497 gallons fuel, or 2.27 miles per gallon, carrying only 2,400 pounds load at 133 miles per hour. For 650 miles Douglas could reduce fuel load and increase cargo load to 3,666 pounds, or nearly same as Fairchild cargo load. The important factor to consider is for same distance at about same speed, carrying approximately same cargo load; Fairchild planes get 2.95 miles per gallon compared with the Douglas 2.27 miles per gallon. Taking average use of 130,000 miles per year, Douglas uses 13,200 gallons more fuel per year, or at 12 cents per gallon, Douglas cost $1,582 more per plane per year for fuel. In addition to fuel cost Douglas has double maintenance cost on engines because two of same engines used compared to one in Fairchild cargo. Using standard air line cost a commercial operator running 130,000 miles per year, would figure Douglas to cost $12,000 more per year than Fairchild cargo plane, both planes doing about the same job. Douglas is finest fast passenger transport. Fairchild is a cargo plane developed specifically for economical cargo transport. Believe Douglas price your wire should be $61,775. Not sufficiently familiar aircraft act to comment, but believe procurement satisfactory. Representative of company in Washington will call upon you Friday to give any further data you deem necessary.

FAIRCHILD AIRCRAFT CORPORATION.

In addition to the telegram above quoted, the Bellanca Aircraft Corporation replied as follows:

MAY 7, 1936.

Hon. W. D. McFARLANE, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Regarding your telegram sent to us yesterday, the facts are as follows:

The Douglas airplane, instead of saving $12,000 in gasoline during the life of each airplane over any competing planes, is consuming $18,600 worth more gasoline than the Bellanca Cargo Aircruiser after due allowance is made in favor of the Douglas for higher cruising speed. The Government might have decided in favor of the Douglas for its higher speed or because of the twin-engined feature.

As for higher speed, this type of plane is essentially a carrier and not a fighting plane, and consequently efficiency and economy are primarily important. As for the twin-engined feature, our Bellanca Cargo Aircruiser is unsurpassed for safety, because during the whole existence of this type of airplane since 1930 not a single life has been lost. Fourteen planes of this type were used by the Air Corps for carrying the air mail at the time the Army was assigned this task in January–February 1934, and they carried the biggest loads of all, and their operation was so successful that the name of this plane was not mentioned in adverse newspaper comment a single time.

The price of the Douglas of $49,500 was without motors, propellers, instruments, etc. The price of the Bellanca, leaving the same Government-furnished equipment off, was $24,200. Adding this cost, plus the 20-percent spare parts, the cost to the Government for the Douglas was $86,000 and the Bellanca $43,500, a difference per plane of approximately $42,500, and a total difference for the 20 planes of $850,000. Adding to that the total saving for gasoline of $373,000, by purchasing Bellancas the Government would have saved a total of $1,223,000, without considering the replacement of power plants, higher handling costs, etc.

The Douglas is a more elegant looking plane, but against that it cannot land in the small or muddy fields like the Bellancas can, the Douglas being suited to land primarily at airports. A feature that is of greatest importance is the fact that the Douglas cannot be converted to skiis or floats as readily and as successfully as the Bellanca cargo plane, which is another point of still higher importance for operation in the north or in Alaska.

For the money expended for 20 Douglases the Air Corps could have secured 40 Bellanca cargo air cruisers, which would have gone 6,000,000 more miles on an expected life of 3,000 hours for each airplane than the Douglases. Since two Bellancas could have been purchased for each Douglas, and these two Bellanca cargo airplanes would have carried 6,070 pounds total against one Douglas carrying 3,485 pounds, this represents an increased pay load of 74.3 percent in favor of Bellanca equipment for the same expenditure. This also means that in those 6,000,000 additional miles mentioned above, in trips of 300 miles distance, the Bellanca airplanes would have carried approximately 51,700,000 pounds more than the Douglases. As for the latter part of your wire relative to present methods of Army and Navy procurement, we regret that we do not feel in a position to make comment at the present time.

Very truly yours,

BELLANCA AIRCRAFT CORPORATION,
G. M. BELLANCA, President.

Thus we see that from this contract alone, according to the Bellanca Aircraft Corporation, the Government would have saved a total of $1,223,000 over the price paid the highest bidder, the Douglas Aircraft Corporation, without considering other many advantages the Government would have received had they purchased the Bellanca plane and, you will note, according to the Fairchild Aircraft Corporation telegram, far surpasses in gasoline mileage and other material comparisons the performance requirements required for a plane cargo of the kind and character being purchased.

SYSTEM OF PROCUREMENT NEEDED

I recommend that the present Aircraft Act be amended so that our system of procurement for future aircraft be made along the lines followed in several European countries. For example, offer substantial prizes, as first, second, and third prizes, after full publicity is given in the newspapers so that all may compete, the prizes to be substantial and the agreement for thus competing to require that the winning plane in the competition shall belong to the Government, including all patent license and manufacturing rights; the published specifications to carry further the full terms of the competition and the mode and manner under which the judging and examination of the planes is to be made. Only the fundamental requirements of planes of the kind and character needed should be the entire basis for judging in the selection in competition. This system of selection of all aircraft would largely eliminate the many unfair practices that have been shown to have existed in our present system of procurement ever since our present Aircraft Act of 1926 has been in effect.

TAX EVASION UNDER THE SENATE TAX BILL

I desire to state my views on several of the different amendments added to the tax bill now pending.

It is obvious to anyone who has read the proceedings of this session and the last session of Congress that I am fully in accord with the tax program which President Roosevelt submitted to Congress in his message of March 3, 1936, and which is the foundation of the tax bill now under consideration. The real reason for the tax program as outlined by the President is that huge surpluses are being accumulated by corporations owned by citizens with large incomes in order to escape the surtaxes which should be paid on these surpluses. On several occasions during the last session I called attention to this loophole in our present law whereby the special-privilege interests of this country are evading the tax law. In an attempt to secure a correction of the situation, I addressed this House and urged that the law be changed so that the large amounts of undistributed corporation profits would be taxed to the stockholders as they should be. This same proposal was submitted to the Ways and Means Committee of this House when I appeared before that body on July 13, 1935. On August 17, 1935, while the revenue bill of 1935 was still under consideration, I appeared before the Senate Finance Committee and again repeated my contention that the tax law should be amended to tax stockholders upon the undistributed profits which they allow to remain in the corporation free from the proper tax. In view of these unsuccessful attempts on my part to secure a change in the law during the last session, I was greatly pleased when on March 3 of this year the President called attention to this same loophole in the tax law and took the position that it should be stopped.

But, Mr. Speaker, the efforts of the Members of this House to design a tax bill which will eliminate some of the present opportunities for tax evasion have, it seems to me, come to naught, if we accept the changes which the Senate has made. As I see it, the bill as passed by the Senate does not stop the loophole pointed out by the President. More than this, the Senate has written into the bill a number of new loopholes which will enable the wealthy and special-privilege interests to escape the tax. Mr. Speaker, I object to this sort of thing. We set out to plug up the loopholes—not to create new ones. Consequently, I propose at this time to frankly and briefly outline the different new ways for tax escape which the Senate has written into the bill, with the hope that this House will put itself on record as opposed to the new methods of tax evasion.

Exemption for holding companies: During the past few years we have become very familiar with the tactics of the financial wizards who induce small investors to buy stock in holding companies and thus finance the activities of these men in their efforts to control a vast empire of operating corporations. Obviously the income received by the holding companies formed and controlled by industrial racketeers is represented by the dividends which they receive from the operating companies. Despite the efforts of this administration to protect the people from the holding-company racket, the Senate bill would give such companies preferred and kind treatment for tax purposes. Section 26 (b) of the Senate bill allows the holding companies to receive 90 percent of its dividend income free from tax; the other 10 percent will obviously be used to pay high salaries to corporate officials and to pay other so-called expenses; and, hence, the holding company will be entirely free from tax.

INVESTMENT TRUSTS

When the holding companies became involved in difficulties and the little investors throughout the country became less enthusiastic about such companies the men of finance and stock-market speculation organized what they called investment trusts to serve somewhat the same purpose as the holding companies. By these trusts the promoters of such enterprises used the little fellow's money to buy stock and control corporations, or rig the stock market. Few, if any, of these organizations should be permitted to operate, but since they do exist they should pay taxes. However, they will not do so if the Senate amendment is adopted by this House. The exemption given in section 13 (a) (3) of the Senate bill, plus the credit allowed under section 27, will give these organizations complete exemption. The only qualification upon the exemption is not that there be fewer such organizations but that the number be increased.

BANKS

Despite the fact that the banks of this country were saved from destruction in 1933 and continue to make profits by lending other people's money, the Senate has been very kind to the banks by inserting a provision to exempt them from the new tax on undistributed profits. In order to make doubly certain that the banks would be exempt, two provisions to that effect were put into the bill. See section 14 (c) (1) and section 26 (d) of the Senate bill.

TRUSTS OPERATED BY BANKS

Section 169 of the Senate bill also gives the bankers a further exemption. With respect to this the Senate committee report states:

> The Finance Committee has adopted an amendment which will permit banks and trust companies qualifying under the section to operate common trust funds free of tax as corporations.

By common trust funds the committee explains that it means the activities of the banks "where the funds of many individual trusts are mingled." To put it in plain English, the type of operation which the Senate proposes to exempt from tax is one where a bank has trust funds belonging to others and does not keep them segregated, but proceeds to mix them up in the manner most suitable for the purposes of the bank. This type of operation, which should not be permitted, is so highly approved by the Senate that it proposes to exempt the operations from tax.

USE OF BANKRUPTCY LAWS TO EVADE TAX

In the past we have heard of how a corporation may voluntarily go into bankruptcy in order to beat its creditors. The latest development appearing in the Senate bill is to allow the corporation to evade tax by voluntarily filing a petition in bankruptcy. If the petition is on file for a few days in any year, the corporation may escape a full year's tax. See section 14 (c) (2) of the Senate bill. If the company is a railroad corporation, it may organize a holding company, which can file a petition in bankruptcy and thereby exempt the railroad company. See sec. 141 (j). That is what you may call obtaining tax exemption by proxy.

ACCUMULATION OF SURPLUS (SEC. 102)

Throughout the consideration of this tax bill it has been the purpose of this House to prevent improper accumulation of surplus by corporations which do so to enable the stockholders to escape surtax. The present law is inadequate in this respect. It should be amended to collect a tax on such improper accumulation. The Senate has amended section 102 so that in lieu of requiring a tax to be paid upon such improper accumulation, the corporation will merely file a statement showing how it uses its funds. In other words, the old provision as written during the Mellon regime is retained with a ridiculous provision that will help to collect nothing but statements.

LIQUIDATION OF CORPORATIONS

Under our tax law if an individual paid $100 for a share of stock in a corporation and he received $150 upon the liquidation of the corporation, he would be taxed upon $50. The Senate bill retains this tax upon the individual but provides that if a corporation receives such a profit it shall be exempt. See section 112 (b) (6) of the Senate bill. Here, again, the big corporation is given an advantage by way of a provision which distinctly discriminates against individuals occupying exactly the same position.

CORPORATE REORGANIZATIONS

Some time ago I introduced a bill designed to repeal the so-called reorganization provisions of the tax law. The repeal of these provisions was recommended by a subcommittee of this House which investigated the tax-evasion methods used in connection with so-called reorganizations of corporations. These provisions originated in the Mellon tax plan of 1924, which became a law in that year, and which has served more than other things to make a farce out of our income-tax law. The Senate proposes to make the road for tax evasion easier in connection with these transactions. The amendment of the definition of control in section 112 (h) does the trick. This amendment is clearly contrary to the position which we have taken throughout the present administration. Its only purpose is to make tax evasion easier, when the object of this bill is to minimize tax evasion.

BIG REWARD FOR TAX LOBBYISTS

Section 802 of the Senate bill is the type of legislation which best fills the pockets of the tax lobbyist. It requires the Government to refund taxes which the Government has properly and lawfully collected. Obviously when the parties concerned get this unexpected refund they will be surprised and well pleased, all of which helps the lobbyist to collect a big fee. This unexpected refund of taxes is of course reserved for the benefit of a few individuals who have realized profits upon the type of transactions described in this section.

JEWELRY TAX REPEALED

The present law imposes a 10-percent tax upon sales of jewelry amounting to more than $3. Section 813 of the Senate bill proposes a repeal of this tax. It is not necessary for me to elaborate upon this exemption. Only those of wealth can afford to buy expensive jewelry. They are the ones benefited.

TAX ON FURS

Those with wealth also will benefit under the Senate proposal to reduce the tax on furs from 10 percent to 3 percent. See section 814 of the Senate bill.

ESTATE TAX

One of the methods by which the wealthy escape a portion of the estate tax is by way of insurance trusts created during the lifetime of the decedent. Instead of stopping this loophole, as it should be, the Senate bill proposes to open it wider. See section 801 of the Senate bill. If this provision of the bill becomes a law, it will no longer be necessary to set up an insurance trust. The law can be evaded simply by the insured notifying the insurance company that he wishes to evade the tax. If this proposal becomes a law over my protest, there is no question but that the insurance companies will reap a good harvest selling tax-exempt policies.

LIQUOR INTERESTS GET WHAT THEY WANT

The tax on liquor has been very effective, so effective in fact that the liquor interests now propose to wreck it. Obviously they do not openly ask for a repeal of this tax. That is unnecessary, for they have concocted a scheme which will do substantially the same thing. The trick is to change the law so that the tax will be collected from the retailer instead of the distiller. At the present time the tax is collected from the distiller. There are comparatively few distillers, and their accounts can easily be checked by the Government. The change proposed by the Senate would exempt the distiller and require the Government to collect the tax from the thousands of retailers, barrooms, cafes, restaurants, roadside inns, and other similar places throughout the country. Clearly, the Government cannot keep watch over all these places and collect the proper tax. It could not do so even if it employed a huge army of investigators and revenue agents. Hence, the result of the Senate proposal is to exempt the distiller and to allow the barrooms, cafes, restaurants, and other places to pay whatever tax they wish, which, we may be sure, will be very little. In any event, whatever tax is collected will probably not greatly exceed the cost of maintaining the revenue agents necessary to collect it.

THE BOARD OF TAX APPEALS

The Board of Tax Appeals was first created in 1924 during the Mellon regime, and as I here pointed out on February 18, 11 of the 16 members of the present Board are men appointed at the recommendation of Mellon. The Board of Tax Appeals has been one of the most potent factors in causing this country to have more tax litigation than any other country in the world. Its decisions have so complicated the income-tax law that few know what it means. In addition this Board is the device which keeps the big boys from having to pay. Instead of paying they appeal to the Board. The Senate bill proposes to extend the functions of the Board to give it jurisdiction over all excise taxes. See section 815 of the Senate bill. The change proposed by the Senate would give this Mellon board power over the remainder of the tax field.

ALVORD, THE TAX LOBBYIST

One of the tax lobbyists whose name appears in the hearings before the congressional committees is a man by the name of Alvord, purporting to represent the United States Chamber of Commerce and to be on the tax lobby committee of that organization, along with Lammot Du Pont, one of the famous Du Ponts (pp. 252–253, hearings of Finance Committee). Beginning on Juy 15, 1926, this man Alvord was special assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, Andrew W. Mellon, and was in charge of handling tax legislative matters during the Mellon regime. For 3 years prior to his appointment to this position Alvord was assistant legislative counsel for the House of Representatives, which enacted the Mellon tax bills. The record shows that during the past few months Alvord has been very active in presenting his ideas regarding tax exemptions to the committees. There is little doubt as to what he wants. The memorandum which he filed with the committee very specifically lists each item (see pp. 283–293, hearings of Finance Committee). This memorandum should be read by every Member of this House in order fully to appreciate the number of instances in which the Mellon-Du Pont-Alvord ideas are reflected in the Senate amendments. And when you read the Alvord memorandum remember that the farmers, merchants, day laborers, and the unemployed who elected you and sent you here to represent them did so in order to get a new deal in taxes as well as in other matters. They do not want Mellon or any of his aides writing our tax laws. The people who sent us here have to work long and hard, and often find themselves in the late years of their hardships with little saved. Nevertheless, throughout life and even in their old age they continue to pay taxes with no method of escape. This they do, and the least we can do when we write a tax bill is to keep the Mellon tax lobbyists out of the halls of Congress.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I regret I have not more time to yield to the gentleman from Texas, but there are a number who want to speak on the report.

I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE] and I are one in our desire to see that graft is eliminated, that construction and procurement of equipment are modernized, that obsolete material is removed, that our personnel is safeguarded and the interests of the taxpayers are protected, but I somehow doubt that this particular method is the proper method of approach.

When the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] offered his amendment and it was first added to the Navy Department appropriation bill, thereby limiting the profit to 10 percent, I thought this was a splendid thing. I thought this because I had been sitting on a subcommittee which had been delving into some of these practices. But on further study I have had serious doubts.

I am with the gentleman from Texas in wanting to remove all the graft and corruption and favoritism from all of these procurement matters and from all contracts entered into between private manufacturers and those in Government positions, and I am for scourging out of public life all the dishonest who are found practicing such favoritism as may make possible these unpleasant affairs.

But it occurs to me now that if we limit the contract to 10-percent profit, I might suggest the old homely adage, "You can lead a horse to water, but you cannot make him drink." In other words, you can subdue these people but you cannot make them behave.

I have gone through some of these factories, some of their large plants, where they naturally are interested in the profits, where they very possibly have done some things that are not of the highest ethics in business affairs; but they are genuinely interested in promoting their product, in securing something that will be successful in their competitive business.

For that reason I hate to limit them to the point where they are unable to carry on their research work and keep up their scientific laboratory, carry on the work necessary to improve their product beyond what today is obsolete or obsolescent. I feel certain they are gentlemen who desire to protect the interests of the Government, and they have admittedly done things of which they can well feel proud. The record upon that matter will speak for itself.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman from Texas called attention to the purchase of Douglas airplanes for $20,000 above the offer of some other company.

I would like to call attention to the fact that it has recently been disclosed that although the Douglas airplane costs $20,000 more than some others, the saving of gasoline alone has been about $12,000, aside from the increased efficiency and safety.

Mr. KVALE. I am glad the gentleman has brought that matter up. I did not have the complete facts in my possession, but I knew that there must be more to the story than what appeared on the surface. I am sure that anyone that recognizes the Military Affairs Committee under the leadership of such eminent men as the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman who heads our committee [Mr. MCSWAIN] will recognize that they have done valiant work. And when any Member of this body or any other group attempts to criticize Secretary Woodring or any of his staff or minimize the patriotic and constructive work they have done, let me say emphatically that such a Member undertakes no little task, for in the last 2 years that office is and has been a credit to the Government, no less.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, let me call attention to this war appropriation bill. In 1936 we appropriated $422,896,470. This appropriation bill as it left the House carried $543,341,506, or an increase of $120,445,036 over what it was a year ago. Now, you come back here with the conference report and the total amount of the bill as stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PARKS] is $572,446,884, so that this bill has been increased over the bill of last year by $149,550,414. And when I sit here and see my good friend Mr. DOUGHTON and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], members of the Committee on Ways and Means, whose duty it is to get money to pay these bills, and who brought in a bill here to raise $800,000,000 and have scratched their heads for 3 months and do not know how they will even get that money, and when I think of the manner in which the membership of the House is spending money it seems to me that Mr. DOUGHTON ought to come in here with a great big club and get after you fellows for spending the way you do. That is the only way that he will ever get a balanced Budget, and if he needs some help, I will tell him where to go to get it, and I will be glad to assist him.

I call the House's attention to two important things. I want to read to the majority side of the House particularly plank no. 1 in the platform of the Democratic Party that was adopted in 1932:

> The Democratic Party solemnly promises by appropriate action to put into effect the principles, policies, and reforms herein advocated, and to eradicate the policies, methods, and practices herein condemned. We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.

If you gentlemen have done anything, you have done just the opposite from what you promised at that time. Gentlemen will recall that the President said that he was for the Democratic platform, and I now want to read what Mr. Farley said in his speech made November 9, 1932:

> You may be sure when Franklin D. Roosevelt makes a promise to an individual or to a nation that promise will be fulfilled, for he makes none beyond his power to make his pledges come true. He is pledged to an economical and an efficient management of our national affairs. He will choose nobody incapable or unwilling to conduct the business on that basis.

Do you Members of Congress believe Mr. Farley? Do you think the above is the truth?

This administration, according to statements made by Mr. Morgenthau before the Senate committee will spend more money this year by $6,000,000,000 than the Government will receive. You have spent an average of over $3,000,000,000 each year, and $6,000,000,000 this year is going to make Mr. Morgenthau's prognostication of our national debt come true, because he cannot see anything in this Democratic controlled House but a bunch of spendthrifts. Mr. Majority Leader, why do you not try to keep these expenses down, why do you not help Mr. DOUGHTON increase taxes, and why does he not stop the membership of the House from spending so much money? The responsibility is on the Democratic Party to carry out their platform pledges to make their promises come true to the American people. Why do they not do it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER].

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many of you have actually had the opportunity to read the amendment that was inserted in the bill in the last hours of the day when this bill was read under the 5-minute rule. That amendment reads as follows:

SEC. 4. That as to contracts or subcontracts in excess of $10,000, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the payment of a profit in excess of 10 percent to any contractor or subcontractor for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete aircraft or ordnance material, or any portion thereof.

That was legislative matter. We have before us an appropriation bill. As a member of the subcommittee that had charge of this Army supply bill, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I have repeatedly refused to permit any legislative matter of any character to go into those bills. Legislative matter should go to the appropriate committees of the House, and if we do not permit it to go to the appropriate committees of the House, then we defeat the purpose of these committees that have been created by the rules of the House. The Vinson-Trammell bill, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE], is a legislative bill, entirely so, an authorization bill and not an appropriation bill. That bill authorized the building of ships and fixed the number of tons that the United States should build of naval ships. It was purely a legislative bill, and the appropriation bill subsequently followed the terms of that bill.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The Committee on Military Affairs, acting as the agent of this House, spent, not days or weeks but literally months in an effort to put as much competition and economy as possible in the matter of the purchase of aircraft and aircraft material. I know that if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE] would introduce a bill or would come before that committee, the committee would be more than delighted to have him give us any facts or information he may have.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. We found too much of a stinking mess to expect all of it to be cleaned up within the space of a few days or a few weeks.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I do not yield to the gentleman from Texas. If the gentleman from Texas wants to allow proper approach to this matter, let him introduce a bill in this House, which will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, the appropriate committee to consider this matter.

Now, for a moment, I wish to refer to something and read to you from the Chief of Staff of the Army, General Craig, testifying before the subcommittee on appropriations handling this bill in the Senate. He testified as follows on the question of this 10-percent limitation:

The records of Congress show that the Vinson-Trammell Act, which limits costs of Navy contracts, was the outgrowth of careful hearing in committee, amendment, debate, conference, and rejected agreement and further conference. It was sufficient to constitute a problem in itself.

However, the War Department is strongly opposed to any wording of such important law being inserted in the appropriation act without careful investigation of its reaction on its system of proposals, contracts, audits, payments, and upon the industries upon which the country must depend in time of war.

The War Department's auditors go carefully into every cost before a contract is awarded, and are in the factory during the life of the contract. The Department is zealous in its administration. To complicate it by adopting further law without mature consideration is highly dangerous to national defense.

I now refer to testimony given recently by Senator WALSH, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate. On March 25, 1936, he said, at page 4335, as follows:

Mr. WALSH. For the information of the Senate, I desire to state that the same proposal is pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the same opposition has been registered by all the officials of the Navy Department, from the Secretary of the Navy to the naval officers in charge of construction. They emphasive very strongly the necessity for repealing this provision as it applies to naval aircraft, as well as Army airplanes. They particularly emphasize the fact that it constitutes a very great disadvantage in obtaining bids for the construction of aircraft. They state that it is customary to ask for sample aircraft to be submitted before the bids are asked for, and that the manufacturers do go to great expense in building models and presenting them for inspection to the Navy Department. When such models are submitted, thereafter bids are asked upon the most desirable types. In the event this provision should continue in the law the Government, it is alleged, would be placed, as it is now placed, under very great handicap so far as the Navy Department is concerned.

I thought it would be interesting to Senators to know that the same question is now pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and some action is desired along the same line by the Navy Department.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the able Senator from Massachusetts for what he has said. In the War Department the officials ask for full-sized planes as samples.

Mr. WALSH. The Navy Department does also. Of course, it involves very great expense. When the bids were asked the manufacturers who produce naval aircraft that are acceptable usually add something in their bids to cover the expense of constructing the models.

Mr. COPELAND. In the Army and Navy Journal for February 22 the statement is made that both Representative VINSON, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, and Representative MCSWAIN, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, have indicated their opposition to this provision in the Army bill.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The report should have added that in addition to the building of models a great deal is required in voluntary research work which is done by their architects, their engineers, and their scientists.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Exactly. Ever since the Wright brothers on this eastern coast successfully flew the first airplane in our memory, what do you suppose would have been the progress of aviation, if the activities of all those interested in aviation were limited to a profit of 10 percent? I am willing to assert that there has been no profit of 10 percent throughout the history of airplane manufacture. Of course, it is an appealing, an alluring thing to say to Congressmen that we should limit manufactures to a profit of 10 percent. There is a sophistry in it, but it is a dangerous sophistry. We could not pay for the advancement in aviation, particularly the science of aviation, the science of building aircraft, if we demanded or permitted this limitation on every contract that is entered into. Remember it is on each and every contract. I know for a fact that it requires from $200,000 to $500,000 to prepare a model of a ship—to make the jigs and dies required before a contract is ever entered into.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It cost the Boeing Co. $575,000 to develop the Boeing bomber, which is perhaps the most effective and greatest bomber in the world today. If those people are to spend their money to experiment and carry on the development of the airplane, to give greater safety factors and greater effectiveness from the standpoint of striking for national defense, the Government must let them get that money back. Is that not a fact?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. That is right. If a contract is let for $2,500,000 and only 10 percent can be secured as profit—$250,000—it costs more than $250,000 to build the first sample model of an airplane under those conditions. It is not fair to the industry. It is unfair to national defense and the program that this Congress has adopted. It is unfair to the program we have undertaken for the safety of the people of our Nation to hamstring at this time, especially in a new industry that is advancing so fast, even against the inventions of the whole world in aviation.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. And we do not subsidize our industry, whereas foreign governments do.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. KVALE. The first of any series of ships needs completely new sets of jigs and dies and tools in addition to the plans?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. That is right. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] has had successfully passed through this House an authorization bill so that the Army may have a minimum of 4,000 planes. During the pendency of this appropriation bill it developed that we were back 700 planes in deliveries. How can we hope for better conditions if we begin to do the things suggested in this amendment?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, soon after I first became a Member of this honorable body in the Sixty-eighth Congress I received an appointment on a special committee, the Lampert committee, involving the investigation of military aviation. Since then I have attempted to keep in close touch with military aviation, and during the last three sessions of Congress I have had the honor to be a member of the subcommittees having to do with all questions regarding military aviation.

Two years ago a special resolution passed this House (H. Res. 275) authorizing and directing the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof appointed by the chairman, to inquire into and investigate alleged profiteering in military aircraft and other matters in which the problem of national defense was involved. I had the honor to be appointed chairman of that committee, and it was composed of Representatives from both sides of the aisle who had long been members of the Committee on Military Affairs, including the former chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. James. We conducted long and extended hearings, and we ascertained that the War Department was violating the law of 1926, which provided for the purchase of airplanes in quantity by competitive bidding.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. The gentleman from Texas refused to yield to me; I refuse to yield to him.

The fact of noncompliance with the law as to competitive bidding was brought home to the War Department, and after further hearings we unanimously recommended the removal of the then Chief of the Air Corps, Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois. With the concurrence of Assistant Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring, there was then adopted a system of compliance with the law; and since then we are confident that quantity purchases of planes for the Army for approximately the last 2 years have been lawfully made by competitive bidding.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of our investigation there was worked out in conjunction with the office of The Assistant Secretary of War a procurement policy complying fully with the law, resulting in competitive bidding and not negotiated contracts. The outcome of this investigation and change of policy is that new and additional firms are manufacturing aircraft for the Army, and that is the situation which exists today. It is a logical, fair, and reasonable law. It carries out the will of Congress as enacted in 1926. It has now been in force nearly 2 years, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress should permit it to continue, because we know now from the records and achievements already made that we are on the road to better planes and greater prosperity in military aircraft. The policy now legally adopted by the War Department is on a competitive basis, and has resulted in several new and additional firms manufacturing aircraft for the Army. It is a policy based on competitive bidding with the utmost emphasis placed upon performance. The logic of such a policy is clear when we pause to realize that aircraft of inferior performance to that of an enemy will be of much less value in national defense and may well result in the loss of air supremacy. It has been carefully checked, and I am sure that, in the opinion of the subcommittee, of which I am chairman, it fully complies with the Air Corps Act of 1926.

The amendment adopted in the House, known as the 10-percent limitation, which is now stricken from the bill by the terms of the conference report, I am advised was, after hearings thereon, unanimously opposed by the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations, the full Senate Appropriations Committee likewise unanimously voting its deletion. I am also happy to say that on March 16 the Senate voted to concur with its Appropriations Committee in removing this amendment from the bill.

In a communication to the Senate committee from Acting Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring, he stated that this amendment should be stricken from the bill for the following reasons, which I gladly adopt as my own:

The section which it is recommended be omitted is objectionable because it will—

(1) Greatly increase the complexity and delay of procurements;
(2) Stifle research and development;
(3) Reduce competition;
(4) Give rise to colossal difficulties of administration; and
(5) Tremendously increase the cost of checking the books of contractors and necessitate the employment of many more cost accountants than have heretofore been employed on Government contracts.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, held complete hearings on the War Department bill, calling before it Assistant Secretary of War Woodring and Chief of Staff Gen. Malin Craig.

In referring to the 10-percent limitation, I agree fully with the language of General Craig when he said:

I believe that the amendment was possibly accepted by the chairman of the subcommittee and adopted without a full study of it and a realization of what it entails, as it was stated on the floor that the amendment carried substantially the same language as is carried in the Navy bill every year.

Now, the difference in language is very apparent. This is a six-line amendment and that Navy law on the subject is one of over 50 lines.

The law may prove to work well for the Navy. But Navy conditions are not Army conditions. Army aviation, not yet up to its peace strength, must expand rapidly in war; the Navy is practically on a war footing at the outset. In the Navy a gun may possibly be considered a part of a vessel; in the Army it is an entity in itself. The Navy has an aircraft factory of its own; the Army has none. It may be satisfactory for the Navy to carry on much of its own research and development. The airplane industry in this country is not stabilized. Its fine engineers are thinking every moment and are progressing in design every year.

The proposed section would stifle research and development in the industry insofar as military airplanes are concerned. At present the War Department system places research and development squarely on the shoulders of the industry, where we think it belongs. If these costs are not allowed to enter and be paid for, the War Department will be confined to the product of the brains of a few Army officers and civilian employees in its experimental plant at Wright Field; all good men, indeed, but they do not represent the sum of experience now at the disposal of the War Department. It will be necessary, I believe, to vastly increase the plant at Dayton, which now has means only for test and investigation in the acceptance or rejection of bids and for development of improvements in accessories.

Such a law is liable to stifle the industry, also, through lack of competition. It may increase the possibility of collusion, for the reason that in order to establish those costs which may be permitted to enter, many advance conferences must be had with representatives of the industry, in order that common understanding may be had in the submission of bids.

It may starve the industry for the reason that if an aircraft corporation is always to be limited to an absolute maximum of profit on a contract, it has no means of recouping the losses which it inevitably takes on some contracts, particularly those of an experimental nature. This might tend to wreck the smaller firms and put all the business into the hands of a few strong ones. If the industry is crippled, the Government would have to go into business.

It has another bad feature; with the return of good times the more important factories having adequate research and development facilities will not take a Government contract.

Section 10 of the act approved July 2, 1926, provides a most careful system of procurement of aircraft. The War Department's auditors go carefully into every cost before a contract is awarded, and are in the factory during the life of the contract. The Department is zealous in its administration. To complicate it by adopting further law without mature consideration is highly dangerous to national defense.

Assistant Secretary of War Woodring also testified in part as follows:

This policy is based upon competitive bidding and in order to properly protect the interests of the Government in the procurement of such a highly technical piece of equipment requires the bidder to submit with his bid a completed airplane for test. The bidder is required to submit with his bid a completed airplane on the line for test, as he submits his bid, and these airplanes are thoroughly tested and contracts awarded to the manufacturer who has produced the finest performing airplane, after we have evaluated all the planes in competition.

To insure the reasonableness of the cost a careful financial audit is made of the cost figures of the manufacturer after we make an award. This policy is resulting in a constant striving on the part of the manufacturers to offer better and better performing aircraft. It places squarely on the shoulders of industry, where it logically belongs, the necessary research and development work and gives the Government the active use and benefit of all the brains of the industry.

For instance, we will send out invitations for bombers for delivery in 10 or 12 months, and probably three different concerns scattered well over the United States to bid on bombers. Certainly under that kind of a system the companies are going with their engineering and designing and researching departments, are going to try and build, develop and build, and deliver on the line the finest bomber in order to win the competition and therefore get the business.

The 10-percent limitation of profits on contracts will prevent the possibility of manufacturers recouping any of these experimental and development costs and ultimately result in the practical cessation of such research and development on the part of industry. This will mean that the Government will have to carry on its own research and development and that the only brains being applied to the advancement of our aircraft will be such brains as the Government may be able to assemble at Wright Field, which is our technical and procurement branch of the Air Corps.

I do not need to tell you that such a situation will materially retard progress in the development of military aircraft in this country and will result in our Air Corps being equipped with airplanes inferior in performance to those of other countries.

Senator FLETCHER. You would not favor any limitation of profits?

Assistant Secretary WOODRING. We do favor a reasonable profit; yes; but at this stage I do not favor any limitation of profits in the contracts, and I will explain why, because I believe we have that limitation in our audit today.

To maintain our position in the world of aviation requires a continuation of constant and extensive research and development, and any limitation which takes from the manufacturer the possibility of recouping cost of this research and experimental development work places our whole aircraft procurement program in jeopardy.

Since the Government is practically the sole beneficiary of the progress of military aviation, it is proper that the Government, as I say, should bear these costs. In this connection I wish to point out that the cost of building an experimental airplane runs from $100,000 to $600,000, and that manufacturers cannot continue to build and offer these airplanes to the Government under a statute which precludes any possibility of reimbursement therefor.

If the airplane industry were stabilized and producing units in large numbers, the provision might not be nearly so detrimental; but the industry is still in a highly experimental state, and therefore faced with many more hazards than one which has arrived at a place where progress and development is comparatively slow.

Since the number of civil and commercial airplanes produced in this country is not of itself sufficient to maintain a satisfactory nucleus of aircraft industry, the methods of procurement of military aircraft will have a vital effect on the industry and any action to be taken with regard to these methods should be very carefully and thoroughly considered prior to its adoption.

The action we take here on this clause as it affects the actual procurement of military aircraft affects commercial aviation as much as it does the military, because, as I say, it will have its effect upon these manufacturers who must go into commercial aviation.

I do not want to go on any further with this. I think that I can state to you that it is my opinion, and conclusion, that if this 10-percent clause is put on, from the one phase of it, the greatest phase of national defense, it will defeat not only procurement of good aircraft as a result but it will defeat the competitive system of bidding which I think is the finest system under which we can procure in the interest of the Government.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Members of the House, in the interests of national defense, adequate protection for our homes, schools, churches, and industries, and above all for the perpetuity of all American institutions and the Nation itself, to concur unanimously in this conference report.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this conference report calls for an increase over the Budget of $8,079,000 for military purposes. It calls for a decrease below the Budget when you come to consider all of the amendments that are going to be offered by the committee, of $8,331,000, or a net decrease below the Budget of $252,000.

The conference report has such inconsistent features as to provide on page 11, line 9, for the pay of not less than an average of 165,000 enlisted men, and then providing later that the enlisted strength of the Army shall be increased from an average of 147,000 to an average of 165,000 at the rate of 1,500 per month. How there could be any such operation as that is beyond my understanding. Frankly, I felt that the recommendations of the House committee increased the strength of the Army just as far as it ought to go at the present time. This increase proposed in the conference report goes beyond the capacity of the Army to house the men.

When it comes to the increase above the House bill for rivers and harbors it is perfectly ridiculous, but I am not going to discuss that in detail at this time. I am going to ask the chairman of the committee to yield me a few moments when we come to that feature.

Frankly, from my own standpoint, I am not going to vote for these increases, and I hope they will not prevail.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time, 5 minutes, to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, the proposed 10-percent limitation involved in this controversy would be a very unwise thing for this Congress to adopt. I have the deepest sympathy with the objects of my friend the gentleman from Texas, but this is not the way to meet the problem. If the laws are being violated, the answer is to enforce the laws, not to make new laws.

The unfortunate part of this 10-percent limitation is that it defeats its own purpose. Instead of spreading competition, it will eliminate competition. On the one hand we are seeking by a tax bill to take away corporation surplus, or very materially reduce the surplus of corporations, and on the other hand we propose to limit their profits to 10 percent. How, then, in Heaven's name are these companies to get the funds to carry on experimental development? They do it infinitely cheaper than the Government can itself do it.

I have a good deal of familiarity with this matter, as I have spent a good deal of my time studying and investigating it, and I state it as my firm conviction that you cannot possibly make over 6 percent under this 10-percent limitation.

By encouraging private capital to undertake the research and development in aviation the Government eventually gets the benefit of the combined efforts of a number of companies on each subject. We then take the most successful development.

We pay nothing for the experiences of the other concerns who do not get contracts, though their work contributes very materially to the ultimate results. Were the Government to undertake all this research itself, it would cost many, many times the contract price we now pay for the finished product.

It says 10 percent, but because of restrictions and regulations governing the items allowed in the contract price you cannot make over 6 percent in actual practice.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. It may be of interest to the gentleman to know that in France the profit on production contracts involving aircraft—and they are far superior to ours, because they have honest competition—is 7 percent. In Italy it is 5 percent, and in England it is 7 percent. So, according to all those who know the facts in the case, this 10-percent limitation of net profits is a pretty liberal proposition, and it will not work the hardship on these companies the gentleman said it will do at all.

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman is mistaken. As a matter of fact, averaged up, these contracts have not shown as much as 10-percent profit in this country. By limiting the profit to 10 percent and making it apply to specific contracts it is impossible to create sufficient funds for experimental purposes.

Mr. Speaker, the main thing involved is the fact that experimental development in this country will be killed. We found ourselves through conditions which have prevailed in the past, as explained by the gentleman from Texas, and he was correct, where our airplanes were 100 to 150 miles an hour slower in the air than those of the five leading European countries. Speed and maneuverability in the air is the essence of success. A plane that is 10 miles an hour faster means generally, other things being equal, success for that plane. If the plane you are fighting is faster, it means that he can catch you if he is attacking you, or he can get away from you if you are attacking him, for you cannot catch him. The matter of speed is a matter of vital importance.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. If that is true, the War Department showed good wisdom in purchasing the Douglas planes referred to; and with reference to the proposition the War Department is not carrying out the law in connection with requesting bids, may I say when they asked for bids for the contract under which the Douglas planes were bought they sent out 160 circular proposals, which took in every airplane factory of any consequence in the country, and the War Department advertised also in newspapers and in trade journals.

Mr. MAAS. That is their general policy, is it not?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. That is their general policy, of course.

Mr. MAAS. The reason I say this will eliminate competition is that it leaves no opportunity to do any development work whatsoever. There is no opportunity under this proposed amendment to recover the developmental expense. Frequently a development will cost $100,000 and will produce a product which will have a unit price of $500, and then the concern that developed the product may not even get the contract. We are interested in ultimate economy, and I say this 10-percent limitation will add millions and millions of dollars to the cost of our national defense; and, more serious than that, will decrease its efficiency in an untold percentage.

If concerns cannot make a sufficient profit on contracts to reimburse them for developmental expenses, they will simply cease to seek or even accept Government business.

This will soon narrow the field to those from whom the Government is able to purchase until no competition will exist at all. The worst feature of this is that the smaller companies will be the first who are forced to forego Government contracts, because they do not have sufficient resources to gamble on Government business and take a chance on not getting a contract after spending any money on developing a product for which the Government is the only market.

This will leave the field to a very few large corporations, and thereafter the Government will be absolutely at their mercy and will pay a thousandfold for its unwise policy that will permit the complete destruction of competition.

Generally, when there is no competition, there is no progress. Improvements, advance, and progress cost money. These corporations have no magical source of funds. The stockholders will not long tolerate a management that cannot show a reasonable return upon their investment.

Genuine, healthy, natural competition will in itself give us adequate protection against exorbitant profits. The rivalry for business is very keen today, and a concern whose bid is too high just does not get the business. Of course, price must not be the sole criterion. Quality is all important. You are playing with men's lives when you buy airplanes. The best in material and workmanship is none too good. But not only is the question of the pilots' lives involved, but the whole question of the success or failure of our air defense is at stake.

If there is violation of the law in the purchase of airplanes, punish the violators, but do not merely pass more laws that can only hamper proper procurement and not aid it. However, the complaints of the past do not hold for procurement conditions today. Government contracts are pretty well protected now by proper audits, inspection, and tests. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 16, amendment no. (4), strike out "$33,944,252" and insert "$34,619,252: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1936, there shall be authorized 1,183 officers of the Medical Corps and 258 officers of the Dental Corps, notwithstanding the provision of the act of June 30, 1922 (42 Stat. 721), and the authorized commissioned strength of the Regular Army is hereby increased by 300 in order to provide for the increase herein authorized in the number of officers in the Medical and Dental Corps."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$34,169,252: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1936, there shall be authorized 1,033 officers of the Medical Corps and 183 officers of the Dental Corps, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 30, 1922 (42 Stat. 721), and the authorized commissioned strength of the Regular Army is hereby increased by 75 in order to provide for the increases herein authorized in the number of officers in the Medical and Dental Corps."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 11, amendment no. (9), strike out "$60,883,292, and, in addition, $2,344,211 of the appropriation 'Pay of the Army, 1936', which sum shall remain available until June 30, 1937, for defraying the cost of increasing the enlisted strength of the Regular Army from an average of 147,000 to an average of 150,873 enlisted men, and shall be available also for the objects embraced by and in addition to other appropriations contained in this act."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "$61,383,965, and, in addition, $2,344,211 of the appropriation 'Pay of the Army, 1936', which sum shall remain available until June 30, 1937, for defraying the cost of increasing the enlisted strength of the Regular Army from an average of 147,000 to an average of 165,000 enlisted men, and the attainment of such 165,000 enlisted men shall be accomplished by recruiting at the rate of 1,500 men per month in addition to recruits necessary to maintain 147,000 enlisted men."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 7, amendment no. 20:

"ACQUISITION OF LAND

"For the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point, N. Y., as authorized by the act approved March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1491), $431,000, to remain available until expended."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"ACQUISITION OF LAND

"For the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point, N. Y., as authorized by the act approved March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1491), or, in lieu thereof, for such extensions and alterations as may be necessary in the existing pipe line and intake employed in supplying water to the United States Military Academy, $431,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That no obligation to acquire any parcel of land shall be incurred until the Comptroller General shall have approved the proposed purchase price as being reasonable."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 16, amendment no. 25:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to convey to the city of Little Rock, Ark., a municipal corporation of the State of Arkansas, the land described in section 2 hereof, subject to the following conditions:

"(1) Said property shall be at all times utilized only by the municipality for public purposes.

"(2) In time of national emergency, upon request of the Secretary of War, the municipality shall turn over complete control and operation of the entire Little Rock Municipal Airport and the property thereon, without rental or other charge, to the United States of America, for such use and for such length of time as the emergency shall require, in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

"(3) That the said municipality shall at all times furnish free use of the said Little Rock Municipal Airport to all Army and Navy aircraft, together with such hangar and necessary service facilities as are available at said airport.

"(4) That the said municipality shall furnish free use of the airport field and the squadron hangar now located thereon to the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Observation Squadron, Arkansas National Guard, or its successor as designated by the War Department, and that the said squadron during periods of intensive training under direction of the War Department shall have right-of-way or priority in the use of the said field, and that the municipality shall continue to extend to the squadron the same free services of said field as are now extended to the squadron, including free use of the lighting system for night flights.

"(5) The municipality shall annually expend in new and additional improvements to the airport an amount equal to the amount now paid the United States of America as rental.

"SEC. 2. The land authorized to be conveyed by the Secretary of War under section 1 hereof is described as follows:

"Beginning at an iron pin marking the southwest corner of the east half of the northeast quarter section 12, township 1 north, range 12 west, fifth principal meridian; thence

"(1) South 84°45' west along the east and west half-section line of said section, said line also being the center line of Seventeenth Street, a distance of 1,241.65 feet to a point in the easterly right-of-way line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad; thence

"(2) North 34°56' west along said right-of-way line, a distance of 1,548.78 feet to a point in the center line of Thirteenth Street; thence

"Along the center line of Thirteenth Street, the following three courses:

"(3) North 84°46' east a distance of 941.04 feet to a point;

"(4) South 84°21' east a distance of 179 and no hundredths feet to a point;

"(5) North 84°54' east a distance of 884.30 feet to a point in the center line of the Harrington Avenue, said center line also being the west line of the east half of the northeast quarter of said section 12; thence

"(6) North 5°36' west along said center line, a distance of 1,058.80 feet to a point; said point being 286 and no hundredths feet from a stone monument marking the northwest corner of the east half of the northeast quarter of said section 12; thence

"(7) North 37°35' east a distance of 391.60 feet to a point in the north line of said section 12, distant 268 and no hundredths feet from said stone monument; thence

"(8) North 84°32' east along the north line of section 12, a distance of 843.85 feet to an iron pin, said pin being 211 and no hundredths feet from a stone monument in the northeast corner of said section 12; thence

"(9) South 5°31' east a distance of 2,657.70 feet to an iron pin, said pin being 211 and no hundredths feet from an iron pin in the southeast corner of the east half of the northeast quarter of section 12; thence

"(10) South 84°42' west along the east and west half-section line of said section 12, said line also being the center line of Seventeenth Street, a distance of 935.80 feet to a point; thence

"(11) North 5°36' west a distance of 75.10 feet to a point; thence

"(12) South 84°42' west a distance of 172.20 feet to a point; thence

"(13) South 5°36' east a distance of 75.10 feet to the point of beginning.

"Containing, in all, an area of 115.804 acres, more or less, all as shown on map no. 6490-101, entitled 'Reservation Boundary Little Rock, A. I. D., Little Rock, Ark.', dated March 1928, and filed in the office of the Quartermaster General, Washington, D. C."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 5, of the Senate engrossed amendments, after the word "purposes", insert the following: "except what is known as building numbered 19 thereon covered by existing lease and any building erected with the consent of the city of Little Rock, Ark., on the site of hangar numbered 1."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 29: Page 46, line 10, strike out "$15,697,170" and insert "$16,188,870."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$16,196,370."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 35: Page 56, line 13, after the word "that", strike out "officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard and Organized Reserves, who, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, volunteer to participate without pay as competitors or range officers in the national matches to be held during the fiscal year 1937, may attend such matches without pay, notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, but shall be entitled to travel and subsistence allowances at the same rates as are provided for civilians who attend and participate in said matches: Provided further, That".

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard and Organized Reserves, who, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, volunteer to participate without pay as competitors or range officers in the national matches to be held during the fiscal year 1937, may attend such matches without pay, notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, but shall be entitled to travel and subsistence allowances at the same rates as are provided for civilians who attend and participate in said matches, but this proviso shall not operate to prohibit the pay of such competitors or range officers, provided funds for such payment are available from the appropriation 'Promotion of rifle practice, 1937', nor shall any provision in this act operate to deprive a Reserve officer ordered to active duty incident to the national matches of pay for the full period of such active duty, provided funds for such payment are available from the appropriation 'Promotion of rifle practice, 1937': Provided further, That."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 42: Page 69, at the end of line 12, strike out "$6,000" and insert "$177,000, of which $171,000 shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of War for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of such suitable lands in the vicinity of the city of Baltimore, Md., as in his judgment are required for enlargement of existing national-cemetery facilities, and shall remain available until expended)."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$106,000, of which $100,000 shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of War for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of such suitable lands as in his judgment are required for enlargement of existing national-cemetery facilities."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 45: On page 74, line 17, strike out "$138,677,899" and insert "$196,677,899."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$159,427,899, of which not exceeding $6,000,000 may be expended, at the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, upon river and harbor or flood-control projects heretofore specifically provided to be proceeded with in any legislative measure heretofore passed by either the Senate or the House of Representatives of the United States: Provided further, That from this appropriation the Secretary of War may, in his discretion and on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers based on the recommendation by the Board for Rivers and Harbors in the review of a report or reports authorized by law, expend such sums as may be necessary for the maintenance of harbor channels provided by a State, municipality, or other public agency, outside of harbor lines and serving essential needs of general commerce and navigation, such work to be subject to the conditions recommended by the Chief of Engineers in his report or reports thereon."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House will refuse to concur in this amendment, which increases the amount allowed by the House something like $20,800,000.

The primary purpose of this amendment is to legalize and authorize two projects which have not been authorized by law, the Sardis Reservoir project in Mississippi, with an amount available of $2,500,000, and with an amount required for completion of $9,472,000.

The Conchas Dam, in New Mexico, $3,500,000 allowed, with an amount required to complete of $6,170,000.

When you come to consider that out of the $159,000,000, $38,000,000 is allotted for maintenance and that sort of thing—$3,700,000 for harbors on the coast and about $1,200,000 for harbors on the Lakes, and the rest for a lot of heterogeneous items, many of which have never been authorized by the Congress—I do not believe we are passing a bill that is justified under the circumstances.

Why we should increase the amount the House allowed, with over $20,000,000 of authorized construction—$20,000,000 more for projects which have never been authorized by Congress and never appropriated for or considered by any committee of the House, projects that were turned down by the House—I cannot understand. I hope this amendment will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were 70 ayes and 38 noes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 210, nays 84, answered "present" 1, not voting 132, as follows:

Mr. MASSINGALE changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. THURSTON changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to the fact that he stated that the conference report and the amendment just adopted included the Bluestone Reservoir in West Virginia. That is eliminated under the terms of the amendment, which covers only the Sardis and Conchas Reservoirs; and I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend, permit me to say that just before the vote was taken on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] stated that the adoption of the motion would provide for continuing work on three reservoirs, known as the Sardis Reservoir in Mississippi, the Conchas Reservoir in New Mexico, and the Bluestone Reservoir in West Virginia. The gentleman is in error. The amendment provides that $6,000,000 of the total sum appropriated, aggregating $159,427,899, may be expended upon any flood-control projects heretofore specifically provided for by either the House or the Senate.

Under the terms of the amendment the Bluestone Reservoir is eliminated. I wish it had been included. It has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers; but, I repeat, inasmuch as it has not been approved by either the House or the Senate, it is eliminated from the $6,000,000 that may be expended by the Chief of Engineers. Moreover, the amendment provides definitely for only the Sardis Reservoir in Mississippi in the sum of $2,500,000 and the Conchas Reservoir in New Mexico in the sum of $3,500,000. These two projects have been approved either in the House or in the Senate. The Sardis Reservoir is embraced in S. 3531, in the so-called Overton flood-control bill, that passed the Senate some 2 weeks ago; the Conchas Reservoir is embraced in H. R. 8455, which passed the House in July 1935, is known as the omnibus flood-control bill, and is now pending in the Senate.

The Senate has already agreed to the conference report. It has already thus approved the amendment that will provide for continuing work on the Sardis Dam and on the Conchas Dam. As shown by the remarks of Senator COPELAND, of New York, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and of the Senate conferees, when the conference report was pending in the Senate, and as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 24, 1936, page 6071, the Senator from New York expressly stated, and the Senate understood, as the House now understands, it was the intent of the amendment to provide for the Sardis Dam and for the Conchas Dam.

The Senate increased the appropriation for river and harbor work by $50,000,000. The adoption of the conference report and the approval of the pending amendment reduces the increase from $50,000,000 to $20,750,000. In other words, a vote for the conference report is a vote to reduce the appropriation as it passed the Senate by approximately $30,000,000. Efforts were made to increase the river and harbor appropriation on the floor of the House. The adoption of the amendment provides for an increase for river and harbor work in the sum of $14,750,000 over the amount carried when the bill passed the House and provides for the said sum of $6,000,000 for the Sardis Dam in the sum of $2,500,000 and the Conchas Dam in the sum of $3,500,000. In other words, the Senate increased the appropriation for rivers and harbors by $50,000,000; the House has reduced the appropriation by approximately $30,000,000. Moreover, as I have stated, the Senate has approved the Sardis Reservoir and the House has approved the Conchas Reservoir, and both of these reservoirs are recommended by the Chief of Engineers, and an allocation for both of these reservoirs was made out of the Relief and Emergency Act of 1935. By vote, and as shown by the RECORD, the Senate of the United States has determined that projects that were begun under the Relief and Emergency Act of 1935 have the same status as if they had been approved by act of Congress.

I repeat, to emphasize, that the Sardis Reservoir, after careful study and investigation, was recommended by the Chief of Engineers of the United States. The appropriation of $2,500,000 was also recommended by the Director of the Budget. The project is sound both from an engineering and economic standpoint. Approximately 1,000,000 acres of land are involved. These lands are paying for flood protection along the Mississippi River and are affected by the backwaters of the Mississippi River. Moreover, they have expended $20,000,000 in the construction of flood-control works. I know of no more important or beneficial flood-control work in the United States. The dam will be located close to the alluvial valley; there is thus a most excellent opportunity to demonstrate the value of reservoirs for flood control in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River, inasmuch as the reservoirs located nearest to the valley afford the greatest protection.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN LANDS IN MUHLENBERG COUNTY, KY.—REREFERENCE OF A BILL

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to rerefer the bill (H. R. 11916) to authorize the transfer of a certain piece of land in Muhlenberg County, Ky., to the State of Kentucky, from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TREASURY AGENCY ORGANIZATION

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12556) to create the Treasury Agency Service, to provide for the more adequate protection of the revenue and a more effective enforcement of the revenue and other laws administered by the Treasury Department, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from North Carolina should at least tell us what the bill is about. As far as I know there is no objection to the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill provides for a consolidation of certain agencies of the Treasury Department—the Secret Service Agency, the Customs Agency, and the Alcoholic Tax Unit, and the criminal division of the Bureau of Narcotics. The purpose of the bill is to provide for a more efficient and more economical administration of these different bureaus; to consolidate them for the purpose of better administration of the law. More or less economy is involved, because it provides for a more effective collection of the revenue. It has the unanimous report of the committee. We held hearings on the bill, and some suggestions were made as to ascertain amendments. Those suggestions have been incorporated in a new bill, now before us, and the objections eliminated.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. We had very full and complete hearings on this bill and it is the unanimous sentiment of the committee that it is a very meritorious measure. The purpose is to coordinate the enforcement activities of three bureaus, one the Alcohol Unit, another the Secret Service, and the other the Customs. These three bureaus now have the country divided up into three districts; that is, three different groups. Under one are 15 districts for enforcement, under another we have 13 districts, and under the Secret Service there are 38 districts. The result is that when the enforcement agents of these different bureaus go into the field in an endeavor to run down violators of the law, they not infrequently operate in the same district without any coordinated effort whatsoever. The result is that the Government is put to unnecessary expense and there is much confusion in the work and a great loss of revenue. Only one objection was raised originally to the bill, and that was with reference to including the Narcotic Division. Some druggists objected. The objections, so far as the druggists are concerned, have been eliminated. This is a companion bill to the antismuggling bill, the customs brokers bill, which we had in the House not long ago. Under the antismuggling measure the Government has already reduced the loss of revenue from $30,000,000 down to $5,000,000. This measure now before the House is going to accomplish, in my opinion, great economy in the field of law enforcement. It creates only one or two extra offices, and the extra cost of them will amount to very little, compared with what will be saved in revenue to the Government. I feel there should be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means on trying to consolidate offices. This is the first indication we have had for the last 2 or 3 years. The gentleman has a great work to perform, and if he gets after it I believe we will find it is a much easier job to cut down Government expenses than it is to raise taxes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] says that this will be an economy measure. Will the chairman of the committee state whether it is contemplated to lay off a lot of employees, or is this just an effort to have a better enforcement of the law so that the Treasury will obtain more revenue?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The primary purpose is to provide for better enforcement of the revenue laws and the collection of revenues. It might effect some economy. Some employees, if not needed, might be laid off, but that is not the primary purpose of it.

Mr. PARSONS. Regarding the transfer of employees into the new agency, will the gentleman state whether or not the status of these employees will be affected by the language on page 4, line 8:

Provided further, That such of the personnel so transferred who do not already possess a classified civil-service status shall not acquire such status by reason of such transfer.

And further, that no one so transferred may be retained without appropriate civil-service status for a longer period than 60 days.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have been informed by a source which I believe to be reliable that every employee that is affected by this bill is now under the civil service.

Mr. PARSONS. Nobody will be dropped because of this language in the bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is my distinct understanding from sources that I consider reliable.

The bill, if enacted into law, will prevent duplication and overlapping of the work now being done; it will provide also better and more economical administration. There can be no valid objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the Treasury Agency Organization Act.

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby created in the Treasury Department an organization to be known as the Treasury Agency Service, at the head of which shall be the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to appoint in such organization an assistant, to be known as the Director of the Treasury Agency Service, who shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per annum and who shall perform such duties in connection with the supervision and coordination of the activities of the Treasury Agency Service as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time assign.

(b) Hereafter the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department shall be in the Treasury Agency Service. There shall also be in the Treasury Agency Service a Customs Division, a Liquor Enforcement Division, and a Miscellaneous Division. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to appoint in the Treasury Agency Service three officers, who shall be designated, respectively, as Chief, Customs Division; Chief, Liquor Enforcement Division; and Chief, Miscellaneous Division, and who shall be chiefs of the division indicated by their respective titles.

SEC. 3. (a) All rights, privileges, powers, immunities, duties, and functions (hereinafter all referred to as functions) conferred or imposed by law upon the Enforcement Division of the Alcoholic Tax Unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the Customs Agency Service of the Bureau of Customs, or the Secret Service Division (hereinafter all referred to as units) of the Treasury Department, or upon any officer or employee of such units, are hereby transferred to and conferred and imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury.

All functions of investigation, detection, or prevention of willful or fraudulent violations of law, conferred or imposed by law upon the Bureau of Internal Revenue with respect to the internal-revenue laws relating to alcoholic liquors or beverages, upon the Bureau of Customs, or upon any officer or employee of either Bureau, and exercised by such Bureau, officer, or employee though any of the above-named units or the officers or employees thereof, are, to the extent that such functions have been so exercised, hereby transferred to, and conferred and imposed upon, the Secretary of the Treasury.

(b) The Enforcement Division of the Alcohol Tax Unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Customs Agency Service of the Bureau of Customs, together with the offices of Assistant Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue in charge of the Enforcement Division of the Alcohol Tax Unit; Deputy Commissioner of Customs, in charge of the Customs Agency Service; and Assistant Deputy Commissioner of Customs, Customs Agency Service, are hereby abolished.

SEC. 4. All personnel and property of each of the units or offices abolished by this act (including office equipment and official records on file therein or pertaining to the business thereof) are hereby transferred to the Treasury Agency Service: Provided, That the transfer of such personnel shall be without change in classification or compensation, except that this requirement shall not operate after September 30, 1936, to prevent the adjustment of classification or compensation to conform to the duties to which the personnel of the Treasury Agency Service may be assigned: Provided further, That such of the personnel so transferred who do not already possess a classified civil-service status shall not acquire such status by reason of such transfer except upon recommendation by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Civil Service Commission, subject to such noncompetitive tests of fitness as the Commission may prescribe; and no personnel so transferred may be retained in the Treasury Agency Service without appropriate civil-service status for a period longer than 60 days from the effective date of this act.

SEC. 5. The unexpended balances of appropriations for the Secret Service Division and such portions of the unexpended balances of other appropriations available for use in performing the functions transferred by this act as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine are necessary for the peformance of such functions shall hereafter be available to the Secretary of the Treasury as a single fund for expenditure for the purpose of performing the functions of the Treasury Agency Service and for otherwise carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to detail for duty in the Treasury Agency Service not to exceed three commissioned officers of the Coast Guard.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to confer or impose upon any of the officers or employees of the Treasury Agency Service any of the functions conferred or imposed upon him by this act.

(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to confer or impose upon any of the officers or employees of the Treasury Agency Service any of the functions, which he is authorized by any other act to confer or impose upon any officer or employee of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, which relate to the investigation, detection, or prevention of willful or fraudulent violations of the internal-revenue laws, relating to alcoholic liquors or beverages or any of the functions which he is authorized by any other act to confer or impose upon any officer or employee of the Secret Service Division or the Bureau of Customs.

(d) Such officers or employees of the Treasury Agency Service as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate shall possess, and may exercise, such of the functions of internal-revenue officers or customs officers, or both, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 7. (a) All laws, rules, regulations, remedies, privileges, licenses, permits, or orders made, issued, or granted prior to the effective date of this act, in respect of any of the functions transferred by this act, shall continue in full force and effect, except insofar as directly in conflict with the provisions of this act, and shall be applicable in the same manner and to the same extent as if such functions had not been transferred, until modified, superseded, revoked, or repealed.

(b) No proceeding, hearing, investigation, or other matter pending on the effective date of this act shall abate by reason of any provision of this act but shall be continued and brought to determination by the Secretary of the Treasury.

(c) No suit, action, or other proceeding, lawfully commenced by or against any officer or employee of the United States, in his official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his official duties, shall abate by reason of any provision of this act.

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue such rules, regulations, or orders, or take such other steps, as he shall consider necessary in order to coordinate the performance of the functions of investigation, detection, or prevention of violations of law, conferred or imposed upon any officer or employee of the Treasury Agency Service pursuant to this section with the performance of the functions of investigation, detection, or prevention of violations of the narcotic laws conferred or imposed by law upon the Bureau of Narcotics or any officer or employee thereof.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. This act shall take effect on the sixtieth day following its enactment.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 7, line 1, strike out the words "this section" and insert in lieu thereof "section 6."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to correct a typographical error.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOUGHTON: Page 3, line 15, strike out the word "united" and insert in lieu thereof the word "unit."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A. F. AMORY—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 487)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval H. R. 399, "An act for the relief of A. F. Amory."

The act confers jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia to adjudicate the claim of A. F. Amory against the United States for damages alleged to have been sustained by his power boat Mocking Bird in a collision between the power boat and a piece of submerged wreckage which is alleged to have been in the custody of the United States Coast Guard at the time of the collision.

Shortly after the collision a Coast Guard board of investigation was convened at section base 9, Cape May, N. J., to inquire into the responsibility for the collision between the Mocking Bird and the submerged wreckage. It was found that the United States Coast Guard had picked up the above-mentioned piece of wreckage, and on January 26, 1929, had beached and secured it at a place where it did not constitute a menace to navigation. At 2:15 a. m. on August 6, 1929, a member of the crew of the power boat Mocking Bird reported to the United States Coast Guard section 9 base that the Mocking Bird had collided with some wreckage floating in midchannel. The board of investigation further found that the piece of wreckage with which the Mocking Bird had collided was not in the custody of the Coast Guard at the time of the collision, nor was the collision the result of negligence on the part of the United States Coast Guard. Since the determination of the board no evidence has been brought to light which would alter the above conclusions.

The claim of A. F. Amory appears to be without merit, and I am therefore constrained to withhold my approval of H. R. 399.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 5, 1936.

The SPEAKER. The objection of the President will be spread at large on the Journal.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message and the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

STANLEY T. GROSS—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 488)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval H. R. 4031, "An act for the relief of Stanley T. Gross."

This bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Stanley T. Gross the sum of $500, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for the amount of a United States Treasury bond which he deposited in behalf of Stanislaw Walczak, an alien, who has been deported.

The alien, Walczak, was under deportation proceedings for illegal entry into the United States. In those proceedings he was released under $500 appearance bond furnished by Stanley T. Gross. The conditions of the bond were that Walczak would be delivered to the Immigration Service for hearing or hearings or for deportation.

Walczak's deportation was ordered, and Mr. Gross, the bondsman, was notified by registered letter dated October 9, 1929, to surrender Walczak for deportation on October 19, 1929. Mr. Gross failed to deliver the alien and the bond was declared breached. With the exception of writing a letter to Walczak informing him that he should appear for deportation, Mr. Gross apparently made no effort to locate and deliver the alien, who was later apprehended by immigration authorities without any assistance by the bondsman and deported on July 5, 1930.

When Mr. Gross deposited the bond he was undoubtedly aware of his responsibility to produce the alien upon call of the Government. If such laxity, as indicated in this instance, on the part of bondsmen in immigration cases is to be excused, the effective administration of the immigration laws will suffer serious impairment.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 6, 1936.

The SPEAKER. The objection of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President and the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question. Is it the intention to call up any more business this afternoon?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no other business to come before the House this afternoon.

Mr. SNELL. I have no objection to the gentleman making a speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to prefer a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

PUERTO RICAN INDEPENDENCE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill providing for the sovereignty of Puerto Rico.

Several days ago a bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator TYDINGS offering apparent independence to the people of Puerto Rico. Instead of offering genuine independence to the people of Puerto Rico, his bill offers them an American-controlled plebescite and a commonwealth which will be under the thumb of the American Government. The independence subsequently offered by the Tydings bill would be considerably curtailed by the menacing presence of an American naval reservation, the scene of the Atlantic fleet maneuvers, on their supposedly sovereign territory. At the same time the Tydings bill, with its tariff provisions, threatens to ruin the only present source of Puerto Rican income, which is the sale of their cash crops in the American market. His bill does not provide for the development of substitutes for the dominating and American-dominated sugar industry.

Such a bill is not desired by the Puerto Rican people, as their concerted protest shows. They would welcome real and absolute independence; and the American people, who once themselves formed a colony of the British Empire, have no desire or interest in being lords and masters of a smaller and weaker nation. Only those gentlemen who stand for reaction in America, the American Tories, the banks and sugar corporations, who have kept the Puerto Rican people in hunger and misery, are interested in Puerto Rico as a colony, not only for their profits but also as a fortified war base. If we really want to be the initiators of a Pan American peace conference, let us be honest and clear in our dealings with the peoples of our sister republics. That means that one of the bases of peace is the freedom of nations.

It is in viewing this question fairly and from the point of view of the interests of the American people, as well as the desires of the people of Puerto Rico, that I have presented my bill.

The dignity of the American people as a freedom-loving Nation demands that Puerto Rico be judged under the principle of self-determination of nations. This means that the United States remove completely and forever all interventions, all fingers from the affairs of the Puerto Rican people. This means that it grant complete sovereignty to the Puerto Rican people so that as a nation among other nations of the world Puerto Rico may work out its own destiny in such manner as it sees fit. Such complete independence will do much for real harmony in the Americas.

Genuine independence and the declaration of the responsibility of the United States for the present disastrous state of the economy of Puerto Rico and the abysmal poverty of its people is the purpose of my bill.

Puerto Rico, taken as the booty of war from Spain in 1898, has been successively ruined.

Four large American sugar corporations own over half of the good sugar land and produce over half the total crop. Sugar now composes about 75 percent of the exports of the island, whereas tobacco and coffee have been relegated to the background. The once landowning farmers dispossessed by the huge sugar plantations today work the unfertile mountain soil or are landless. Only 7 percent of the native dwellers in the rural regions are landowners in Puerto Rico, an agrarian country. Over the heads of these small farmers hangs a total mortgage debt of about $25,000,000. For years they have been unable to pay taxes.

The landless peasants have been converted into a great army of colonial slaves in the sugar plantations or are unemployed. The reports of the Puerto Rican Department of Labor for 1935 show an average wage for male workers in the sugar fields of $3.34 per week and for female sugar workers of $1.96 per week. This same wage scale runs through the other island industries and in tobacco and coffee they are much worse.

The lack of industry and the conversion of the island into a huge sugar-producing factory has meant a great toll in unemployment. The F. E. R. A. in Puerto Rico for February 1936 reports a total of 408,000 fathers of families in need and soliciting work or relief, a figure which includes 84.4 percent of the population.

Even in 1927 Governor Roosevelt pointed out the high percentage of tuberculosis, hookworm, malaria, and other diseases directly caused by the hunger of the people.

Responsible, therefore, for this misery, hunger, and disease is the maintenance of Puerto Rico as a colony of the United States, thus giving ample room for American interests to penetrate as deep economically as they wished while the Puerto Rican people could not develop their own country. But the Puerto Rican people have manifested their refusal to take this situation lying down. The great pressure for independence in the island is undoubtedly a determining factor in the sudden appearance of the Tydings bill with its apparent independence.

I propose that the United States take its hands off and let the Puerto Rican people do as they wish with their own country. The hunger and misery, the economic catastrophe, can certainly be laid at the door of the policy of the United States in Puerto Rico whether it is the do-nothing policy of Hoover or the do-very-little policy of Roosevelt.

Those people who favor the continuation of this "shame of the Americas", which is Puerto Rico as a colony, are trying to make it appear as though independence means more hunger for the people. The tories know that such a statement is a solemn lie. It is, to say the least, unfortunate that the Tydings bill with its provisions for a tariff on Puerto Rican products has added fuel to their flames.

My bill proposes that there be no tariff on Puerto Rican products shipped to the United States until the people of Puerto Rico so desire.

This is done so that Puerto Rico may have the necessary chance to build up her own industry and develop trade with whom she sees fit for her best advantage. Neither shall there be any restrictions on Puerto Rican immigration. These principles are to be ratified in a treaty between the two nations made 90 days after the new government of Pureto Rico expresses its desire to begin discussion. In the interim between the proclamation of independence and the signing of this treaty the present status quo in regard to trade relations is to be maintained. In this way there would be avoided as far as possible an undue cracking of the whip over the new nation.

Furthermore, in the 38 years that Puerto Rico has been a possession of the United States American citizens have extracted from the economy of the island over $400,000,000 which never returned to Puerto Rico for the well-being of its people or the development of its resources. This simple fact, verified by the Brookings Institution in 1929, is a major reason for the present difficulties of the people of Puerto Rico. That huge sum of money and the promise of more is why the American reactionaries try to make a genuine independence appear as a mistake and harmful to the people of Puerto Rico. But the hunger is the result of imperialist domination, and that is the real enemy of the Pureto Rican people.

I believe that it is only consistent with the dignity of the American people that a substantial indemnity be paid to the long-suffering people of Puerto Rico to make up in part for the years of hardship that they have undergone and to enable them to better find their feet and take boldly the path of freedom they ardently desire.

These are the principles of my bill. To the Tydings bill for fictitious independence I propose genuine and immediate independence. I also believe in presenting this bill that the Puerto Rican people should hold no illusions. Only their own united strength, the formation of an anti-imperialist front of the whole people against the foreign dominators and their own national traitors is the best guarantee of achieving independence. Waiting for the Tydings bill or my bill, or any other bill to grant them independence on a silver platter, would be a great mistake. Behind them will stand the overwhelming majority of the great American people, who hate oppression and love freedom.

It is up to the people of Puerto Rico to take the initiative, and the more they develop that and make it known to the entire world the better are the chances of the passage of my bill and the achieving of independence.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE STATE DEPARTMENT

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, for good or for evil, the United States has definitely entered the world's great armament competition.

Congress has appropriated half a billion dollars for military defense and another half billion or more for naval defense. It has authorized the building of two great battleships, at an approximate cost of $50,000,000 each.

What appropriation has it made for the country's first line of defense, the Department of State, which is the channel through which our negotiations with the nations of the world are carried on?

The far-flung outposts of this Department are to be found in every country in the world and in the remotest sections of these countries. A heavy responsibility rests upon those who represent us at these outposts. They watch the trend of events around them. They interpret and transmit them to the Department heads at Washington. They must be alert to foresee and to obviate possibilities for international misunderstandings. They must remove the small irritants that inevitably creep into all relationships, whether of trade and commerce or diplomacy. They must see to it that the lives as well as the interests of our nationals are safeguarded in their territories. They must keep watch lest a slight clash of interest grow into a breach of international peace, and it may often be that the delicate balance between war and peace is maintained through their good judgment, their integrity, and courage.

Because of its paramount importance our Department of State outranks all other departments. It is the acknowledged foundation upon which our whole structure of peace is reared, and Congress has appropriated to it for the coming year the pitifully inadequate sum of $16,111,934.

Compare this with the cost of one battleship.

APPOINTMENT OF ONE CONFEREE ON DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to make a request?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in view of the death of Mr. Buckbee, of Illinois, one of the conferees on the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill, I ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] be appointed as a conferee on the bill in his place.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is appointed a member of the conference committee on the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill, and the Senate will be informed accordingly.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

POVERTY IN THE MIDST OF PLENTY

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, on April 27 and 28 hearings were held in the House Committee on Banking and Currency on H. R. 9216. The hearings will be printed and I believe are of great interest to every Member of the American Congress, to every citizen of the United States, and to every citizen of every civilized country.

Without going into detail, the bill, I think, embodies the first legislative attempt to achieve a distribution to the people of all the wanted goods and services which the country can produce; in other words, it attempts to attack directly the problem of poverty in the midst of plenty.

During the hearings an elderly lady, who stated that her name was Patterson, spoke to me in a kindly manner about the bill. A few days afterward I received from her a communication which appears to me to be so much more than a personal letter that I think I should read it at this time:

APRIL 30, 1936.

Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GOLDSBOROUGH: I tried in vain the other day to give some adequate expression to my appreciation of the splendid work you are doing with your bill, 9216, but only succeeded in saying a few awkward words. I cannot, therefore, now refrain from trying to tell you of my admiration and respect for your courage and perseverance in your long and uphill fight for a decent life for the American people. I am sure of the ultimate triumph of social-credit principles, but I see many hard, dark days ahead of us. Still, as in every other worth-while cause, we must work on, even when there is no hope.

I am leaving soon for England and am going largely to see something of social-credit work there. And it will be one of my greatest joys to tell them of the Goldsborough bill and the good fight being waged in its behalf.

The enclosed card contains a feeble attempt to express my feelings on the situation.

Please do not trouble to reply. I only want to convey some idea of my feelings to you.

Very sincerely yours,

ANN C. PATTERSON.

The card referred to in the letter is as follows:

THE NEW CREED

I believe in the earth
And the fullness thereof;
In man and his labor;
In the machine,
Man's supreme masterpiece,
With which he has created,
And is still creating,
Abundance for all.

We are crucified daily and suffer,
Because we haven't money to buy
That which we produce.

We have descended into hell—
The hell of hunger, nakedness,
And economic insecurity.

We can arise from this hell
And ascend into heaven—
The heaven of plenty for all.

I believe in that new economics,
Which is a communion,
Not of saints,
But a communion, in which
All will partake.

And I believe in a resurrection
From despair, suffering, and uncertainty
And in life abundant.

—A. C. P.

On yesterday, upon my request, the lady consented that I make use of her communication at this time. [Applause.]

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN LEGATION IN ADDIS ABABA

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be absolutely fair in this matter, and because I do wish to be so fair I have introduced today in the House of Representatives a resolution, which I will read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby requested to transmit forthwith to the House of Representatives (1) full and complete information as to what steps were taken by the Government of the United States to provide, in connection with the Italo-Ethiopian War, for the protection of the American Legation in Addis Ababa, and, in connection with the recent looting of that city, for the protection of the lives of American citizens taking refuge in such Legation; and (2) copies of all communications between the Department of State and the American Minister in Addis Ababa in respect of such looting and in respect of any action taken or proposed or ordered to be taken in connection therewith.

Mr. Speaker, all the information we now have is what we have secured through the press or that I have secured from the Department of State by telephone. I want that information verified. The State Department knew for weeks and months that there would be danger of grave disturbance of looting and worse. The State Department knew that the people in our Legation might need protection. Mr. Speaker, what was done to protect our Minister and his wife, the naval radio operators, and the personnel attached to that Legation? So far as I can tell, there were only four guards there, and they were natives, to defend the Legation.

The United States Legation at least, Mr. Speaker, could have had machine guns there and other equipment.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has asked me the question that if we had protected our Legation with machine guns, would not that tend to get us into war, especially if a shot were fired for protection. Mr. Speaker, there were plenty of shots fired by the defenders of our Legation, and we are not at war. Those shots were fired against looters and bandits, not against an organized soldiery of Ethiopia. We have a right to protect our property against such wherever it may be located. It was a pity, however, that our Legation did not have adequate arms, in the form of machine guns, to insure such protection as was needed.

We at least, Mr. Speaker, could have done as the British did, had trained men there, or men ready to defend our people.

I think my colleagues in Congress would agree with me that it is very humiliating that we had to appeal to the British Government for protection instead of having our own men there to protect our rights.

I know the House will join me in thanking the Minister and Mrs. Engert. I know they are as proud as I am that Mrs. Engert, according to dispatches, assisted personally in the defense of the Legation. It proves that the wives of our ministers and officers in the Foreign Service are just as brave as the men. They do not ask protection first for themselves, but fight shoulder to shoulder with the men.

All of us are grateful, too, for the work of those able naval radio operators. If it had not been for them everyone in our Legation would have been lost. The Congress will want to thank them also.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Was it not the duty of the League of Nations to protect that small country in northern Africa, Ethiopia?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am not going into that at this time, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am just taking up now the matter of the duty of the State Department, which had full information at hand, and I am speaking also, I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the Members of the House, in order that from now on we may have adequate protection in similar situations for the officers and employees of our Foreign Service, for our nationals and our missionaries. I am asking also that we have an adequate and suitable Legation. Ours was the only Legation, I understand, that was situated just in the center or dangerous part of Addis Ababa, instead of being situated 5 miles away, where the British and other Legations are located.

Newspaper accounts of the rioting there and the cables of Minister Engert to the State Department indicate that the Legation was practically defenseless and virtually unarmed. A few rifles, shotguns, and revolvers were the only weapons at the Legation. An Italian submachine gun was later procured through the good offices of an Abyssinian policeman. Americans in the Legation, as well as their native employees, men and women both, were in the gravest peril, and two of the latter were wounded.

Grateful as we are to the British for coming to the rescue of our Minister and citizens and those whom we employed, it still seems to me that our own Government should have supplied some protection.

The rioting and rebellion had been predicted for some time, and it seemed only reasonable to expect that the State Department should have taken some precautions to guard American lives and property. The British had a Legation guard on hand, and if our diplomats had not been able to profit by their foresight, a horrible tragedy would have resulted, with the death of Americans and their wives at the post of duty through the negligence of their own Government.

Legation guards are not a new thing in our history. We have maintained them for years in the Orient, and the slightest thought would have indicated the necessity for similar precautions in Addis Ababa.

My resolution calls for full information on this matter, including all correspondence on the subject, as well as an explanation of why our Legation was left unprotected. It seems to me that when the State Department anticipated the break-down in communications it might also have anticipated the rioting and made arrangements accordingly. A few machine guns sent to Ethiopia along with the radio equipment would have obviated the necessity of invoking the aid of another nation to protect our own citizens. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

SECURITY FOR THE PEOPLE OF PENNSYLVANIA IS IMPOSSIBLE UNLESS THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY OBTAINS CONTROL OF THE STATE LEGISLATURE

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address which I delivered before the Pittsburgh Federation of Labor.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are these the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include my address before the Thirty-seventh Annual Convention of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor at Uniontown, Pa., Friday, May 1, 1936, as follows:

Pennsylvania today stands at the crossroads. Pennsylvania today is divided into two separate forces—the force of liberalism led by Gov. George H. Earle, and opposed to it—the force of stark reaction, as represented by the Grundy and utility-controlled Republican majority in the State senate.

THE PASSAGE OF SOCIAL LEGISLATION DEPENDS ON THE VICTORY OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY

I am not a prophet and have no inclination to predict what may be accomplished at the special session of the State legislature which will convene next Monday, but I am firmly convinced that adequate social legislation and labor legislation will not be enacted into law unless the Democratic Party will capture a majority of the seats of the State senate and will continue control of the house of representatives at Harrisburg for the next regular session to convene in January of next year.

THE KEYSTONE OF A PROGRAM FOR THE KEYSTONE STATE

As regards permanent legislation, the keystone of an enlightened legislative program in Pennsylvania must be the passage of genuine social legislation. In his message to Congress on June 8, 1934, President Roosevelt said that "among all our objectives I place the security of men, women, and children of the Nation first." This is even more true of Pennsylvania than of the nation as a whole. The President designated these objectives as:

First. Decent homes to live in;

Second. Development of natural resources to afford the fullest opportunity for all who want to work; and Third. Safeguards against the major misfortunes of life.

The Social Security Act is concerned with the third of Roosevelt's objectives; that is, safeguards against misfortunes that cannot be eliminated in this man-made world of ours.

That act provides for unemployment insurance, old-age pensions and old-age insurance, security for children, aid to the blind, extension of public-health services, vocational rehabilitation.

I should like to talk to you today more fully about the two main provisions of this act—old-age pensions and unemployment insurance.

First, however, I should like to tear out and exhibit to you a few black pages from the tragic history of old-age-pension legislation in Grundy's Pennsylvania.

PENSION LEGISLATION BASED ON DECEIT

On May 10, 1923, the State legislature in Harrisburg passed an old-age-pension act. This action was dishonest, because insufficient funds were appropriated. Only $25,000 was appropriated for a 2-year period—a sum which could not even begin to administer the law in even one of the 67 counties of this State. The petty appropriation of $25,000, when an appropriation of thirty million was required, was a cruel joke at the expense of the aged of Pennsylvania. It was a deliberate fraud on the needy old people of Pennsylvania. Instead of extending sympathy and help, the State legislature handed them a joker. Although not carried out for lack of appropriation, the mere paper existence of this miserable old-age-pension law was more than the vested interests in control of this State would permit.

SEVEN OLD MEN SHOUT "NO"

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania declared this old-age-pension law unconstitutional.

Every attempt since then to amend the State constitution has been prevented by the same group of reactionary members of Mr. Grundy's Manufacturers' Association, the feudal lords of the utility empire, the State chamber of commerce and their paid tools. No decent and adequate social-security legislation will be possible in Pennsylvania until our antiquated State constitution is revised. And, delegates, you know who defeated the constitutional referendum last fall.

A POORLY EXECUTED PAUPER LAW

The 1933 session of the legislature passed a so-called old-age pension assistance law, which, in fact, was an old-age pauper law. This act is so inadequate and so limited in its application that it fails to comply with even the modest standards required under the Federal Social Security Act. The Federal act provided that the Federal Government would match, dollar for dollar, all old-age pensions paid by the various States in the Union, provided, however, that the State law would include certain minimum standards of decency in making provisions for the aged. The Pennsylvania law is below these minimum standards.

INDICTED ON EIGHT COUNTS

I present the following indictments against the Pennsylvania Old-Age Assistance Act:

Indictment no. 1: It limits old-age payments to paupers only. It provides that old people who possess more than $300 in personal property, even if they have no income, are not eligible for these small payments.

Indictment no. 2: It provides for payment of $30 a month, which are indecently low and shamefully insufficient.

Indictment no. 3: It denies medical aid to the aged needy and provides for less than a mere bread-and-water diet.

Indictment no. 4: It provides for continuous residence of 15 years in the State, or, if not continuous residence, for a total of 40 years of residence in the State. This provision unjustly disqualifies thousands of needy aged in this State.

Indictment no. 5: It provides for an age minimum of 70 years, when it is essential that pension payments begin at 60 years.

Indictment no. 6: Insufficient funds have been appropriated, thereby denying aid to about two-thirds of the qualified and needy aged of Pennsylvania.

Indictment no. 7: It fails in many other respects to meet the minimum requirements of the Federal Social Security Act.

Indictment no. 8: Its extreme restrictions and inadequate provisions will deny to Pennsylvania at least $20,000,000 in Federal funds each year, which could take care of 80,000 needy aged in Pennsylvania.

The present Pennsylvania old-age pauper (rather than pension) law denies pensions to those under 70 years of age.

THE GRAVEYARD PENSION

My friends, an age minimum of 70 years is far, far too high. In our modern industrial system, when many of our mines, mills, and factories throw the workingman on the industrial scrap heap when he is 45 years of age, it is a travesty on justice to compel him to wait until he is 70 years old before he can receive assistance from the State. The people of Pennsylvania want an old-age pension and not a graveyard pension. Old-age pensions should begin at 60 years.

A DOLLAR-A-DAY EXISTENCE

The maximum allowed is $30 a month, which is far too low. It is insufficient for an aged person to live in decency and minimum comfort on this small amount. But even that small sum is never paid. Under a ruling by an attorney general of this State, old-age assistance payments must be limited to payments for rent, food, clothing, and fuel. Not one cent is permitted for medical care for the aged. The average allowance in Allegheny County is $25.40 a month, and $20.93 in the State as a whole.

THE DEATH WATCH

But here is the cruelest and most astounding defect: The legislature deliberately and wantonly refused to appropriate sufficient funds to meet the payments due. Here are some figures: When the law took effect December 1, 1934, 10,563 applications were filed in Allegheny County by persons 70 years of age and over. Of these, 3,735 were given small pensions and 6,617 were placed on a waiting list. On May 1 of last year there were 4,000 on the pension lists and more than 8,000 on the waiting list. Two-thirds of the needy aged of Pennsylvania who were eligible under this strict State law were on the waiting list, because insufficient funds had been appropriated.

At the beginning of this year there were 39,574 persons receiving so-called old-age pensions in Pennsylvania, and more than 100,000 eligible old and needy persons were on the waiting list—waiting for what—for the death of some other aged so that they may inherit his place on the pension list.

What a list this is, a list composed of old men and women whose health and energy have been spent in building up the resources of this country, a list of old men and women who have qualified under one of the strictest laws for old-age pensions. Their reward is not the receipt of a small pension check but a seat outside giving them the privilege to look in and wait until death will take some other aged person to his eternal reward and thus make room on the pension list. What a tragedy on justice! What a travesty upon law! What a colossal hoax to play upon our fathers and mothers!

A FRAUD ON THE AGED

Only $10,000,000 were made available for these payments when the execution of the law required a minimum of $25,000,000. What is the use of passing a law to pay pensions to needy aged of 70 years or more and then refusing to appropriate the money necessary for the payment of these pensions? Do I need to cite to you more facts and figures to prove that the Republicans in control of the State legislature have committed a fraud upon every man, woman, and child of Pennsylvania—a heinous fraud upon the aged.

WATCH THE GANG

The Governor of Pennsylvania has summoned the State legislature in special session to convene at Harrisburg next Monday. You can depend on Governor Earle to do his part in promoting the passage of adequate old-age-pension legislation at this special session. You can depend on the Democratic members of the house of representatives to do their part. But watch the Republican gang in the State senate!

These changes should be made in our old-age assistance law:

First. The age limit should be reduced from 70 years to 60 years.

Second. The requirements of the Federal Social Security Act must be met.

Third. Sufficient money must be appropriated to pay pensions to all who are eligible. The waiting list—this death watch—must be abolished.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

While we have an inadequate old-age-pension law, we have no law at all for unemployment insurance. The State senate refused to take even the first step toward meeting the Federal requirements for setting up an unemployment-insurance system.

The provisions for unemployment insurance are among the most important of the Social Security Act. I do not believe that these provisions are perfect. Indeed, I have criticized them because they do not go far enough. But it is a beginning. It does establish a foundation from which we can build an adequate and just system of unemployment insurance.

THE PAY-ROLL TAX IS ALREADY COLLECTED

Under the Federal act the Government levies a pay-roll tax beginning with 1 percent in 1936, 2 percent in 1937, and 3 percent in 1938 and each year thereafter. The employers are not permitted to deduct this tax from the wages of their employees. This tax is paid into the Federal Treasury, but in those States where unemployment-insurance laws are enacted, 90 percent of this tax is retained for the benefit of the unemployed of the State.

TWO HUNDRED MILLION IN 3 YEARS

Thus in the State of Pennsylvania the employers will pay the following amounts into the Federal Treasury: About 25 million dollars in 1936, about 50 million in 1937, and 75 million in 1938, or a total of 150 million in the next 3 years.

This is based on the present pay-roll figures. If there is a further increase in business, the employers of Pennsylvania will pay about $200,000,000 in the next 3 years.

The purpose of this tax is not to collect revenue but to induce the States to enact adequate unemployment-insurance systems. If Pennsylvania had an unemployment-insurance law, all but 10 percent of these $200,000,000 would be retained in Pennsylvania for the payment of unemployment-insurance benefits. But so reactionary and so short-sighted have been the Republican members of the State senate that they have blocked the bill to retain this huge sum for the benefit of the jobless of Pennsylvania.

They are so blind and so stupid that they would lose this vast sum rather than permit the enactment of any social legislation, even if such social legislation will benefit the Pennsylvania jobless and thus benefit trade and industry in Pennsylvania.

THE LEGISLATIVE SODOM AND GOMORRAH

The Pennsylvania State Legislature failed to enact an unemployment insurance law despite the efforts of Governor Earle. The Governor and his associates sponsored and secured the passage of an unemployment-insurance law in the lower house. This bill was well on its way toward enactment until it reached the State senate—the last remaining stronghold of reaction in this State.

BURIED IN COMMITTEE

There it was slaughtered. There it was effectively and viciously killed in committee—in the same graveyard where lie the remains of all proposals for social legislation. Why did the rubber stamps of the utility and Grundy interests kill this unemployment insurance bill? Certainly not on the grounds of economy. It would have cost the employers less than one-tenth of 1 percent of their total pay roll. While they would have paid out about two and one-half million dollars, a total of twenty-five million would have been made available for unemployment compensation payments.

Not only would this not have been a burden on industry and commerce in Pennsylvania but a distinct benefit by making available an additional amount of purchasing power. Regardless of its merits, regardless of its provisions, the unemployment insurance bill was promptly killed by the Republican-controlled State senate in Harrisburg, simply because it was social legislation. These reactionary senators would rather lose millions of dollars than take a single step in the direction of social legislation. For this reason they pickled the unemployment insurance bill in a committee of the State senate without reading it, without studying it, and certainly without understanding it.

THE PALLBEARERS

Who were the senate stalwarts who blocked the road to security and killed this important bill by burying it in committee? They were an aggregation of puppets, controlled and discredited henchmen. These were the pallbearers. When you know the associations and backers of these gentlemen you have no further need to understand why this, and every other piece of social legislation, was killed in the State senate.

REPUBLICANS BETRAYED PEOPLE

The action of the Republican-controlled State senate in scuttling this bill is a betrayal of every man, woman, and child in Pennsylvania. It is a betrayal of the people of Pennsylvania by the puppets of the short-sighted reactionary industrial barons. It was a cowardly betrayal of the people, because these reactionary senators did not have the courage to vote against this bill openly, but killed it in committee, the usual and consistently effective slaughterhouse of all decent legislation.

In killing this bill these Republican senators have killed every chance they ever had of coming back into power. They have committed political suicide. They should, and most certainly will be, retired to political oblivion.

RIGHT A WRONG

The special session beginning Monday must correct this wrong. An unemployment-insurance bill must be enacted without delay. Every thoughtful person must agree that the unemployed must not be permitted to starve. Is it not far better to take care of the unemployed through a system of unemployment insurance than through the degrading system of dole and relief? This choice must be made. Pennsylvania must fall in line with the progressive States. The people want unemployment-insurance laws.

PUNISH THE GUILTY

Whoever stands in the way must be swept aside by the ballot. When the people realize that the Republican majority in the State senate is responsible for depriving them of the unemployment-compensation benefits to which they are entitled under the Federal law, they will defeat every opponent of social security.

The State Federation of Labor in Pennsylvania should insist that the State legislature, which will meet in Harrisburg next week, passes an unemployment-insurance law. Labor should leave no doubt in the mind of the Republican leadership in the State senate that it is insisting on the passage of a proper unemployment-compensation measure.

THE CONTRIBUTORS

No unemployment insurance is adequate, no unemployment insurance system is sound unless it recognizes the principle that contributions should come from these two sources only:

1. From a tax imposed upon the employers, and
2. From a contribution made by the State itself.

At the present time unemployment relief is paid for entirely out of public funds. To put the burden of unemployment insurance entirely upon industry and commerce is unsound, because business and industry is only partly responsible for unemployment. The policy pursued by the Government is partially responsible for unemployment.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HAS MODEL MEASURE

Of all the State unemployment insurance laws so far enacted only one, that in the District of Columbia, which I had the privilege to sponsor, provides for a contribution by the State. But let it be remembered that outside of the United States of America there is not one country which has an unemployment system to which the States do not contribute.

LABOR IS EXEMPTED

The second principle which must be included in a sound unemployment-insurance system is the principle that there should be no contribution by labor. The reason is obvious.

First. If the employers contribute to unemployment insurance by a pay-roll tax the amount of the tax is passed on in increased prices. That means that the cost of unemployment insurance becomes a part of the cost of production and that is as it should be. The cost of idle machinery, the overhead of a plant goes on whether the plant is operating or not. The maintenance cost of idle machinery is a part of the cost of production and idle manpower must also be charged up under the same heading.

Second. The employer who contributes to unemployment insurance does not pay for it himself but passes it on to the consumers in the form of increased prices. In reality it is labor which pays for it as consumers. If labor would have to make direct contributions it would pay twice.

Third. To exact contributions from labor would directly and substantially decrease the purchasing power of the employees and to that extent it would bring about more unemployment instead of less and thus tend to defeat the very principles of unemployment insurance.

There are many provisions which are of vital importance and which determine the soundness and the desirability of an unemployment insurance law. They are too many for me to discuss today. I shall only mention one of them which I consider of the greatest importance. I am referring to the insurance coverage.

The Roosevelt program for social security provided for unemployment insurance for all employers having four or more employees. This was changed in passage in the House to 10 or more employees. The Senate again reduced it to four or more employees, and in conference it was fixed at eight or more employees. That is the final form of the bill and the Federal law today. Of course, do not forget that the Federal law provides for a minimum and does not prevent any one State from fixing a greater coverage.

ALL EMPLOYEES SHOULD BE COVERED

No State unemployment-insurance law is sound unless it covers all industrial and commercial employees in the State. A man who works in a shop which only employs three or two or even one employee is as much entitled to protection against periods of unemployment as the man who works in a mill which employs thousands of employees. The bread line and the soup kitchen and charitable relief are as distasteful to the man who works in a small establishment as they are to the man who works in a large mill or mine. The only sound provision and the only practical provision is one which covers every single person employed in industry and commerce. There is only one law that does that—the unemployment insurance law for the District of Columbia. It is the only one which covers every employer who has one or more employees.

We in Pennsylvania should insist that the State act should cover all industrial and commercial employers who employ one or more persons.

DREAMS COME TRUE

The Federal Social Security Act combines into one law all of the forms of social-security legislation which labor leaders and liberals have dreamt about but scarcely hoped to accomplish. The fear of insecurity will be banished. Security, comfort, and peace of mind will become living realities if the provisions of the Federal Social Security Act are put into effect through the coordinated action of the States and are then further expanded.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT IS ENTITLED TO THE GRATITUDE OF LABOR

If the Roosevelt administration had accomplished nothing else than to establish this vast and noble system of social security, it would be entitled to your everlasting gratitude and deserving of your vote.

Add to that the Wagner Labor Relations Act, which recognized—gives the force of law to—labor's right to collective bargaining; labor's right to join unions of their own choosing and to be free from coercion, compulsion, and intimidation. This is the most important labor measure ever enacted in American history. Labor should show its appreciation to those who have made the enactment of this act possible.

ROOSEVELT FOES ARE LABOR FOES

Because President Roosevelt was a friend of labor and supported the passage of such measures as the National Labor Relations Act, he earned the bitter and vicious enmity of powerful and influential interests. They are spending millions of dollars to bring about his defeat. It is up to labor to recognize its friend by supporting him and helping him against his enemies—for every enemy of Roosevelt is an enemy of organized labor. Labor should show its appreciation for the friendship shown by President Roosevelt by supporting him unanimously for reelection.

SOME NEW-DEAL ACTS

I should like to cite to you the huge appropriations for relief, for public works, for financial aid to home owners and the small businessman. The Guffey Coal Act, the utility holding-company bill, the new Banking Act, including insurance for bank deposits, the Securities Act; these and many other acts of a definite benecial nature were enacted. All of them benefited you in one way or another.

ROOSEVELT OR REACTION

I want to say to you that in the coming election there will be only two classes of candidates—liberal or reactionary. You must choose between the two. Let me tell you, here and now, that every vote for a third-party candidate is a vote for conservative reaction. A vote for any other candidate, except Roosevelt, is a vote for the American Liberty League. This is not time for labor to be divided on minor issues, or follow the propounders of high-sounding phrases, or cheer for every type of Moses who promises to lead you to a new Utopia.

I ask you to endorse and support Franklin D. Roosevelt, the man, the true American, the successful administrator, the proven friend of the people, and the champion of humanity. No matter what your party affiliation may be, you owe it to yourself and your family to support Roosevelt. I repeat, a vote for any other candidate, no matter what his party or platform, is a vote for the candidate of the Du Ponts, the Grundy's, the sweatshop proprietor, the exploiter of labor, oppressive utility interests, and the financial tyrants.

LABOR LOSES IF ROOSEVELT LOSES

It took a generation to build up the present labor movement in America. It took years and years of hard struggle to win for labor the benefits it now enjoys. I say to you, with all sincerity at my command, that if Franklin D. Roosevelt is defeated, organized labor will lose every gain it made during the past 3 years. Not only that; if reaction sets in, if the conservatives gain control of the Government, the pendulum will swing violently in the opposite direction, and labor may lose not only its present gains but every progressive gain it has made for 50 years.

Nineteen hundred and thirty-six is the most crucial year in labor's history. Fifty years of hard-fought battles may be lost, and the fruits of many heart-rending victories of 50 years may be poisoned unless labor stands solidly behind Roosevelt.

SUPPORT ROOSEVELT

I again urge you to get behind Roosevelt. Your homes, your jobs, your future is at stake. You must fight to preserve them. It is your fight. It will be your victory and the victory of the people in the reelection, the overwhelming reelection, of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN CONTROL OF THE STATE SENATE WILL HAVE ITS LAST CHANCE DURING THE SPECIAL SESSION OF THE STATE LEGISLATURE TO COOPERATE WITH GOVERNOR EARLE IN LIBERALIZING THE OLD-AGE-PENSION LAWS OF THE STATE AND IN ESTABLISHING AN UNEMPLOYMENT-COMPENSATION SYSTEM IN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address I delivered on the radio last Sunday on the subject of social-security legislation.

Mr. RICH. My Speaker, reserving the right to object, are these the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include my radio address over station WJAS, Pittsburgh, Pa., Sunday, May 3, 1936, as follows:

Tomorrow evening the Pennsylvania State Legislature will be convened in special session in response to a call by Governor Earle. This is such an extraordinary occasion and presents such great opportunities for the passage of legislation in which you and I are interested that I want to devote this talk to it.

The Governor will lay before the general assembly a 17-point program, which will include appropriations for relief, abatement of tax penalties, and social-security legislation.

PENNSYLVANIA NOW LOSES MILLIONS OF DOLLARS OF FEDERAL FUNDS

The State of Pennsylvania now loses annually at least $20,000,000 by failing to liberalize the old-age-pension law of this State in conformance with the requirements of the Federal Social Security Act. Further, Pennsylvania will lose the huge sum of $150,000,000 in the next 3 years unless the State legislature passes an unemployment-insurance act.

THE FEDERAL SOCIAL SECURITY ACT WILL NOT BE EFFECTIVE IN PENNSYLVANIA UNTIL THE STATE LEGISLATURE COOPERATES

The Federal Social Security Act is not self-executing. It is not effective in any single State unless the State legislature passes State acts in harmony with the Federal Social Security Act.

The Social Security Act provides for unemployment insurance, old-age pensions and old-age insurance, maternity care, aid to the blind, vocational rehabilitation, and extension of the public-health services.

THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE LAW GOVERNS THE PAYMENT OF OLD-AGE PENSIONS IN PENNSYLVANIA

First I want to discuss the law relating to old-age pensions. Under the Federal Social Security Act the Federal Government matches every dollar which Pennsylvania pays out for old-age pensions. That is, the Federal Government repays to Pennsylvania one-half of whatever amount Pennsylvania pays out for old-age pensions, provided, however, that the Pennsylvania old-age-assistance law contains certain minimum requirements. The question whether a certain aged person receives an old-age pension in Pennsylvania, therefore, depends entirely upon the State act and not upon the Federal law.

This is the distinction which you must keep in mind if you want to establish the status of old-age-pension legislation as it applies to Pennsylvania. Since the terms of the Pennsylvania State old-age-assistance law determine the extent to which old-age pensions are paid in Pennsylvania, I would like to discuss them with you briefly.

PENNSYLVANIA HAS A PAUPER-PENSION LAW

Pennsylvania does not pay an old-age pension. Pennsylvania does have a pauper pension which it pays to needy, indigent citizens over 70 years of age to the extent that the money has been appropriated by the State legislature. In no sense of the word can the Pennsylvania act be called an old-age-pension law.

SOME FUNDAMENTAL SHORTCOMINGS OF THE PENNSYLVANIA OLD-AGE-ASSISTANCE LAW

Among the many defects of the Pennsylvania old-age-assistance law I would like to cite the following:

1. It limits old-age payments to paupers only. It provides that old people who possess more than $300 in personal property should not receive pensions, even if they have no income and no friends. This provision is unfair to those old people who have laid aside a few hundred dollars for a decent burial and have no other estate.

THE AGE LIMIT OF 70 YEARS IS FAR TOO HIGH

2. It denies pensions to those under 70 years of age. An age minimum of 70 years is too high. In our modern industrial system when many of our industries throw a human being on the scrap heap at 45 years of age, it is a travesty on justice to compel him to wait until he is 70 years old before he can receive assistance from the State. The people of Pennsylvania want an old-age pension and not a graveyard pension. Old-age pensions in Pennsylvania should begin at 60 years of age.

PENNSYLVANIA PAYS ON THE AVERAGE THE PITIFUL AMOUNT OF $20.93 A MONTH

3. The maximum allowed each aged person is $30 per month. This is utterly insufficient. No one can live in decency on such a small monthly payment. However, even this small sum is never actually paid. Since the ruling by an attorney general of this Commonwealth that old-age assistance must be limited to payments for rent, food, clothing, and fuel, the monthly payments have been reduced from the $30 per month allowed by law so that today the average payment to an aged person in Pennsylvania is $20.93 a month.

PENNSYLVANIA DENIES MEDICAL AID TO THE NEEDY AGED

4. It denies medical aid to the aged needy and permits only a little better than a bread-and-water diet.

5. It requires continuous residence of 15 years in the State and in cases where the aged person may have been absent from the State for some period of time during the last 15 years, he must have been a resident of the State for 40 years before he can be eligible for a pension. This requirement is unfair and unreasonable. It disqualifies many needy and deserving old people.

WHY PASS AN OLD-AGE-ASSISTANCE LAW AND THEN REFUSE TO APPROPRIATE THE NECESSARY MONEY FOR IT?

6. But here is the cruelest and most astounding defect: The State legislature, under the control of the Republican Party, deliberately and wantonly refused to appropriate sufficient funds to meet the payments due. On the 1st of May last year there were 4,000 aged persons receiving pensions in Allegheny County, but there were more than 8,000 eligible needy persons on the waiting list, because there was no money available to take care of all who were entitled to pensions. At the beginning of the year there were 40,000 persons receiving old-age assistance in Pennsylvania, but more than 100,000 needy eligible persons were on the "waiting list" because there was no money appropriated for them.

THE "WAITING LIST" MUST GO

One of the saddest and cruelest episodes in the history of Pennsylvania is this distressing waiting list, a list composed of old and needy persons whose health and energy has been spent in building up the resources of this Nation, who have qualified under the strictest law for old-age pensions ever enacted, but who must wait in vain for the relief that is justly due them. Can you picture the untold suffering that these old people must endure during the months and years on the "waiting list", when they must wait for the death of some aged person so that they could inherit his place on the pension list? The army of the aged is forced to welcome the battalion of death that would take to their eternal reward those who have been receiving small monthly payments. What is the use of passing a law to pay pensions to needy aged over 70 and then refusing to appropriate the money to do so?

ABOLISH THE DEATH WATCH

The special session of the State legislature, which will convene tomorrow evening at Harrisburg, must enact a decent and adequate old-age-pension law that will meet at least all the minimum requirements of the Federal Social Security Act and which will begin payments at a reasonable age. Pennsylvania must appropriate sufficient money to pay pensions to all those who are eligible. The waiting list—this death watch—must be abolished.

You can depend on Governor Earle to do his part in the passage of an adequate old-age-pension law. You can depend on the Democratic members of the house of representatives at Harrisburg, but watch the remnants of the Republican Party which still controls the senate. The State senate, you know, is the slaughterhouse of all social legislation and the graveyard of all humanitarian measures.

PENNSYLVANIA HAS NO UNEMPLOYMENT-COMPENSATION LAW

While we have a very inadequate old-age-assistance law in Pennsylvania, we have no law at all regarding unemployment insurance. The Federal Government is already collecting a pay-roll tax from employers in Pennsylvania, but the Pennsylvania State Senate has thus far prevented all efforts to pass suitable unemployment-insurance legislation.

THE UTILITIES AND SHORT-SIGHTED MANUFACTURERS IN CONTROL OF THE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY OF THE SENATE PREVENTED THE PASSAGE OF AN UNEMPLOYMENT-COMPENSATION LAW

Pennsylvania will pay about $150,000,000 in pay-roll taxes during the next 3 years. If a satisfactory State law is passed, 90 percent of this huge sum will be retained by Pennsylvania employers for the benefit of the State unemployment-insurance fund. For every two and one-half million dollars paid by the employers of this State, twenty-five millions would become available for unemployment compensation payments to the jobless. Still the agents of the utilities and of reactionary manufacturers, in control of the Republican majority of the State senate, were so short-sighted that they prevented the passage of the unemployment-insurance bill during the last regular session of the State legislature, which would have assured this money for the benefit of our jobless.

Governor Earle and his associates sponsored and secured the passage of an unemployment-insurance law in the lower house at Harrisburg. It was well on its way toward enactment until it reached the Republican-controlled State senate where it was promptly and effectively buried in committee. Those of us who were shocked by this display of arrogance and calioused indifference on the part of the legislative agents of the industrial empires of this State can never forget and will never forgive the Republican leadership of Pennsylvania for killing this unemployment-insurance bill in a cowardly committee of the State senate.

THE SPECIAL SESSION PRESENTS THE LAST OPPORTUNITY OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY OF PENNSYLVANIA TO PERMIT PASSAGE OF LAWS PROVIDING SECURITY FOR THE PEOPLE OF PENNSYLVANIA

The special session beginning tomorrow must correct this injustice. An unemployment-insurance bill must be enacted without delay. Every thoughtful person agrees that the unemployed must not be permitted to starve. It is therefore much better that the unemployed be cared for through a system of unemployment insurance than through the degrading system of dole and relief.

The bread line, the soup kitchen, and the charitable institution for the unemployed must be a relic of the past and never return in the future. Pennsylvania must fall in line with other progressive States and pass an unemployment-insurance law.

PENNSYLVANIA SHOULD FOLLOW THE ELLENBOGEN UNEMPLOYMENT-INSURANCE LAW NOW IN FORCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The unemployment-insurance law must be sound and workable. It must provide for contributions by the employers and by the State government. Pennsylvania should follow the model unemployment-insurance law which I sponsored for the District of Columbia and which insures every employee in an industrial and commercial concern against the hazards of unemployment.

GOVERNOR EARLE IS LEADING THE FIGHT FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY FOR THE PEOPLE OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Roosevelt administration at Washington has made a good beginning in setting up the machinery to administer the Social Security Act. The Earle administration at Harrisburg wants to cooperate with the Federal Government. If we are to have social security in Pennsylvania the mighty force of public opinion must be concentrated on Harrisburg to help release Pennsylvania from the strangle hold of the Republican majority of the State senate.

The liberal and progressive forces led by Governor Earle are now engaged in a major battle with the Grundy forces and the utilities agents. The reactionary elements in Pennsylvania will make another effort to block social-security legislation in the senate. In the interest and for the security of our people, in the interest and for the welfare of our State, I hope that the Pennsylvania State Legislature will liberalize Pennsylvania's pauper old-age-assistance law and thus obtain for Pennsylvania $20,000,000 of Federal contributions toward old-age pensions. I hope that the Pennsylvania State Legislature will pass an unemployment-insurance law and thus save for Pennsylvania jobless and for the benefit of trade and industry in Pennsylvania $150,000,000 in the next 3 years.

NATIONAL CEMETERIES

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with amendment 42 to the War Department appropriation bill considered today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, amendment 42 of the War Department appropriation bill for 1937, which amendment relates to an appropriation for "cemeterial expenses", deals with the acquisition of land for national cemetery purposes.

While amendment 42 provided $100,000 for such purposes, the amendment was in reality a compromise between the House and Senate, the original item being $171,000, and that definitely earmarked for the purchase of additional land in the vicinity of Baltimore. With the word "Baltimore" stricken from the Senate amendment and the amount reduced, the bill as it passed today provides $100,000 to be expended by the War Department for the purchase of additional acreage. The House conferees on this bill knew of my interest in this matter, and I want to thank them very much for the courtesy shown and their willingness to go along to the extent they did in making possible an amount which, I believe, will be sufficient to meet the present needs of the national cemetery in Baltimore. While the fund is not definitely labeled for expenses in Baltimore, it is pretty definitely understood, I am sure, on the part of the War Department and others interested, that such is the real purpose of the appropriation.

With the knowledge I had that a very acute situation had developed in Baltimore with respect to burial grounds for veterans, I advocated the purchase of additional space for the national cemetery in Baltimore, located on the Frederick Road, contiguous to Loudon Park Cemetery, in the district I represent. The Senators from Maryland and my colleagues in the House, although the cemetery in question is located in my district, interested themselves in bringing about this appropriation.

The American Legion of Maryland; the Disabled American Veterans of Maryland; the Veterans of Foreign Wars of Maryland; the Maryland National Guard, speaking through Brigadier General Bowie; the Baltimore Association of Commerce; the Maryland Guard Unit of the American Legion Auxiliary; the Veterans' Employees Association; and many other local organizations expressed such real concern and interest in this matter that I have taken this small space in the RECORD to thank the committee for the manner in which they have approached my request and to further express the hope that the War Department will with expedition provide from this fund the necessary additional acreage which is most urgent at this time in the national cemetery in Baltimore.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 8 minutes on a nonpartisan subject which is of interest to the youth of America, the debunking of American history.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise to shed a tear over the passing of another priceless American tradition; nay, more, a hitherto accepted historical fact of the first magnitude. Generation after generation, the hearts of the school children of America has thrilled to the story of the old Liberty Bell dramatically proclaiming the signing of the Declaration of Independence. It personified to them the spirit of the Revolution; nay, more, it was a living thing whose voice proclaimed unto all the world and all the ages that all men are created equal. Its clarion tones in their young ears was a fitting prelude to the story of the American Revolution. It symbolized the immortal instrument whose birth it heralded. Its hallowed form in old Independence Hall at Philadelphia is a national shrine. In a nation's patriotic reverence it ranked with, if not above, the midnight ride of Paul Revere, the shot heard around the world, and the first flag of Betsy Ross. It is not too much to say that it glittered as a star of the first magnitude in the brilliant sky of American independence. The bell and the Declaration, one and inseparable, now and forever.

Then, Mr. Speaker, came the fell hand of the debunker. "The Liberty Bell did not proclaim the tidings." Thus saith the very custodian of the archives of things sacred in American history. At the bottom of a typewritten footnote, attached to page 50 of his compendium of the errors found in a cheap edition of the Constitution and the Declaration, and exhibited to the House by the genial and distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. SOL BLOOM, as the very last line in the footnote debunking the history of the Declaration, is the fateful sentence: "The Liberty Bell did not proclaim the tidings."

There is no preparation for the blow, no foreshadowing of the coming dire disclosure. Casually, the unsuspecting eye drifts down the page of trivia of detail said by the gentleman from New York to be erroneous in the booklet's history of the Declaration; then, bang! the eye that has gazed in reverence upon the most famed and cherished relic of the Revolution gets knocked right out with eight bald, unheralded, devastating, soul-sickening words: "The Liberty Bell did not proclaim the tidings."

Mr. Speaker, I have survived some severe shocks in the way of historical disillusionment, but this was the "unkindest cut of all." Never again can I look upon that venerable herald of a new day on earth, the Liberty Bell, without feeling that it is a rank imposter; and I would that I might be able here and now, once for all, to shed all the illusions of history, instead of the continuing and painful process of shedding them one at a time. The situation makes me jittery. I know not at what turn I may bring up against another dear tradition and have it exploded in my face.

Mr. Speaker, I know now there are several spots on which the first shot of the Revolution was fired. I have stood on two of them and have heard of a third. There may be others. Sufficient now for me that it was fired. The traditions of the cherry tree would appear to have been cut down, if not the tree. Whether or not George Washington could tell a lie, deponent no longer saith. Even Walter Johnson may have only temporarily rehabilitated his prowess in throwing the dollar. But it still appears that he was Commander in Chief of the Revolutionary forces and, according to the debunkers, at least the second President of the United States, so I still have some compensation for the dear lost illusions of my boyhood that George did cut down the cherry tree and could not tell a lie.

I have survived the debunking of Christopher Columbus, that colossal figure whose feet first crossed the threshold of a new world. While several centuries had elapsed at the time Columbus rediscovered America, the debunkers are assiduously discovering or inventing new facts to show that America had been discovered and lost centuries before Columbus saw the light of day.

Since I was not on the spot, I am not able to verify the now-disputed fact that General Pershing on his arrival in Paris with the American Expeditionary Forces, standing before the tomb of Lafayette, saluted and said, "Lafayette, we are here." As this tradition was a new one, sprung up in my lifetime, the shock was not so severe, and I was consoled by the apparent certainty that Pershing was there with the A. E. F. whether he said it or not.

Nor do I care much about the knocking of William Tell from his ancient and lofty pedestal. I am more or less indifferent whether he shot the apple off the head of his trustful son. His is a dim and distant figure, anyhow, so the debunkers may have that dramatic incident. Albeit the story bulked big with the schoolboys of my time, its proper place may be in the limbo of debunked illusions. Said Napoleon: "What is history but a fable agreed upon?" What, indeed?

Mr. Speaker, all these and other shattered illusions I might name—and I probably have barely touched the index of them—are in a measure preparatory and serve to convert one's mentality into a shock absorber. Every day Ripley rips things up and shows that they are not what they seem. That the process still pains me perhaps indicates that I have a credulous complex, which is rich soil in which the seed of illusions may not only fall and flourish, but twine and cling, otherwise I would be calloused and case-hardened from the many shocks heretofore sustained. As it is, I frankly confess that it was with a sinking spirit my gaze fell upon those eight fateful words: "The Liberty Bell did not proclaim the tidings." The Liberty Bell has been debunked. It is now only one more bell, and, being cracked and useless, it ought to be junked. Sic transit gloria mundi. [Applause.]

DEMOCRATIC PLEDGES KEPT

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, the 1932 Democratic Party platform has been the subject of much heated discussion on the part of that little group of plutocratic gentlemen who object to paying their just share of the taxes necessary to carry on the Government and to provide for the unemployed. With these gentlemen the holy cry has become, "Balance the Budget."

Of course, we all wish that the Budget could be balanced, and we all know that it will be just as soon as possible. But before this can be done there is another budget that must be balanced, and that is the budget of the millions of citizens who have no jobs, whose savings have been swept away by the long, hard years of the depression, whose clothing is in rags, and whose stomachs would be empty if the budgeteers had their wish. The very existence of these unfortunates is dependent on relief or work relief provided not by private business but by public money.

If the prosperous gentlemen who wail about the taxes that their grandchildren are to pay and who deplore the Government's unbalanced Budget would use their united efforts to aid the Government in placing men and women at work, the Budget could be balanced, and that quickly. But they refuse to shorten the workweek, to put on additional men and women, to add to their pay rolls. They fear, forsooth, that by so doing their profits may be decreased. In their selfish blindness they refuse to see that continued profits depend upon increased purchasing power, widely distributed through wages and salaries.

Determined to carry on in the old way, the reactionaries are blanketing the country with destructive propaganda, disseminated by a kept press more venal than the organized gangsters who until recently terrorized our cities.

This is not a partisan move. It is a clear contest of special privilege against Government for the benefit of all the people.

The charges against the administration are many and various. A popular one is that we Democrats have broken our campaign pledges as set forth in the 1932 platform. Let us see about that.

THE BUDGET WILL BE BALANCED

The basis for the charge is found in the first two planks of the 1932 platform, which advocate a drastic cut in Government expenses and a balanced Budget. We all agree with these theoretically. Every member of this administration with whom I have discussed this agrees that we shall cut expenses and balance the Budget just as soon as conditions make it possible. Every honest economist knows that in times of stress and unemployment, large Government expenditures are essential. Public works, work relief, appropriations for education, for rehabilitation, and for other activities to save our people all cost money. To pay for these out of current income in hard times is impossible. The increase of the public debt is then justified. And this causes little worry to informed people. For they know that with the rise of the income of our people, the Government revenue will rise, thus enabling the public debt to be taken care of without undue burden. Our national income had fallen from nearly $90,000,000,000 in 1929 to less than $40,000,000,000 in 1932. Under the New Deal it has gotten back to over $60,000,000,000. We have in 4 years increased the national debt by about ten billions; and we have increased the combined annual income of our people by over twenty billions. I submit that is a record to be proud of and to warrant every dollar we have spent.

EXPENDITURES SAVED OUR PEOPLE

Every man and woman in America knows that when Franklin D. Roosevelt became President he faced a crisis that demanded quick and courageous action and that made enormous public expenditures absolutely necessary. To have hesitated, to have stuck to the idea of economy, would have meant chaos and ruin for our country and our people.

A sincere effort to cut the annual recurring Federal expenditures was made in the Economy Act, supported by both parties. But this in itself did nothing to help our millions of unemployed and desperate people. Immediate and enormous appropriations for relief and work relief were necessary. We rushed this through, along with an enlightened program of public works which should have been inaugurated in 1929 or 1930.

It is to be noted that the Democratic platform advocated expenditures for relief and a program of public works. We followed the platform. And thereby we started the country on its upward trend.

With the banks failing in every part of our country, the President and the Congress took quick action. First came the moratorium; then the opening of sound banks, with the Government assurance that all funds deposited after the reopening would be safe. Every effort was made to protect the assets of the unsound banks and to expedite payments to depositors. This, my friends, was in accordance with the platform. We went a step further here by guaranteeing bank deposits, first up to $2,500 and then up to $5,000. And we stopped bank failures and saved our people from further worry on this score. All of this was in line with the platform, which the hecklers in high places are charging we disregarded.

PLATFORM FOLLOWED

The platform declared for "the divorce of the investment banking business from commercial banks" and the prevention of the use of Federal Reserve facilities for speculative purposes. The "divorce" was accomplished almost as soon as the administration came into power; the restrictions against the speculative use of Federal Reserve facilities was accomplished in the Banking Act of 1934.

Planks in our platform called for the saving of the homes and farms of the Nation from foreclosure; the conservation, development, and use of the Nation's water power in the public interest; the protection of the public investing in stocks and bonds by requiring true information as to bonuses, commissions, principal invested, and other facts; unemployment and old-age insurance in cooperation with the various States; and the strengthening and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices. Every one of these pledges has been kept.

The platform advocated the spread of employment by a substantial reduction in the hours of labor and it advocated measures to curb monopoly and prevent unfair trade practices for the protection of labor and the small-business man. In line with this we adopted the N. R. A. Thus we took the most direct and effective way. The Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional. We abandoned it.

The effective control of crop surpluses and measures to aid the farmers to receive prices in excess of cost were specifically advocated in our platform. The A. A. A. was the answer. It, too, was declared unconstitutional. But by other measures we have endeavored to keep our platform pledges to the farmers.

WE KEPT OUR PROMISES

Two measures that maddened the reactionaries who believe in the continued exploitation of the public are the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. Yet the platform specifically advocates both of these. The trouble is we meant what we said, and we proceeded to do what we promised. If we had evaded and avoided these issues, we would not now be attacked on every side by the various leagues and associations financed by the munitions and other profiteers, including the Power Trust. By doing our best to redeem our pledges, in the interest of the public, we have brought down on ourselves the concentrated attack of all the exploiters who still have a faint hope of defeating President Roosevelt. To do this they have been pouring out their dollars, all wrung from inadequately paid labor, from investors cheated out of their savings, or from the consuming public through exorbitant prices. Such a campaign chest as never was is being filled to defeat this administration and turn the Government back to Wall Street.

Yes, it is money wasted. For our people cannot be fooled into voting for the return of special privilege and free and unrestrained exploitation.

THE PLATFORM AND THE UTILITIES

Perhaps the worst barrage of concentrated fire that ever was turned on Congress was occasioned by the consideration in that long session in 1935 of the utilities or holding-company bill. Yet this measure was specifically advocated in the platform. Every known method of intimidation, threat, and unfair lobbying was tried. But we stood by the platform and passed the bill. Now the public knows, as it knew then, that the measure is entirely fair and in the interest of the people. The holding-company racket was one of the worst this country has ever known. It turned industry away from the idea of production for human consumption with a fair profit to investors, and made it a method of cheating investors and consumers so that a few "insiders" could amass their millions. I maintain that such a system, if it had been allowed to continue, would have ruined this country before another decade. For the truth is, that no business can remain honest when dishonest methods prevail. And dishonesty, exploitation, profiteering in the end destroy business and impoverish the people.

It was the Holding Company Act that definitely turned big business against the administration. All that we had done for the farmer, the home owner, for labor, for the unemployed, and for the small-business man might have been forgiven, since it had resulted in a remarkable pick-up in business. But to curb or abolish the holding company was too much for the Wall Street racketeers. Since then there has been war on the administration, with hirelings doing their bit at the command of their masters. And the cry of broken pledges has been tried, with the hope of deceiving good Democrats into thinking that the platform pledges have not been kept. The trouble is that we have kept them. And the public has benefited and approved.

I predict that President Roosevelt will be reelected by a larger majority than he had in 1932, and that a Democratic Congress will work with him to carry out the 1936 platform so thoroughly and well that this country of ours will again become the land of opportunity for old and young.

In that task I pledge my support, and I declare my intention of continuing to favor every sound progressive measure advocated in the public interest. [Applause.]

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LORD. On April 16 I addressed the Members of the House on the subject of flood control in the Northeast. The occasion of my address at that time was a newspaper article which appeared in the paper stating that when President Roosevelt was asked about flood control he stated that he was not acquainted with any special flood-control appropriation bills on Capitol Hill. At that time I stated to the House that I thought it was time someone knew about it. We have had terrible floods throughout Pennsylvania, New York, and New England, and, to my mind, it is time that some action be taken to give relief to these sections of our Nation.

According to articles appearing in the press of yesterday, no action is to be taken on flood relief at this session. President Roosevelt is said to have advised congressional leaders that he is ready for adjournment as soon as the tax bill and the appropriation measures are passed and to have called the tax and appropriation bills the "must" legislation for this session. This appears to leave the omnibus flood-control bill out of the "must" list.

According to press reports, the President's view is that flood control should be delayed pending further study to determine whether Nation-wide soil-conservation, water-power, and reclamation programs are to be incorporated in one bill to be considered some time in the future.

The people living in the Northeast who have suffered so severely in the floods of last July and November and the floods of this spring are very much distressed at hearing how lightly the President brushes away this all-important measure. While it may be all right to study and determine a Nation-wide soil-conservation program, it is inconceivable to me that the President will hold up flood control when the lives of thousands of people are in danger, where property loss has run into many millions of dollars, and where people are in constant fear of another flood that may take many lives, and where the property damage may again run into millions of dollars. A bill was passed in the Senate a few days ago providing an appropriation of $272,000,000 for flood relief in the Mississippi River Valley. No doubt that particular section needs relief. We passed a bill involving $160,000,000 for rivers and harbors, and yet the flood-control bill seems to be receiving very little consideration.

I call the attention of the Members especially who represent various States in which these flood disasters have occurred that we ought to take hold of the situation at the present time, or we are not going to get any flood relief this year.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we may receive the consideration that I believe is justly due us. In connection with the two measures that I have just mentioned, there has already been, or will be, appropriated $422,000,000, and we are not finding any fault with that, but for our particular districts there is a little over $300,000,000 needed to start this work off. A survey was ordered by the Chief Executive last year, and it has been completed in southern New York and northern Pennsylvania by the Army engineers, who have reported favorably on the project, and the work should go forward at once.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I should like to say to the gentleman that a bill has just been reported out of the Flood Control Committee for the lower Mississippi. It is the desire of a great many Members of the House to inculcate a general flood-control plan. Does not the gentleman think that the emergency should be taken care of at the present session of Congress?

Mr. LORD. In reply to the gentleman, may I say that a survey has been made and is being made in the sections of the country where this terrible loss of life and property has occurred. I believe that we should consider this work and go ahead with it immediately. If we wait to include in one bill all the rivers that need taken care of, if we should include all the soil conservation that needs conserving, if we take care of all the water power and all the reclamation projects, we will not have a bill at all. If we do have a bill, it will be so great that it will die of its own weight.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation should have immediate consideration, and I am appealing to the Members who are interested in this matter to help bring about early consideration of the legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if there are very many Members of this House who were educated in the West or Middle West prior to the turn of the century who do not cherish in their hearts a very dear recollection of the McGuffey reader. Just 100 years ago the first McGuffey reader appeared. It was circulated and used throughout the West, and even in parts of the East for about 70 years as an accepted textbook.

It was written by William H. McGuffey, professor part of the time at Miami University, in Ohio, and at the University of Virginia. It gave to our young boys and girls an insight into literature, which was a most valued gift at that time when high-school educations were very scarce and college educations almost a curiosity.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I am bringing this to the attention of the Members of the House is that this year is the centennial year being celebrated throughout the country on the one hundredth anniversary of the appearance of the McGuffey readers. I have been requested by the committee in charge to see if we cannot have a stamp issued commemorating this occasion. I regret that there are not a larger number of Members present with whom this matter could be discussed, because it would be very helpful if those men who have had contact with the McGuffey reader in their childhood would communicate with the Post Office Department in support of this request. I do not know of anything that would be more popular in the part of the country where the McGuffey reader was used than this act of courtesy, this bestowing of honor where honor is due by the Government, because it is upon education that our liberty rests. [Applause.]

NOTHING NEW IN GOVERNMENT FILMS

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, the other day the Republican minority leader [Mr. SNELL] expressed high sin-consciousness because he had heard a report that the Works Progress Administration was going to make some motion pictures. But he did not say that for 12 years under Republican administrations Government departments and bureaus have been doing exactly the same thing. In fact, the Republicans set just about all the precedents in this field, and the work they accomplished was perfectly proper from the standpoint of public records and public information.

The Republican minority leader is not so generous with the Government when it is in control of the Democratic Party. He wastes no time in assuming that the Democratic W. P. A. movies are going to be something sinister and less ethical than the Republican agencies have made in the past. He charges that there will be 50 W. P. A. movies and that a lot of them will be in technicolor, which is a highly expensive process. He infers, with due piety, that they will not be informational reels like the Republicans made, and then predicts they will be used as campaign news reels and will flash the name of the Democratic Senator or Representative who sponsored the project. I find there is no intention whatever of including Congressmen in the movies, so the statement is not correct.

Hearing all this sound and fury, I set about making a little research myself and found out a few things; most of the statement appears to be incorrect or irrelevant to any sound point.

USE OF MOVIES IN GOVERNMENT COMMON PRACTICE

I do not know how many films W. P. A. or any other agency intends to make in the future, but I feel perfectly safe in predicting that whatever movies it makes will be just as ethical as the movies that the Republicans made when they were setting all these precedents. Up to this time the Works Progress Administration has made four or five finished reels and not one of them has contained any technicolor or any political partisanship.

What I want to emphasize is that it has been common practice for years and years for Government bureaus to record their activities in this way, and the use of motion pictures has become ordinary routine.

HOOVER'S MOVIE FOR UNITED STATES STEEL

As far back as 1926 the Bureau of Mines, of the Department of Commerce, had 140 reels available for distribution. Herbert Hoover was then Secretary of the Department, and he approved of motion pictures as being a good medium for conveying ideas. Moreover, nobody in the Republican Party, nor, as far as I know, the Democratic Party, objected then.

These reels had been made in cooperation with private corporations, with the Bureau supplying the supervision. One of these was entitled "The Story of a Spark Plug." Is not that a romantic title? Another was called "The Story of a Rotary Drilled Oil Well"; and still another one was titled "An American in the Making." This was the story of an European peasant coming to this country where he became a glorified American by getting a job with United States Steel Corporation at Gary, Ind., and was supposed to have learned how carefully the souls and lives of the men were safeguarded by the Steel Trust. He went to a night school and got interested in the pretty teacher, married her, and at last reports, though this was before the Steel Trust laid off some 80 percent of its employees, was in the process of living happy ever after—no doubt making big guns and battleships so his children could get killed off. But that is not the point—the point is our Republican friends assume that when they spend Government money to glorify big business and the Steel Trust that it is just wonderful, but for the W. P. A. to record the work of ordinary men and women it is committing an outright sin.

There was no sequel to this thriller of Mr. Hoover and the United States Steel Corporation, but had there been one made in 1931, 5 years later, it probably would have shown our hero standing in the bread line with his pretty American wife, who, no doubt, quit teaching school to take care of the elaborate home of a steelworker. That would have been Mr. Hoover's third year as President, when he was still making movies and still predicting something around the corner.

HOOVER REELS 386 TIMES; THAT'S O. K.

Now, it seems to me that the Republicans all got together and promoted Mr. Secretary Hoover to be Mr. President Hoover in 1928. In fact, I am sure of this, because I remember voting for Al Smith, who ran against him, and who has now joined the Liberty League and the Republican Party. At any rate, President Hoover was a great promoter of movie reels, so in 1931, through the Department of Agriculture, there were 386 reels made which were available for distribution. Also, I am not criticizing him for it. I think that is probably one of the good things that he did. I merely mention this to show that movies are just like keeping a journal in these modern times, and to raise a fuss about the W. P. A. having movies is just about like raising a fuss because the Democrats let Mr. Farley deliver a letter when the Republicans had done the same thing through their own Postmaster General for years before.

Under Republican administrations these pictures had been made for such bureaus within that Department, as the Bureau of Animal Industry, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Plant Industry, Entomology, Biological Survey, Forest Service, and Extension Service.

In 1932, the last year that the dour countenance of Mr. Hoover graced the White House, the Department of Agriculture produced 42 new reels for distribution, covering 25 subjects. I presume that all these reels were honest efforts to inform the people. But let me read you a few of the titles out of the 1932 catalog and let you judge what the Republicans would be saying about them today if they were now being produced by the Democrats.

Here is a sample: "Routing Rodent Robbers", a movie produced by the Bureau of Biological Survey. That was all right. The Works Progress Administration now has a rat-extermination campaign under way, and that is called boondoggling. Here is another nice title, "Sago Making in Primitive New Guinea." That was produced for the Bureau of Plant Industry, and it was accompanied by sound.

REPUBLICAN POLITICIANS STARRED IN MOVIES

Since this question of politicians appearing in movies has been brought up, I want to recall that the Department of Agriculture in 1932 produced a movie entitled "Forest Fires and Conservation." The stars of this movie were Secretary Arthur M. Hyde and Congressman Scott Leavitt. Then there was a picture called "An International Study of American Roads", which not only was a talkie but was scored to the music of the United States Marine Band.

If the Works Progress Administration, which is building about one-half million miles of farm-to-market roads to take some 13,000,000 farmers out of the mud, dared to mention this fact on a movie screen, the Republicans would put their whole jigsaw "brain trust" to work proving it a diabolical political plot. In other words, criticizing the Government for making movies is simply nonsense.

This whole furore over some routine Government movies is a tempest in a teapot. We Democrats really are guilty of being rank imitators in it, for the Republicans set all the precedents and the W. P. A. is merely doing weak imitations.

But I do not think we need to feel badly about that, for lately the Republicans, after howling for 3 years about the New Deal "brain trust", have turned around and burst forth with one of their own. And the weakness of our imitation of their movie program is as nothing compared to the frailty of their brain trust alongside of ours.

REPUBLICAN TRAVELOGUES

But I do not want to get to talking about the Republican "brain trust" and forget Government movies. In 1932 even the Department of Labor, the deserted stepchild of the Hoover administration, had reels for distribution, the Childrens' Bureau had 10 and the Women's Bureau had 10. In the Interior Department the Bureau of Education had about 30, the National Park Service about 8, and the Bureau of Reclamation 34. The titles of the reclamation pictures sound like the work of the Works Progress Administration, and I can well imagine the hue and cry that would be going up now if such pictures were being produced as "The Garden of Allah" in Arizona; "Land of Burnt-Out Fires", Oregon and California; and "Valley of Opportunity", Colorado.

Of course, the War Department has had thousands of reels produced, including numerous entertaining travelogues designed to stimulate recruiting.

The Bureau of Public Health also had a number of reels made by its own unit to introduce sex instruction into high-school and college curricula.

HOPKINS WORKING INSTEAD OF TALKING

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of this House to detail the dozens of Federal departments and bureaus which have produced thousands of motion pictures for more than a decade in furtherance of their legitimate duties, but I do want to make perfectly plain how absurd it is for the Republican minority leader to launch an attack on the Works Progress Administration just because he has heard that it was going to produce some movies. I hope it does produce some movies that will tell the people of this country the good things that I have learned about the good things that it is doing. If I have any fault to find with it, it is because Harry Hopkins and his crowd have been so busy doing their enormous job that they have not taken time off to tell the people about it.

SAVING 400,000 WOMEN

I went down to the Mayflower Hotel the other day, for instance, and saw a W. P. A. exhibit. It was put there for the Women's Conference of the W. P. A., and it showed many of the useful things which about 400,000 women in distress have been doing. I saw all kinds of work superficially referred to as "boondoggling", but I say it was splendid. It showed self-respecting endeavor of human beings.

Why should not men and women displaced by machines through no fault of their own have a right to self-respecting work? It is said we shall always have from 10 to 30 percent of our population unemployed. I cannot believe it and do not like to think of it. But in any event, we certainly should not forsake from 10 to 30 percent of our people and let them become pariahs as in India.

If we continue to waste our natural resources, ignore the self-respect of our people, and even force them to lose their skill through sheer idleness, we can be sure we will end up with a large percentage of our population living like pariahs on the dole.

The main thing about "Government movies" is that they have been in effect for years, principally developed by the Republicans—they were all right then and are all right now—and as for technicolor, the W. P. A. had no intention of using it. As far as I am concerned, however, when I saw the wonderful exhibit of the W. P. A., made by the 400,000 unemployed women of America, it showed such beauty and color that I see no reason why it should not be put in technicolor. After all, sometimes even our critics make good suggestions without intending to. With all the science and knowledge that we have, why should not educational films be made by the Government, showing the work of the Government for the purpose of informing and educating the people of the United States? Are not the people supposed to be the Government?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's remarks, as I was reading the RECORD, and therefore I do not know exactly what he accused me of doing.

Mr. MAVERICK. While talking I was looking straight at the gentleman. I thought the gentleman from New York was listening.

Mr. SNELL. That is all right.

With respect to the interview I gave to the papers, I did not claim I had asked the Department for any information. I said I had heard that so-and-so was true, and with respect to the statement I made in the papers, they went to your own man, Mr. Hopkins, and showed him my statement and he practically corroborated everything I had said.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman said he had not been able "to find out"; certainly Mr. Hopkins did not "corroborate" the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. I did not say I had been to the Department or anything of that sort. I said this information had come to me, and from Mr. Hopkins' reported statement to the press it was evidently true. You do not suppose I would ask Mr. Hopkins about anything as purely political as this, do you?

Mr. MAVERICK. I deny it was "political" any more or any less than any other movies previously made by Republicans—in fact, it was a routine matter; and in the statement there was an implication that the gentleman had tried to find out some information and had been refused it. You say from Mr. Hopkins' statement it was "evidently" true. But the actual facts are otherwise.

Mr. SNELL. Well, your own man said it was so, and is not that sufficient?

Mr. MAVERICK. As to routine, of course, but as anything sinister, no. He did not say it was so about putting Democratic Congressmen and Senators on the screen.

Mr. SNELL. I said you would probably put the names of Democratic Congressmen on the screen, and you will. Read my statement and also statement from the W. P. A. If I remember correctly, they said it was being considered.

Mr. MAVERICK. He did not say that.

Mr. SNELL. The W. P. A. officials said it for him, and that is just the same.

Mr. MAVERICK. No.

Mr. SNELL. There has never been any such work done by any department of this Government in regard to moving pictures similar to what is being done at the present time. I know what I am talking about. We have always had moving pictures, and I have no objection to them, but when you use them to the extent that the present administration is doing for the purpose of reelecting the present administration I object to it, especially when you are using the people's money for it. Use Democrats' money, and I will not say anything.

Mr. MAVERICK. I want to make this statement——

Mr. SNELL. All right; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAVERICK. You talk of politics——

Mr. SNELL. It is all politics, and that is why I am calling it to the attention of the House.

Mr. MAVERICK. Of course, when the Government was controlled by the Republican Party and was spending huge sums on movies, you made no objections. You say that the movies being made now are for the purpose of reelecting the present administration. That is an assumption, to say the least—you assume that Republican movies are sacred movies with an entirely unselfish purpose, and if anybody else gets movies that the motive must be ulterior. It is possible that it may be the other way, but certainly it is unfair to accuse the Democratic Party of politics when it is done as a routine Government matter and just as it has always been done.

Mr. SNELL. It is all politics, and that is the reason I called it to the attention of the country, and I am glad to get this opportunity to call attention to it again and impress it on the minds of the Democratic Members.

Mr. MAVERICK. Was it politics when the Republicans were writing that story about some intelligent immigrant working for the Steel Trust?

Mr. SNELL. I have no objection to that or no one else has.

Mr. MAVERICK. Of course. That was when the Republicans were in power. You assume that everything they did was right. Hundreds more reels were made by the Republican Party; the W. P. A. has done very few.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know who was in power, and I have no objection to that. I do not know what you are referring to, but it was probably some picture advertising advantages of this country or work in steel mills. General pictures of this kind have always been used, but I maintain that no administration has gone into the picture business or other propaganda for purely political purposes equal to the present one, and you and everyone else know it. I am surprised that anyone would defend these activities of the administration. I claim it is a misuse of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. MAVERICK. Oh, "misuse of taxpayers' money" is just a phrase. I want to make it plain that movies are movies—and the Republicans did it, and now the Democrats are doing it. What of it? Mr. Hoover got out 140 of these movies, and the Department of Agriculture got out hundreds of them, and this has been true throughout the different administrations, and there has been no intimation that these movies will be used for political purposes.

Mr. SNELL. No one has ever objected to the general proposition of using them for general educational purposes, insofar as the departments are concerned, but the present administration is using them purely for political purposes, and I make that charge, and if they have reduced the expected 50 to 3, it is probably because I called attention to it.

Mr. MAVERICK. There can be no reduction of 50 to 3, since no set number was contemplated. "Fifty", as a number, was assumed by the gentleman, and I hope the W. P. A. gets out a sufficient number of reels to tell the story of its fine work.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman have 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The principal issue between the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Texas seems to be whether there were 58 or 3 of these films. Is it not possible that they were reduced from 50 to 3 by what the gentleman from New York said?

Mr. SNELL. That may be so. I had an opportunity to get this information, and thought it was authentic and used it. It evidently was or you would not now be so disturbed about it and want to explain it.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman suspected it, and now he "thinks" it is authentic.

Mr. SNELL. No; I did not suspect it; I got it and I used it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAVERICK. And now let me refer to the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON], who says the principal issue is the number of the movies. I want to repeat that I am merely bringing out the point that the making of movies depicting Government activities is a routine matter and is an ordinary process in modern times. The minority leader has criticized the use of movies by the Government merely because the Government happens to be in the control of the Democratic Party, even though the Government is doing it in a routine way just as it did when the Republicans were in the saddle.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of the Members of the House a matter which I believe under our present condition is worthy of consideration. I appreciate that what I am about to suggest will evoke criticism. But the time is at hand when the whole people must join in a national council considering ways and means for the solution of our problems. No one because of fear of criticism should withhold from public consideration any maturely considered suggestion which might help—I say, might help.

Since the beginning of the Government, it has been the policy of the Government to offer as an inducement for invention a monopoly for a fixed period of the right to use. During the past few decades there has been a tremendous increase in what is known as labor-saving devices. A Member of the House has just been telling me that in his business, weaving cloth, during the past 10 years the looms which one person operates has increased from 2 to 10. This sort of thing has been going on everywhere.

This is a practical matter. Government is a practical thing. With the number of unemployed which now obtain in this country, is it not a thing worthy of our consideration whether the Government should not, for the present, discontinue granting patents for labor-saving devices; discontinue offering the inducement of a monopoly of 17 years in the right to use to anyone who will invent a machine that will put more people out of work?

That is a practical proposition.

Would anybody with good, plain, practical common sense who is feeding, clothing, and housing, directly or indirectly, many idle people, continue to offer the tremendous incentive the Government is now offering to anyone who will devise a plan to add to that number of people that have to be cared for? If it were a mere matter of adding to those who are being cared for, it would not be so important.

But we know, as a matter of fact, the tremendous moral, economic, all sorts of waste that results from forcing an honest man anxious and willing to do a part of the necessary work of the world to go home night after night without any prospect of an opportunity by honest labor to feed his family. I am not offering the suggestion as a substitute for adjustment of hours of labor and of a proper distribution of benefits from labor-saving devices so as to increase the average purchasing power. We have stirring times ahead of us. What we need is to preserve as far as possible a normal-thinking, normal-acting, stanch people to work out these problems. Shifting people from the employed to the unemployed class operates against that greatest of all public needs just now. The person who in our present situation invents a labor-saving device adding to unemployment performs no valuable public service and ought not to receive a valuable public reward. That is the point I suggest for consideration as an emergency policy.

This is a matter that has not just occurred to me at the moment. I have been thinking about this a good while. I do not believe that I am disposed to go off half-cocked about a thing of this sort. On January 4, 1932, I wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Patents as follows:

JANUARY 4, 1932.

Hon. WILLIAM I. SIROVICH,
Chairman, Committee on Patents,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I beg to direct the consideration of your committee to the possible advisability under our circumstances of suspending, for the present, patents for labor-saving devices.

I have not thought the matter through all of its ramifications, but sufficiently to feel warranted in calling it to your serious consideration, not as a major factor but as one of considerable importance in itself and still more important from the principle which is involved.

In the first place, a patent is not a thing which anyone can claim as a matter of right.

It is a monopoly of the right to use, granted by the Government as an inducement to devise novel things for the public benefit.

We have accepted without question that anyone who invents a labor-saving device is a public benefactor, and have accepted the advantages of these devices without accepting any of the corresponding and paralleling responsibilities and duties.

As a result we have developed a lop-sided progress.

Only as the buying power of the average person is increased so that he can buy something, to him new, something created by the person whose job has been taken by a machine, and as hours of labor are readjusted and the benefits of such inventions distributed, is it safe to increase labor-saving devices, or at least wise, as a matter of public policy, for the Government to offer persons a special inducement to invent them?

Farmers who learn to cultivate by a better method are not given patents. Physicians who develop new and better methods of treating diseases are not given monopolies in the method of treatment.

Certainly it is far better to have two persons working, each earning his own living, than to have one person with a machine do the work formerly done by the two, and the person supplanted, unable to get any other work, and an object of charity. It is still worse under these conditions for one person to do the work of three.

To increase machine production per man without increasing per man power to buy does not tend toward a healthy economic or industrial condition. To increase production and at the same time decrease the number of those able to buy is tragically unsound. The person supplanted by the machine and left without a job cannot purchase. There is nothing more hurtful economically and morally or more dangerous to the State than to have people ready, willing, and able to work for an honest living but deprived of the opportunity.

The corresponding, and in nature, paralleling line of true progress is too far behind. Had we not better wait with the one, or at least withdraw the artificial stimulus given by the Government, until the other line is brought up?

With millions of people idle who are willing to work, as a matter of practical common sense it seems to me an absurd thing for the Government to continue to offer this inducement to persons who will devise methods for taking away jobs of persons now engaged, who will have to be supported either by private charity or from the Public Treasury.

Very respectfully,

HATTON W. SUMNERS.

I do not suggest the consideration of the permanent abandonment of the policy of granting patents to labor-saving devices.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman can put into effect something that will regulate labor-saving devices for a short time, he will put every one of the people now on the dole back into industry and give them a job. I hope that he can devise some means by which he can do that in order that we may compel industry to employ these people. The matter should be put under the Department of Labor. If the gentleman can accomplish this, I believe he will do great good for the country, as much as any man can possibly do. I think the gentleman is on the right track.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not trying to make a speech. This is a matter which I want you gentlemen here to think about. If I have time this afternoon, I shall revise these remarks.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not the gentleman believe that a progressive reduction in the hours of labor with apportionment to the development of labor-saving devices would be a better solution and would be really in the best interest of the people? In other words, if we have labor-saving devices, give labor the benefit of them rather than capital.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am talking now about one thing—withdrawing for the present this inducement now being offered by the Government to anyone who will invent a machine which will take an honest man's job away from him and send him into the ranks of the millions of unemployed. The suggestion I make is not involved with or tied up in any way with any of these suggestions. It is not an alternative proposition in any sense. We have been taking on credit these inventions. We have reached the time of payment. Nature charges every people for everything they get. We have been taking without paying, without thinking and effort, all this application of steam and electricity and gasoline, taking them on credit and have not paid. We have reached the paying time. Nature has a time when a balance sheet must be struck and people have to pay, and this is one of the settling days. That is what has made this peculiar and interesting condition in the history of the economic life of the world today. We have been going faster, as my friend has indicated, in the development of labor-saving devices than we have been progressing in the distribution of the benefits of labor-saving devices, in the adjustment of hours of labor, and all the other things. If we are oversupplied with unemployed and if unemployment with its associated dependents upon private or public charity in any of the forms is hurtful to a people, how can it be possible that the public interest can be promoted now by continuing to offer a governmental reward to whomever will devise a machine which will increase unemployment and reduce the number of self-respecting citizens now doing a part of the necessary work of the world and drive them into the ranks of the millions of unemployed? To the individual and to the Government there is no waste, no loss, so great as that which results from that change in status. If the Government already has more than enough unemployed on its hands, why continue to bid for more? Fundamentally no governmental policy can be wise which sacrifices the excellency of the people for the excellency of its machinery.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, within the past 15 years there has been a rapid growth of cooperative business in Minnesota. We have today more cooperatives, both producer and consumer, than any other State in the Union. We have 1,318 producer cooperatives, or cooperative marketing associations, and 2,866 consumer cooperative societies in Minnesota. The producer cooperatives do an annual business of $97,395,000; the consumer cooperatives do a business of $27,907,983. We have a total membership of 144,000 in our producer cooperatives and a total membership of 531,180 in our consumer cooperatives in Minnesota.

There are, in the entire United States, about 9,000 consumer societies, with a membership of about 2,000,000. Minnesota, with nearly one-third of the total consumer cooperatives in the country, is far ahead of her sister States in the cooperative movement. This movement has grown up quietly and successfully and has continued to grow right through the depression while business operated for profit failed. In 1935 only one company, the Standard Oil, did a larger percentage of Minnesota's light petroleum products business. Our State government in Minnesota encourages the growth of cooperatives.

COOPERATIVES WILL CONTINUE TO EXPAND

The great service being performed by Minnesota cooperatives, and by the forward-looking people who are helping to build these organizations is worthy of attention. Citizens of other States can look to Minnesota for guidance in their efforts to build cooperatives. The philosophy of cooperation is in keeping with the American ideal of government of, by, and for the people.

Through cooperative study groups in Minnesota, individuals learn that their interests are best served through cooperative action. This is especially true in the consumers' cooperative movement. Every one of us is a consumer. As consumers we affiliate ourselves with other consumers organized for the purpose of serving themselves with the necessities of life, paying back to themselves any profits that accrue. We recognize the fact in Minnesota that our problem is to give information to our people about the benefits of cooperation. When people join cooperative societies because they understand the principles and benefits of cooperation, our movement rests on solid ground and will continue to expand.

HISTORY, GROWTH, AND BENEFITS OF COOPERATIVES

With these ideas in mind, I am presenting today information about the history, growth, and benefits of cooperatives. Inquiries from citizens of Minnesota and other States will be welcome. The Federal Government is conducting a survey of cooperatives in Minnesota, and I am indebted to those who are conducting this survey for the data included in my remarks. The data was collected under the direction of Russel K. Lewis, of Minneapolis, and I am indebted to Mr. Lewis, Mauritz Seashore, Clyde Buell, and others for much of the information I am presenting today. This information deals with the principles of cooperation, cooperative stores, and cooperative oil associations in Minnesota, farm supply cooperatives, credit unions, mutual and cooperative insurance, cooperative telephone, electric power, trucking, burial associations, and other miscellaneous cooperatives in Minnesota.

TYPES OF COOPERATION—PRODUCER AND CONSUMER

Almost everyone has heard of cooperation in connection with business enterprise, but there is a hazy confusion as to what cooperation really is. There is a difference between "cooperation" in the broad, nontechnical sense, and "cooperation" as a means of marketing and purchasing goods and services. Cooperation, in the economic sense, is a system for carrying on business in the interest of all those who participate in the cooperative movement. If the interests of all parties in the business are respected, there is no exploitation. Without exploitation, there can be no excessive concentration of wealth and power in the hands of a few. Cooperation is the working together of individuals and groups as producers or consumers for their common interests to avoid exploitation.

PRODUCER AND CONSUMER COOPERATIVES COMPARED

There is likely to be some confusion in the minds of many people as to the difference between farm-marketing cooperatives, called "producers' cooperatives" and "consumers' cooperatives." The confusion arises because some of the methods of both are essentially alike.

	Consumer	Producer
Membership	Any consumer (unlimited).	By occupation (limited).
Vote (control)	By person.	By person.
Returns on capital	Limited.	Limited.
Price	Market.	Pool price or market.
Profits	To consumers.	To patron producers.
Organization	Federations.	Federations.
Methods	Mostly education.	Promotion, and education.
Ultimate purpose	To change economic system to production for service.	To get highest possible returns for labor and products.

Most of the differences are only a matter of degree. However, they differ in one fundamental, and that is the ultimate purpose. The producer cooperative merely aims to eliminate exploitation by assuring full price for labor and products to the actual producer in the manner of labor unions. The consumer cooperatives, on the other hand, have in mind a production for service economic system—with all respect for labor and producers, of course—approached from the use end; that is, the consumer end. When properly understood, the two are not antagonistic; they dovetail together into one great system.

PRODUCERS' COOPERATIVES

In this country cooperation has been practiced mostly by producers, especially farm producers. Producers' cooperatives are also known as cooperative marketing associations. They enable the farmer to bargain collectively for the sale of his products, in which is incorporated his labor power. They serve the farmer as labor unions serve labor; they protect his interest as a producer. The average farmer receives most of his income from his labor rather than from his investment; he is therefore in the same position as the industrial worker, who finds it necessary to associate himself with his fellow workers to bargain collectively for the sale of his labor power. Agricultural cooperative marketing associations are necessary in the life of the farmer in order to enable him to maintain a decent standard of living.

VOLUME OF PRODUCER COOPERATIVES IN MINNESOTA

Today we have in Minnesota 1,318 producer cooperatives, with 114,000 members, doing an annual business of $97,395,000.

Producer cooperatives in Minnesota

	Number	Members	Annual business
Creameries	638	80,768	$44,386,000
Cheese factories	36	1,008	1,000,000
Fluid milk	6	9,000	3,186,000
Fruits and vegetables	25	4,000	1,000,000
Grain	265	41,605	17,000,000
Livestock	325	66,625	22,000,000
Poultry and eggs	14	770	3,000,000
Wool	5	6,600	3,400,000
Fish	2	365	160,000
Miscellaneous	2		2,265,000
Grand total	1,318	144,000	97,395,000

It is very doubtful if these farmers would have been able to receive more than $97,000,000 for the products they marketed had they not been associated together for this purpose. In our existing economic society it is an absolute necessity that farmers and workers organize in self-protection against being exploited; individually they possess little or no power.

CONSUMER COOPERATIVES

Farmers early began to realize that the same cooperative principles they applied to marketing their products could also be applied to purchasing their supplies. Many cooperative marketing associations—producers' cooperatives—began to purchase fertilizer, seed, feed, and so forth. As time went on, purely consumers' cooperatives were organized and carried on with great success, and today we have 2,866 consumer cooperative societies with a membership of 531,180 and an annual business of $27,907,983.

WE ARE ALL CONSUMERS

The consumer cooperative idea is based on the fact that all people are consumers. Whatever else we are, we are consumers. Regardless of how each obtains money to exchange for consumable goods and services, the ultimate purpose is the same, to consume. Here we have a basic economic function upon which all people can unite, regardless of race, color, creed, nationality, political beliefs, or occupation.

Mutual aid is more natural to people than mutual destruction. It is reasonable and practical to organize as a society of cooperating consumers. With the exception of the information just given concerning producer cooperatives, my remarks today are confined to the consumers' cooperative movement.

It all started very humbly back in 1844, in Rochdale, England, when 28 weavers formed a cooperative store, styled themselves the Equitable Pioneers, and formulated a set of business principles to regulate their society. These have since come to be called the Rochdale principles, upon which most successful consumers' cooperatives are based.

ROCHDALE PRINCIPLES

These principles, the "cooperators' constitution", are variously stated by different people, but essentially they are as follows:

(1) Unlimited; voluntary membership: Any person desiring to cooperate is welcome to join, irrespective of race, color, creed, nationality, occupation, or any other test. A nonmember patron automatically becomes a member after his patronage dividend amounts to one share of stock. This principle is in line with the fact that we are all consumers.

(2) Democratic control; one member, one vote; no proxy voting: In other words, people, not dollars, control the business. No person can gain control by ownership of stock or collecting proxy votes. All people are equal. The books are always open for examination.

(3) Limited return on capital: This is to discourage investors and speculators. What the co-op primarily wants is patrons, and only incidentally money. In Minnesota the legal limit is 6 percent, if earned in the current year. The amount of stock an individual can hold is $1,000 by law, but is usually set less in the bylaws. Shares are of a low par value, $5 to $25.

(4) Sell at market prices: Co-ops are not price cutters. This prevents price wars and also allows an income to the business for reserves and expansion.

(5) Overcharge (profits) returned on basis of patronage: After all expenses are met, including interest charges, and reserves set aside the rest must be returned to the patrons, who made the profits possible in the first instance. This is the distinctive Rochdale feature; the other principles are designed to make this one effective.

(6) Cash, no credit: This reduces overhead and makes operation possible with small capital. It is just, in that no consumer is forced to carry another. Co-ops in the United States find difficulty in observing this rule, due to long-established credit habits.

(7) Federation for wholesaling and production: Consumers make additional savings and quality improvements by uniting their retail organizations for purposes of wholesaling and production.

(8) Fixed appropriations for education: The movement depends on understanding. The members run the business, so they must understand the principles on which it is based. In Minnesota a sum up to 5 percent of net income may be set aside for this purpose.

THE POWER OF ORGANIZED CONSUMERS

Control of the economic system by consumers is merely the reestablishing of a direct, simple production-for-use system such as our ancestors had before the means of production were exploited for profit.

Consumers, by giving or withholding patronage, have the power to build or destroy any business. They have the power, when organized, of controlling or taking over any business. When they have control they can operate it in their own interest. That is the purpose of cooperation. Consumers are not aware of the tremendous power they hold. When organized they control the purse strings, the power of life and death over business.

COOPERATION IN EUROPE—ENGLAND

Several European countries have shown us the way. England, where successful consumer cooperation began in 1844, now has 7,000,000 consumers organized into over a thousand cooperative societies, doing an annual business of over $1,000,000,000. The English co-ops do 12.7 percent of the entire retail trade; and of the food, clothing, and furniture retailing, almost half. The English Cooperative Wholesale Society is the largest wholesaler in the world. It operates 150 factories to supply its commodities, and even a tea plantation in Ceylon of 35,000 acres. The protection which the English co-ops give English consumers is incalculable. Their influence spreads far beyond the co-ops themselves. Exploitation in the distribution systems and in many lines of industry has been minimized by the organized consumers.

SWEDEN LEADS THE WAY

Sweden has been even more conspicuously successful with consumers' cooperation than England. The Swedes took up the movement about 40 years ago from the retail end, and after a decade or two of foundation building they came out with a "trust busting" program that has shown to the entire world the power consumers can wield if they but organize.

Today there are 635 consumers' cooperative societies in Sweden, with a family membership of 550,675, which is about a third of all households. The co-ops do over 20 percent of the retail and wholesale trade and do 10 percent of all manufacturing in the country. They have broken the margarine, flour, light-bulb, rubber, and other trusts that exploited the people by simply going into the business and operating at cost or, more specifically, on Rochdale principles.

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATIVE ALLIANCE

Other countries have successful consumer movements, notably Denmark, Finland, and, with reservations, Russia. France, Germany, and Italy, as well as smaller countries, have consumer movements but not so outstanding as some of the others. In 1935, 40 countries were represented by the International Cooperative Alliance, with 300,000 societies and a total membership of 100,000,000 consumers. The consumers' co-ops of the world had a turn-over of about $20,000,000,000 in 1934.

COOPERATIVE LAW OF MINNESOTA

The essential features of these Rochdale principles are codified in the Minnesota cooperative law of 1923 and subsequent amendments. The experience of almost a hundred years has demonstrated that Rochdale cooperatives are eminently just to all people and, therefore, successful. Many cooperatives deviate in some respects from these principles.

COOPERATIVE AND CORPORATION COMPARED

Cooperation is a method of business very different from the corporation. Here are seven cardinal features of business organization and operation as these features exist in cooperative- as contrasted with corporation-controlled business.

	Cooperative	Corporation
Membership	Unlimited	Limited.
Vote (control)	By persons	By stock.
Return on capital	Limited (6-8 percent)	Unlimited.
Price	Market	Market.
Profits	To patrons	To stockholders.
Organization	Federations	Trusts.
Method	Mostly education	Promotion and advertising.

A corporation is a business owned and controlled usually by a few investors, operated in the interest of themselves, carried on by methods that bring in the maximum profits. It is autocratic, and sometimes antisocial. On the other hand, cooperatives are owned and controlled by many people, operated in the interest of the consumers themselves, carried on by methods which have as their aim the greatest good to the greatest number. They are democratic and social.

BENEFITS OF COOPERATION

The whole purpose of consumers' cooperatives is to provide material and cultural benefits to the cooperators and society in general.

The material benefits are several. The most important is that consumers get their supplies and services at cost. This increases consumer purchasing power. Or stated another way, it increases a worker's real income, in that he, as a consumer, gets more goods for the same amount of money. This increase in purchasing power the cooperatives accomplished in three ways: Directly by patronage dividends; indirectly by "yardstick" control over profiteering in ordinary profit business, lowering the price to the entire community; and thirdly, by the greater efficiency possible in a business system that serves a known market and is exempt from some of the expensive overhead carried by highly competitive business. Consumers are protected as to quality, because in reality they are on both sides of the counter. This quality protection amounts to an increase in purchasing power.

Another material benefit to society is the effect cooperatives have in helping to prevent depressions by preventing concentration of purchasing power. This the co-ops do by producing and distributing at cost, eliminating profits; and by paying a high average wage to workers so that they may buy back the products they produce and prevent accumulation of a surplus. The principle is, raise low wages and reduce high salaries in executive divisions.

CULTURAL VALUES OF COOPERATION

By no means less important are the cultural values of cooperation. It is well known what a highly competitive capitalistic system does to people. The ethics of uncontrolled capitalism are those of the jungle. The system forces people to hope for, work for, and ever pray for the economic destruction of competitors, their own neighbors. Catastrophe is a consummation devoutly to be wished, because it is "good for business." Fire, flood, and war furnish temporary business booms. That is how the economic world is organized at present. Hypocrisy, sham, deceit, crime, and immorality are rampant in the land. They are all a part of our everyday business activity.

THE ETHICS OF COOPERATION

Cooperation based on mutual aid is something quite different. In this system everyone shares in good fortune; and everybody loses by destruction and sabotage, because there is no profit in it for anybody. The only opponents are the elements of nature—scarcity—not man.

Cooperators and their employees derive the satisfactions inherent in teamwork. They all have one purpose. In no other business are employees given an opportunity to examine the books and take part in the affairs as they do in co-ops. Cooperators and employees alike become part of an integrated movement, ideal enough for the dreamer and reformer, and at the same time eminently practical, a rare combination.

CONSUMERS' COOPERATION IN UNITED STATES

As early as the forties, buying clubs had sprung up in New England for service to consumers. They were short-lived, and nothing of consequence appeared on the scene until after the Civil War, when the Grangers, a farmers' organization, swept the country and established cooperatives, both producer and consumer, from the seventies until the nineties.

The Sovereigns of Industry and the Knights of Labor developed cooperatives about the same time. In the eighties the Farmers' Alliance also tried consumers' cooperation. Although they all left their mark on the movements, only very scattered remnants are left of these crusades. Some cooperators believe that their failure was due to violation of Rochdale principles, the class nature of the movement, and inadequate laws. Laws were almost universally nonconducive to cooperation until the last 15 years. Even a year or so ago only 32 States had special cooperative laws.

FINNS COOPERATIVE LEADERS

During the latter part of the nineteenth century there appeared in America a sturdy group of real torch bearers of Rochdale cooperation. They had learned the business in their homeland, Finland, and now transplanted it to their new home in northern Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Massachusetts, and other States. Through all the comings and goings of consumers' cooperatives during the last few decades, the Finns have kept the light.

At present there are estimated to be about 9,000 consumer societies in the United States, with a membership of about 2,000,000, doing an annual business of $365,000,000, a million dollars a day.

Until 1915 the budding movement had no central organization. Since then, the Cooperative League of United States of America, with Dr. J. P. Warbasse, the American godfather of Consumers' Cooperation, as president, has served as educational coordinator. Headquarters are at 167 West Twelfth Street, New York City. The league publishes a monthly, Consumers' Cooperation, and is also the American connection with the International Cooperative Alliance.

TYPES OF COOPERATIVE ENTERPRISE—FIRST: COOPERATIVE STORES

The store is the business institution that has the most frequent and intimate connection with the consumer. It was, therefore, quite natural that the store was the first business entered into by the Rochdale Pioneers. It came closest to their lives, and it was through the store that they were badly exploited by the business world, next only to their exploitation by the mill owners.

EARLY ENGLISH CO-OP STORES

The consumers' cooperative movement started in Rochdale, England, in 1844. This was a period of turbulence in the economic and social life of those countries where the industrial revolution was getting under way. Little or no restraint was exercised by the government or other social forces over the profit-hungry industrialists engaged in a life and death struggle for business existence in a highly competitive system. Numerous reform movements sprang up as they always do under economic pressure. Among these were political solutions, notably the Chartist movement, whose votaries believed that the peoples' trouble would all be solved if they but had universal suffrage.

PRICE WITHOUT PROFIT

Others, notably Robert Owen, a wealthy manufacturer with a social viewpoint, advocated an economic system of "price without profit."

It remained for a Dr. King, also a man of wealth, to launch a real frontal attack on "poverty, disease, and crime." He attacked economic and social problems together, believing they were one. To accomplish this he started cooperatives, about 300 stores, knowing that if people were to help themselves, they must have economic power. And, in his words, "knowledge and union are power."

Although these stores stumbled over the Chartist movement and failed, Dr. King's work led up to the success of Rochdale, already mentioned. It was in this way that the consumers' cooperative movement, with its thousands of societies in practically every country, with over a hundred million members, started as a store movement. It all arose out of an economic need—need for a solution to everyday economic problems.

NECESSITY BRINGS REFORM

It cannot be stressed too strongly that economic institutions and movements, as well as political programs, are motivated to a considerable extent by the facts of stern necessity. People do not take action in the economic world just for the fun of it. They expect better conditions to result from their actions, either to themselves or to others. Always something must stimulate the action. It is this cause-and-effect relation which makes the progress of the cooperative movement halting, jerky, and even sporadic, although a successful movement when viewed as a whole. The economic pressure is not always equal or compelling.

COOPERATIVE-STORE HISTORY IN UNITED STATES

Especially is this halting progress true of our own country. The United States has been a pioneers' and adventurers' paradise during most of its history. New territory, cheap land, unstable communities with a fluctuating population were not conducive to organized cooperation on a permanent, integrated basis. Such cooperation as exists was informal, such as house-raising, husking-bees, quilting-bees, and other forms of shared work. Also, pooling of purchasing orders was common in order to save neighbors the necessity of all going long distances for supplies. Buying clubs were organized quite early, in New England, but nothing permanent resulted from such ventures. It remained for the agrarian Middle West to pioneer organized consumer cooperation in America, beginning during the hectic reconstruction days following the Civil War.

THE FIRST GRANGE ORGANIZED IN ST. PAUL IN 1868

The Grange, officially the Patrons of Husbandry, established cooperative stores as a part of its program. The Grange is of special interest to Minnesotans because the first grange was organized in St. Paul in 1868. The State grange came the next year, followed by Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, and other States, until the grange movement was a crusading farmers' "uprising" that proposed to eliminate all middlemen, market its own products, and manufacture and distribute its own supplies.

High taxes, mortgaged farms, high prices on supplies, railroad swindles and rebates, together with low prices for farm products, all motivated the Grange. It lived through the panic of 1873 but became less active after that crisis. Isolated grain elevators and a few stores remain from the Grange. The State of Washington has a number, some of more recent origin. We have four of these stores still going in Minnesota.

The grangers set up their own stores throughout the Middle West especially, making collective-bargaining agreements with local merchants. There were no cooperative laws in those days, so the stores were organized as ordinary corporations, with stock-share control.

GRANGE CENTRAL WHOLESALES

Attempts were made by the early grangers to establish central wholesales. The Ohio Grange at one time had one at Cincinnati. It sold goods at cost instead of at market prices according to the Rochdale principle. Ohio tried again, this time with a patronage-dividend feature, but no provision for reserves. The control also was vested in the stock, in violation of another Rochdale principle. It lasted a couple of years and then was gone. A wholesale sponsored by the Grange now operates out of Seattle, Wash., called the Grange Cooperative Wholesale. It is successful.

SOVEREIGNS OF INDUSTRY

The unrest of the post Civil War period affected the cities as well as the country, and industrial organizations similar to the Grange sprang up to meet the issues. One of these, the Sovereigns of Industry, also a secret order like the Grange, set up stores throughout the East from 1874–79. One hundred and one of the three hundred and ten councils (three in Minnesota) had consumers' cooperatives of some sort. Although the leaders advised sound Rochdale rules, about half of the 100 worked under trading agreements with local dealers and 26 of the others sold at cost, contrary to Rochdale principles. Although they had a high purpose, the procedure followed may have contributed to their defeat.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR

The Knights of Labor in the eighties set up stores in the industrial East as a source of income for the organization. They merely gave a discount to members in good standing. In other words, it was not really a consumers' movement, but rather a method for supporting the parent organization. At least two organizations sponsoring consumers' cooperation are today continuing this practice in a modified degree.

FARMERS' ALLIANCE

During the eighties also another farm organization, the Farmers' Alliance, set up consumers' supply cooperatives, especially in the South. Their experience was similar to that of the Grange.

Up till the nineties most cooperatives, both producers' and consumers' were generally considered failures. About that time fortune changed, and to this day cooperatives in the United States have made progress.

FARMERS' UNION COOPERATIVES

In 1902 the Farmers' Union started to set up stores as well as other cooperatives. This organization is still in the business in the Middle West, and has a fine, new wholesale plant at Omaha, called the Farmers' Union State Exchange. It deals in other things besides store supplies, petroleum, and machinery and its sales for 1934 amounted to over $2,000,000. It is the oldest of the four wholesales supplying cooperative stores. The Farmers' Union stores and wholesales serve a purpose in the movement, especially in making the American farmer consumer conscious.

SOCIETY OF EQUITY

The Society of Equity, another farm organization of the Middle West, set up stores as part of its program, although it primarily sponsored grain elevators. It is now out of the picture. The Farmers' Equity Union of 1917 met a similar fate.

FARM BUREAU COOPERATIVES

In 1911 the Farm Bureau was established. It now has organizations in 45 States, and 17 of these have cooperative service companies sponsored by the Farm Bureau Federations. The cooperative phase of the Bureau is a later development, Indiana starting first and Illinois next. The Ohio Farm Bureau also has a strong consumer movement, chiefly farm supply, associated with it. So far, stores have not been developed by the Farm Bureau, but they are directly in line with their program of expansion. Indiana and Ohio have recently declared themselves in favor of city consumers' co-ops, that is, stores.

The other historical developments of the store movement are so closely associated with the movement in Minnesota that I will take them up in that connection. In general, it can be said that our cooperative store movement has lagged behind that of other countries. Up until recently the laws were unfavorable. Only about 32 States now have general cooperative laws. Also, in this country the existing noncooperative stores are highly efficient. Exploitation at the retail end is comparatively small in the store business, consequently the need is not so apparent, and the immediate savings to the cooperator are small. It takes real cooperators to make a store successful in our country. The development has not been rapid.

PRESENT EXTENT OF STORE COOPERATIVE DEVELOPMENT

At present, however, there are about 500 store societies in the United States, with a membership of about a hundred thousand families. There are a few successful city stores, but most are in small towns. Ninety percent of the membership is made up of farmers.

MINNESOTA LEADS

The complete figures are not available for showing the distribution among the States, but in general those in the upper Mississippi Valley lead all the rest. Minnesota leads with 103, followed by Wisconsin, Michigan, and Nebraska. North Dakota and Iowa are somewhat lower. Massachusetts has a good showing in the East, followed by some of the other New England States. On the west coast, Washington leads with about as many as North Dakota, followed by Oregon, and then California. Our figures show that 12 States, mostly in the South have none. Other States have a few here and there.

COOPERATIVE LEAGUE, COORDINATING AGENCY

Up till 1915, stores as well as other cooperatives lacked a coordinating agency. Since then the Cooperative League of the United States of America has served in this capacity. Also four wholesale societies are active in promoting and servicing some of the stores, probably a fourth of the total.

The Central Cooperative Wholesale, Superior, Wis., is the outstanding one. The Farmers' Union State Exchange, Omaha, is the oldest. There are two others, the Grange Cooperative Wholesale, Seattle, also the Eastern Cooperative Wholesale, of New York City. Two others have started during 1935, one in connection with the Consumers' Cooperative Wholesale Association of North Kansas City, Mo., a large oil wholesale; and the other a brokerage business through the Central States Cooperative League, Chicago, which is called the Central States Cooperative Wholesale.

THE STORE MOVEMENT IN MINNESOTA

There are in Minnesota today 103 store societies which are more or less cooperative. Taking the State as a whole, with its 87 counties, this is an average of one and one-fourth per county. Forty-two counties, almost half, have no cooperative store society; 20 have only 1, 16 have 2, 5 have 3, and the remaining counties have 4, 5, 6, and 23 societies, respectively. The latter is St. Louis County, a large county extending north from Duluth. Carlton County, just west of Duluth, is second in number of societies. In all, there are 15 branch stores operated by these societies, making, all told, 118 cooperative retail outlets in the State. About half of these are within a hundred miles of Duluth. The rest are scattered rather evenly through the open farm country of the south and west.

TWO CO-OP STORE SOCIETIES IN MINNEAPOLIS

The stores are mostly in smaller towns, and even crossroads. But Duluth has two societies, though small; Minneapolis has two, both started in 1935; and several of the larger towns, such as Hibbing, Virginia, Cloquet, have fine cooperative stores. Of the 89 societies that answered a questionnaire as to proportion between farmer and town membership, 69 said that their membership was two-thirds or more farmers; 11 said half farmer and half city; and 9 stated that their membership was two-thirds or more urban. The societies are predominently farmer; the areas in which they operate are largely agricultural. In this respect the movement in Minnesota differs from that of England and Sweden, where the cooperative movement started and has had its best development in the cities.

AFFILIATED AND INDEPENDENT TYPES

The societies can be conveniently divided into two categories: Affiliated and independent. The independents are the larger group, with 65 of the 103 stores, or 63 percent of the total. Four of these, however, are associated with a central—the Central Cooperative Wholesale—in a small way. These independents aim to effect a small saving to the consumer at the retail end. They have not gained control of the wholesaling and production of consumer goods.

The highest percentage of failure is among these nonfederated societies. In general they are located in the southern and western halves of the State, away from the chief centralizing organization in this territory, the Central Cooperative Wholesale, of Superior, Wis. This makes it almost impossible to deal with the C. C. W., as they are outside its trade area. There is need for a central wholesale or branch in the Twin City trade territory to coordinate the co-ops in the southern half of the State.

AFFILIATED STORES

The more truly cooperative store societies are those affiliated with the central organizations for buying, education, and promotion. Of the 103 in the State, 38 are federated into two separate central organizations, both of them with headquarters at Superior, Wis. As Superior is just across the State line from Duluth, these centrals are an integral part of the Minnesota movement. The two centrals were together up to 1929, when internal dissension arose, and a small group of stores withdrew and formed a separate central wholesale called the "Workers' and Farmers' Cooperative Unity Alliance." It has remained a small organization with four societies in Minnesota and a few in Wisconsin. One society it took over has since died for lack of patronage.

Thirty-four of the cooperative store societies in Minnesota belong to the larger organization, the Central Cooperative Wholesale. About 100 stores in this State, Wisconsin, and Michigan, own and operate the central on a purely cooperative basis. Those in Minnesota are practically all located within a hundred miles of Superior and are predominantly made up of Finnish people. They are the purest cooperative stores in our State.

HISTORY OF COOPERATIVE STORES IN MINNESOTA

The Grange organized the first cooperative stores in Minnesota; it established co-ops in other States. The granger movement had its beginnings in our State—1868—so this was quite natural. We do not know just how many were started between the years 1875–1900, when that organization was most active, but there were quite a number. Of these four remain to this day: Clark's Grove Mercantile Co., 1891; Farmers' Mercantile Co-op., Underwood, 1892; Nelson and Albin Mercantile Association, St. James, 1896; Union Cooperative Mercantile Co., Oxlip, 1897. They are all independents, unaffiliated with other cooperative societies.

RIGHT RELATIONSHIP LEAGUE

The Grangers slumped for a time in Minnesota. New organizations came into being here and there, but more failed. Then, in 1906, a new interest was aroused by the Right Relationship League, headed by E. M. Touseley and two other promoters. The league was apparently motivated by a high ethical purpose, as the name suggests, and, with enthusiastic promotion, they proposed to convert Minnesota to consumers' cooperation in a hurry. To this end they at one time had 16 organizers in the field, with headquarters at Minneapolis. They meant to take over one established store in each county to begin with. They also established stores in the Twin Cities, and had a wholesale in Minneapolis for 6 months. A monthly magazine, Cooperation, was published for a short time.

The Right Relationship League organized probably 50 stores, all but 3 of which are out of existence, at least as cooperatives. The three survivors are at Lindstrom, Willmar, and New York Mills. The first two are independents. The New York Mills store is a member of the smaller central at Superior.

The Right Relationship League, as the Grange before it, worked chiefly in the older and better agricultural sections of the State, although the R. R. L. did organize on the Iron Range. This situation was very natural, as in the days prior to the war northern Minnesota was much less developed than it is today. The region had the instability of a lumber and mining camp, which it essentially was. Such instability in population and industry is not conducive to cooperation.

FINNISH COOPERATORS

But it so happened that in the early part of this century Finnish immigrants began settling in that northeastern section of the State, and they brought with them the knowledge of consumers' cooperation. The movement had come to Finland in the nineties and had had a favorable development from then on. The Finns not only knew the method of cooperation but they knew the necessity of it. They had experienced hard times under the czar and had developed a spirit of communal self-reliance that other people in the New World lacked. They are cooperators by nature, and wherever they settled they started cooperative enterprises among themselves. Besides our own State, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, and Massachusetts have good cooperatives built by Finnish people.

FINNS KEEP ROCHDALE PRINCIPLES

From about 1910 on to the present the Finnish people have sponsored what is generally considered the best store movement in our State. They have kept the Rochdale principles and proved that consumers' cooperation can work even in as difficult a type of business as the retail store. Contrary to the previous experience in this country, the Finnish stores have had few failures. Of those connected with the C. C. W. only two have failed in the last 10 years, and those under unusual circumstances.

The greatest period of development for cooperative stores was from 1911 to 1922. During this 10-year period the Grange and Right Relationship League stores were still going, and the Finnish stores were spreading. Others were active independently as well. A study made in 1917 estimates that there were about 125 stores in the State in 1914. While the estimate may be high, there no doubt have been more failures than incorporations during the last two decades, bringing the total number down to 103 for 1935.

CAUSES OF FAILURE

The causes of failure have been many and complex. Seldom is it possible to give the exact cause. However, one classification of reasons for failure of 85 stores is as follows:

Inefficient management	25
Insufficient capital	15
Too liberal credit policy	14
Lack of leadership	13
Lack of cooperative spirit	11
Too many competitors	7

COOPERATIVE SPIRIT ESSENTIAL TO SUCCESS

Although the classification has merit in that it tries to be specific and designate the "last straw that broke the camel's back", all the causes but the last, "Too many competitors", can be charged up to the one called "Lack of cooperative spirit." For we now know that the stores succeed in about the same ratio as they adhere to proper cooperative principles. These cannot be followed unless the leaders and the rank and file understand what cooperation is all about, and they cannot have a proper understanding and spirit unless they have been properly educated. That is the crux of the whole movement—understanding through education.

At present the affiliated stores are going slowly ahead in numbers and rapidly ahead in trade volume. Five or six new store societies have been started in the last year or so, at least two of them with no central connections. Mergers have taken place in recent years, cutting down the number of societies. Branch stores—at least 15—increase the number of retail outlets without increasing the number of societies.

EDUCATION NECESSARY

No sudden boom of cooperative stores is anticipated, for it takes real cooperators to run a store society in our country today. A possible future growth may come about in connection with the oil associations. They are easier to establish, and after the oil associations have sold the idea of cooperation and educated the members the stores will be easier to start and maintain. This has already been done successfully in at least one Minnesota town, Cambridge.

CENTRAL COOPERATIVE WHOLESALE, SUPERIOR, WIS.

Thirty-four societies, together with about 65 in other States, own and operate a cooperative wholesale at Superior, Wis. It is generally known as the best of its kind in America, an excellent example of what loyal cooperation can do.

It was started back in 1917 with a "pass the hat" collection of $15.50, in response to discrimination against the Finnish cooperative stores during the war. In January 1935 it had a net worth of $200,000 and total assets of $315,000. It has handled $20,000,000 worth of merchandise for its members, and in 1935 sold $2,200,000 worth of goods. In addition to building up the wholesale, the C. C. W. has returned to its members in actual dividends and cash close to $300,000.

GROWTH OF SUPERIOR WHOLESALE

In 1935 the cooperative wholesale took over a fine plant which a competing wholesale was not able to maintain. It operates a bakery in Superior with an annual output of a hundred thousand dollars. Also it has as a subsidiary a publishing association which publishes among other things an excellent semimonthly cooperative paper, the Cooperative Builder, and a similar paper in Finnish, the Finnish Weekly. An auditing service is also maintained. The C. C. W. now employs 65 people.

The wholesale has expanded its services until now it handles a complete line of groceries, bakery goods, general household supplies, a limited line of clothing, hardware, and paints, feeds, petroleum and accessories. It has 200 products bearing the co-op label. It carries high-quality goods, and other grades honestly labeled as such.

NORTHERN STATES COOPERATIVE LEAGUE

In addition to its merchandising, the C. C. W. is the fountain-head for cooperative education and promotion in their part of the State. To this end it conducts training schools for employees, and other activity for members. Much of this is done in collaboration with the Northern States Cooperative League, of which the C. C. W. is the most prominent member.

The C. C. W. is a member of the Cooperative League of U. S. A., and the National Cooperatives, Inc., a petroleum wholesale federation with seven member wholesalers.

As with the local societies in the C. C. W. group, the wholesale is extremely democratic in its control. Cooperative societies, only, are members. No officers, or any other individual may hold stock. Shares are $100. Each member society has 1 vote for every 50 members, provided that for each 50 the society holds 1 share in C. C. W. The control is in this way placed securely in the hands of the ultimate consumer.

Fifteen board members are elected by the members on a district plan, and these people really manage the C. C. W. They meet at least once a month and supervise the activity of the full-time manager.

FEDERATIONS

Three groups of cooperatives in the Central Cooperative Wholesale, Minnesota territory, are organized into what are called regional federations. Each includes the cooperative stores, as well as other co-ops, within a certain region. The member societies hold all the stock in the regional, and each society has one vote; the patronage dividend is paid back to member societies. They are organized for various purposes, as for example trucking, petroleum distribution, burial service, sausage manufacture, garage operation, social purposes, and education. In other words, to do those things for which the locals are too small. Their function partially overlaps the C. C. W., but not seriously.

The three are the Range Cooperative Federation, with headquarters at Virginia, and 14 members; the Carlton County Cooperative Federation, with headquarters at Cloquet, and 12 stores, 1 creamery, and 1 oil association as members; and the C-A-P Cooperative Federation (Carlton, Atkin, Pine Co.'s), with headquarters at Kettle River, with 5 stores and 1 creamery as members.

RETAIL STORES OF CENTRAL COOPERATIVE WHOLESALE GROUP

As previously stated, all but 3 or 4 of the 34 Minnesota societies belonging to the Central Cooperative Wholesale group are located within a hundred miles of the Central Cooperative Wholesale at Superior. These societies operate 15 branches, making in all 49 retail outlets. They are federated into a central for wholesaling, education, and promotion. Most of the stores date from about 1910 on; the C. C. W. from 1917. The data for most of the information I have about this group was collected from 30 societies in 1934. (C. C. W. Yearbook, 1935.)

SIZE OF RETAIL STORE SOCIETIES

First of all, to give an idea of the size of the societies, the total assets of the smallest society were $4,147; for the largest they were $153,412; the average total assets for the 30 societies being $29,763.80. Of these assets, 59 percent were current; 11 percent, long term; and 30 percent were fixed assets—land, building, and equipment.

Of the liabilities, only 19 percent were current. This shows a strong position, since current assets were 59 percent or almost three times as great. Net worth averaged $23,798, or 82 percent of total liabilities. Of this, paid-in share capital was $12,336; reserves and undivided surplus was $11,462. All of which means that for every dollar put into the business by the consumers, there is now $1.92 in book value. In other words, the book value of the stock is about double its par value. This indicates a sound position.

Of course, averages do not tell the whole story, because some of the societies are very small and a few very large. The one with smallest paid-in-share capital had only $1,720; the largest had $70,625. Generally the shares are $10 with a limit of 20 shares per member. The general aim is to keep the interest-bearing-share capital as low as consistent with efficient operation, and gradually to build up the business by reserves instead, which do not bear interest and which are therefore social capital. About half of the societies have reserves equal to or exceeding the share capital. Five have reserves over twice as large as share capital.

VOLUME OF SALES

Now for the operation of the 30 stores. The average sales were $70,312. However, due to the extremely large sales of the Cloquet Society—$736,908—the average is not a true picture. Only eight societies are above the seventy-thousand mark. With Cloquet left out, the average is $47,325, with a low of $14,854 and a high of $178,607. Six societies had sales over a hundred thousand; 11 between one hundred thousand and fifty thousand; 14 between fifty and twenty-five thousand; and 2 between twenty-five thousand and the lowest. About $25,000 in annual sales is considered necessary for efficient operation.

LOW MARGIN ON SALES

On these sales the average gross margin was 15.16 percent. The lowest was 6.7 percent; the highest, 22.1 percent. All others were between 10 and 20 percent. The average gross margin on sales of 15.16 percent is a small margin on which to do business and makes it clear why the store business is a difficult one for cooperatives to handle in this country. The percent of gross margin on income from all sources, sales and other, was 16.14 percent.

The operating expenses ranged from a low of 7.28 percent to a high of 23 percent of total income from all sources. The average was 13.13 percent. For all societies, this left a net income of 3.01 percent of gross income from all sources. Three of the societies went into the red. It is obvious from this low average net income that the patronage dividends are small in the store cooperatives. Indeed, 4 or 5 percent is considered very good, although a few pay higher. The patronage dividends, of course, are declared only after reserves have been set aside and interest paid on capital. Some of the societies pay less than the legal rate of 6 percent on capital stock, and a few pay none, considering the shares more as certificates of membership.

NET PROFIT ABOVE THAT OF CHAIN STORES

The net profit on sales in 1933 was 0.98 percent above that for chain stores and 0.78 percent above that for the independent stores. This is due in part to the lower overhead in the country districts, but also to the efficiency of operation, as indicated by some of the co-op stores in larger towns. The salary and wage item accounts for about half of the operating expense of the stores. The figures are not at hand for the 30 stores, but for 78 co-op stores in Minnesota the managers received an average monthly salary of $110. The average of the lowest salaries paid to employees in these societies was $54.

CASH BASIS

It is the Rochdale policy to operate on a cash basis. This is not strictly adhered to by very many societies. The average credit sales in 1933 were 9 percent of annual sales, or a little over 1 month's business. The trend is toward less credit.

It may seem to some that cooperative stores which pay out only a 2- or 3-percent patronage dividend are not worth the effort. However, these are lean years everywhere; also, some societies pay considerably more. And even at the low rate, a saving of ten to thirty dollars a year by a family is a worth-while effort. In fact, it is quite an item in many families.

BIG DIVIDENDS UNIMPORTANT

However, real cooperators—and the Finns are real cooperators—are not out after big dividends. They are out for distribution at cost. And a small patronage dividend in an efficiently run store means that they are getting close to that goal. They know that the continued presence of their society is a safeguard against a return of shoddy goods and exploitation at the retail end.

GET THE CONSUMER'S DOLLAR INTO THE COOPERATIVE SYSTEM

Real cooperatives in the group also realize that the only way to build the movement back to the wholesale and into production—where exploitation is still running wild—is to get the consumer's dollar into the cooperative system. That can be done only at the retail end. And it simply must be done, even if there is no patronage dividend whatever, if the movement is to carry on its broad social program.

COOPERATIVE SOCIAL CENTERS

In many of the communities the cooperative is the social center, something which the people have in common for cultural as well as economic reasons. Some have cooperative halls for social purposes, and all of the societies carry on educational work through direct appropriations.

COOPERATIVE WORKING INDUSTRIAL UNIONS

Since 1930 the employees of the C. C. W. co-ops have sponsored a workers' union, organized on industrial lines. That is, all the employees in co-ops are eligible, regardless of their trade. The workers realize that the co-ops are different from ordinary profit business, and that they themselves are as much their own employers as the other members of the co-ops are. There is no exploitation by a small owning group. Obviously the program of the co-op and the program of the progressive union is the same—elimination of exploitation of the people by the few. So it calls for a union with that understanding. In 1934 there were about 400 members in Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan. Nearly all employees in the cooperative stores in northern Minnesota belong.

The ultimate control of the societies is vested in the full membership. They meet at least once a year at the annual meeting to determine policy, and to elect members to the board. Some societies have full membership meetings oftener. The board, of 5 to 11 members, usually 9, has control in the interim. They serve 1 to 5 years, usually 3. Some societies pay the board members, others serve for expenses only. The rate of pay ranges from one to six dollars; one or two dollars per meeting is usual.

CONCLUSION: COOPERATIVE STORES

In conclusion, it has been said that if cooperative stores are to go forward, it might be well to take a lead from the Central Cooperative Wholesale group. They are the most successful, and also the purest Rochdale cooperatives we have. At present their activity is confined to one part of our State, but the C. C. W. may see fit in the near future to capitalize on the current interest in consumers' cooperatives and carry on an aggressive expansion program into other parts of the State.

COOPERATIVE OIL ASSOCIATIONS IN MINNESOTA

The data I have on cooperative oil associations was originally compiled in part by Walter Graham and A. J. Sprang. More detailed information on cooperative oil associations in Minnesota is contained in manuscripts, with their supporting work sheets, compiled by Walter Graham, Russel Lewis, and A. J. Sprang: (1) Cooperative Oil Associations in Minnesota; (2) Business Analysis of Cooperative Oil Associations in Minnesota; (3) Petroleum Gallonage in Minnesota.

Cooperative oil associations, although comparative newcomers into the consumers' cooperative movement, have proven to be unusually successful cooperative enterprises for this country. There are now approximately 2,500 of them operating in practically every section of the United States. The cooperative oil association idea is spreading rapidly and this kind of consumers' cooperative is experiencing a healthy, vigorous growth.

WHY COOPERATIVE OIL ASSOCIATIONS ARE SUCCESSFUL

There are several reasons for this, the primary one being that the retail margin is higher on petroleum products than on most staple commodities sold in quantity to consumers. A sample study of 45 associations, most of which belong to the "Midland" group, which has its wholesale in Minneapolis, shows that the gross margin—sales minus actual cost of products—ranged from 19.44 percent to 38.26 percent, averaging 28.23 percent on sales. This rather high gross income, coupled with large volume and efficient management, makes possible a substantial net income, which has averaged 10.82 percent on sales. The net income on invested capital has ranged from 7 to 31.5 percent.

COOPERATION PAYS

A net income of this size is substantial proof to the skeptics that cooperation pays, especially since most of it is paid back as patronage dividends, after first meeting interest charges and setting aside a substantial sum for reserves.

Being such a profitable business, it not only draws in the dividend seekers, thus making it possible to sell them on the larger aspects of consumer cooperation, but it also makes expansion possible because of the reserves accumulated. Less profitable types of cooperatives are of course hampered in their growth because they are not able to attract members with large patronage dividends, nor are they able to expand rapidly without sufficient reserves.

OIL COOPERATIVES VERY SUCCESSFUL

A second reason why oil associations are successful cooperatives is that the products handled are few in number and relatively simple to merchandise. A resourceful person can soon master the actual duties of operating an oil station. Breakage, shrinkage, and spoilage are not nearly as large as in a grocery business, for example. This is not to say that management is not important. It is of great importance. But personal attention to a tremendous number of details and leaks is not so necessary and hence hired help is almost as good as a proprietor's personal care.

As we all know, cooperatives in America are chiefly a farm producer's movement. The farmers started out years ago to market their products cooperatively. It so happens that the farmers are large users of petroleum products, and so it was a perfectly natural step for them to apply their cooperative experience to the purchasing of these commodities. Because of the large margin of profit and the relative ease of handling, the rural population has been able to unite in associations representing a large volume of business, and today the cooperative oil associations are the most promising entering wedge of the consumers' cooperative movement in America.

HISTORY AND GROWTH OF CO-OP OIL ASSOCIATIONS

Cooperative oil associations in Minnesota are of recent origin. The first one dates from July 7, 1921. At that time a group of farmers organized the Cottonwood Oil Co. at Cottonwood, Minn., in the southern part of the State. This is said to be the first oil association in the United States. Although it has remained a small association to this day, it rightfully can be considered the first of a large movement. It is still a successful association and had returned $52,753.46 as patronage dividends up to 1933.

A year later the farmers around Owatonna took the example of Cottonwood and started an association, the Central Cooperative Oil Co. This is a large association at the present time.

No new stations were organized in 1923, but in 1924 they really got under way and have made rapid progress in this State ever since. There were in January 1936 about 145 associations operating in Minnesota.

As stated before, the oil association idea originated in southern Minnesota. That territory is rich farming country, and the big farms required large quantities of petroleum products for power machinery. Other parts of the State, where there is more waste land and the population is less dense, for example, the northeastern third of the State, were slower in taking up the idea. The need was not so great there. The southern fourth of the State has about as many associations as the other three-fourths combined. In 1928 the 57 active associations were distributed in 30 of the 87 counties. Only four of these counties were in the northern half of the State. Next to the southern section the western counties have the best developments. There are now associations operating in 72 counties.

PRESENT STATUS OF OIL ASSOCIATIONS

As most of the associations have branches of one kind or another, it is estimated that, all told, there are 450 retail outlets for cooperative petroleum products in the State. The exact number is not known. New ones are added or unsuccessful ones discontinued as the idea develops.

The actual number of cooperators affiliated with cooperatives dealing in petroleum products is also not known, but between forty and fifty thousand families is an approximation. This is about 5 percent of the total population of the State. As the three large cities are very young in the business as yet, the percentage for the rural part of the State would be about 7 or 8 percent, roughly.

AMOUNT OF BUSINESS DONE BY OIL ASSOCIATIONS

In 1935 the cooperatives sold 39,122,531 gallons of gasoline, 4,371,519 gallons of kerosene, 8,352,275 gallons of distillate, a combined gallonage of 51,846,325. The combined gallonage for all companies in the State was 595,105,817, which means that the cooperatives distributed 8.71 percent of the light petroleum products in Minnesota in 1935. Only one company, the Standard Oil, did a larger percentage than the cooperatives.

The cooperatives and the six largest petroleum companies account for 44.48 percent of the oil business in the State. The rest is done by nine other "old line" companies (own refineries), and 1,400 independent companies.

Cooperatives gain in percentage of States' oil business

	Co-op percentages			Percent of total light oil sold by six companies and co-ops
	Gas	Co-op Kerosene	Distillate	Standard	Co-op	Phillips	Cities Service	White Eagle	Pure Oil	Texas Co.
1933	5.99	13.47	3.43	17.94	6.13	5.00	3.64	3.59	3.57	3.45
1934	7.02	12.58	6.03	17.57	7.17	4.99	3.66	3.42	3.37	3.17
1935	9.00	14.00	8.00	17.28	8.71	5.09	3.78	3.31	3.17	3.14

The Standard has by far the largest percentage, with 17.28 percent of the total. The cooperatives come next, with 8.71 percent, a little more than half of the Standard, followed by the five others. The cooperative oil associations are becoming big business when they are second only to the Standard Oil Co.

It should be noted also—and very significant is it—that in 1934 the cooperatives gained 1.04 percent over 1933 in percent of business done in the State, going from 6.13 percent to 7.17 percent; and in 1935 the gain was even greater, 1.54 percent. Two other companies went up a trifle, but all the others lost percentage, including Standard Oil. From preliminary returns it appears that the cooperatives will show an increase in percentage of the 1936 volume of State business.

COOPERATIVES DO 71 PERCENT OF OIL BUSINESS IN KANABEC COUNTY

Although for the State as a whole the cooperatives are second, with 8.71 percent of the oil business, in some counties they are first by a huge margin. For instance, the Kanabec County cooperatives did 71 percent of the oil business in that county in 1934, more than all other companies combined, with 20 percent to spare. Nicollet County came next, with 35 percent, and Isanti third, with 33 percent, of the oil business in their respective counties. Contrasted with this, 15 counties had no societies or branches at all in 1933. Seventy-two of the eighty-seven counties have at least one society or branch. Leaving the three largest cities out of account, the co-ops did 12.9 percent of the retail petroleum business in the State.

The oil associations do a tremendous business. A computation based on 45 typical associations shows that their average sales in 1933 amounted to $53,986.55. The 135 associations, on that basis, had a business of about $7,288,184.25, a huge business to be carried on cooperatively, on a nonprofit basis, by a system started from nothing only 14 years ago.

FINANCIAL POSITION AND RETURNS

On the total sales the gross income of the 45 associations ranged from 19.44 percent to 38.26 percent on sales in 1933, depending on transportation charges and trade conditions, such as price wars. The average gross was 28.23 percent. These same associations had operating expenses varying from slightly below 10 percent up to as high as 30 percent of gross sales. The average was 17.33 percent, leaving an average net income for the 45 associations of 10.82 percent on sales.

Five associations in 1933 had a net income on sales of less than 5 percent; 16 had between 5 percent and 10 percent; 19 had between 10 percent and 15 percent; 3 had between 15 percent and 20 percent; and 2 associations had net incomes over 20 percent of sales. In dollars the average net income was $5,839.55. When stated in terms of capital investment the net earnings ranged between 7 percent and 31.5 percent.

HOW COOPERATIVE INCOME IS DIVIDED

The net income of a cooperative is usually divided four ways. According to law, 10 percent must be set aside for surplus until the accumulated surplus equals half the paid-in capital. Interest up to 6 percent may be paid on capital shares. A sum is set aside for education and expansion. And, lastly, the remainder may be distributed pro rata on purchases.

It is not known what the total earnings for all the oil associations have been since they began, but there are figures to show that they have been large, indeed. For instance, in 1933 the consolidated balance sheet for 52 associations shows that the average capital stock was $9,283.55 and the reserves and surplus $13,991.17. Net worth, or claim of stockholders against assets—the two items combined—totaled $23,274.72. This indicates that the book value of the stock was 2.29 times its par value. In other words, a $10 share of stock has now, on the average, a book value of $22.90. Few stocks are like that these days.

FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS RETURNED TO CO-OP PATRONS

The increase in net worth is not the real reward for cooperation in the oil associations. The associations actually disburse interest on the stock and also patronage dividends. In 1933 the oil associations of Minnesota returned approximately $500,000 in savings to patrons. The percent patronage dividend on sales ranged from 4 to 18 percent, with an estimated average of 8 to 10 percent. This is over and above interest on stock, reserves, and surplus.

DIVIDENDS PAID BY CO-OP OIL ASSOCIATION

The aggregate patronage dividends over a period of years is, of course, very large. I am presenting a table of eight associations, selected without regard to size or success, which give an idea of this. The period of years covered and the aggregate dividends paid are shown.

Association	Period (inclusive)	Aggregate dividends
1	1925–33	$308,341.57
2	1925–33	232,506.92
3	1924–33	169,880.11
4	1926–33	134,236.32
5	1926–33	59,658.73
6	1928–33	49,080.40
7	1930–33	43,647.52
8	1924–33	34,722.43

These dividends have the effect of over $1,000,000 of "farm relief" administered by only 8 of the 135 associations. Cooperation pays cash benefits in addition to the more intangible social benefits derived from self-help and mutual aid.

TYPES OF RETAIL OIL SOCIETIES

The 145 cooperatives retailing petroleum products in Minnesota can be divided into two types—consumer-member associations and oil departments of other cooperatives—depending on whether the consumer owns stock directly in a cooperative established primarily for the purpose of distributing petroleum products, or whether the consumer is interested in petroleum products secondarily through membership in some other kind of cooperative.

The first type, which the consumers own and control directly, is by far the most common. One hundred and twenty-one of the cooperative associations handling petroleum products are of this type. The remaining 24 organizations handling oil products as a department, and not simply as a branch or "pump accounts" of another association, are as follows: Cooperative creameries (6), cooperative elevators (11), cooperative stores (5), and the Minnesota Farm Bureau supply companies (2). Some of these are complete with pumps and bulk plant (storage tanks on railroad siding). Others have only service pumps.

REGIONAL OIL ASSOCIATIONS (RETAIL)

In the northern part of the State a number of cooperative societies with oil departments are organized into what are called regional associations. In all, 31 stores, 2 creameries, and 1 oil association are so organized into 3 regionals. One of these, the Range Cooperative Oil Association (Range Co-op Federation), with headquarters at Virginia, is owned by 14 cooperative stores. Individual consumers own and control it only indirectly through their local store. The stores are the only stockholders in the association. They get the patronage dividends and, in turn, pass them on to the consumer, together with dividends earned from the store proper. This regional is really one "oil association", owned by 14 stockholders, distributing oil to its 14 member societies, which operate oil departments in connection with their stores.

The Trico Co-op Oil Association (Carlton Co. Co-op Federation), with headquarters at Cloquet, is another such regional. It is owned by 12 stores, 1 creamery, and 1 oil cooperative. A third regional is the C-A-P Co-op Oil Association (C-A-P Co-op Federation) with headquarters at Kettle River. It is the smallest of the three with only five stores and one creamery as members. It will not be necessary to elaborate further on these regionals or any of the other set-ups in which petroleum is handled as a department of another type of cooperative. The oil associations are better understood by a study of the consumer-member type.

CONSUMER-MEMBER OIL ASSOCIATIONS

A typical consumer-member oil association is organized and set up much the same as any other Rochdale cooperative in Minnesota. The Rochdale principles as codified in the 1923 law and subsequent amendments are followed. The interested parties get together, hold meetings, and draw up articles of incorporation and bylaws. After these have been properly filed and permission obtained to sell stock, the subscription of capital is undertaken. The stock is of low par value, usually $10. The purpose is primarily to unite people and their patronage, not dollars, so a wide distribution of stock is desired.

Societies have been formed and successfully operated with as few as 68 stockholders and only a few hundred dollars capital. Several associations are successful with less than a hundred members. One hundred members is a safe minimum, if they are farmers. In general, the cooperatives are undercapitalized at first and need help from the better established cooperatives through the cooperative wholesale. As the patronage and membership grow, the capital and surplus becomes sufficient for working capital and expansion.

ORGANIZATION OF CONSUMER-MEMBER OIL ASSOCIATIONS

After sufficient capital has been accumulated to start the association going, the stockholders elect a board of directors to carry on the work, such as acquiring leases or property, hiring a manager, and exercising general supervision. The board is responsible to the members and the management to the board. Full membership meetings are held at least once a year, at which the affairs of the association are thrashed out. Some associations meet oftener. The boards usually have monthly meetings. In practice, the degree of membership supervision, director control, or employee control varies, depending on the interest and aggressiveness of the parties concerned. Generally speaking, however, the business of the oil associations is carried on democratically by the members through their boards and managers.

OIL ASSOCIATIONS START ON SMALL SCALE

The associations, of course, start out in a small way with a single bulk plant, perhaps, from which the tank trucks haul the products to the farmers' storage barrels on the farms. It may have a service station also in the town. Or a new association may start without a bulk plant, operating a service station only, buying from a bulk plant of another cooperative, or from a private company. Nine associations follow this practice, five of them in the Twin Cities. Twenty-four of the one hundred and thirty-six associations which operate bulk plants have one or more branch bulk stations strategically located in other towns, and even in other counties. An association in Freeborn County has eight branches, two of which are in an adjacent county. The other associations have fewer branches, however, varying from one to five. In all, there are about 50 branch bulk plants, making 186 bulk stations operated by cooperatives in Minnesota in 1935.

PUMP ACCOUNTS

In addition to these bulk plants and the service stations owned and operated directly by the association, most of the associations have several other retail outlets commonly known as pump accounts. These are service stations or curb pumps, neither owned nor operated by the association. They are usually privately owned. The oil association merely sells the co-op products to these accounts at a substantial discount, 3 to 4 cents per gallon on gasoline, and the operator of the pump account resells it. Some associations have an arrangement so that patronage dividends can be paid on purchases from the resellers. Others have no such arrangement, and the only advantage to the cooperative or the cooperators is the small margin by the association. The practice is not in accord with good Rochdale principles, which call for distribution to consumer, not sale to private dealers.

The reason for this violation at present is either the lack of capital and membership necessary for establishing a real association or branch or else the impracticability of doing so. In the meantime these accounts increase the volume of co-op products distributed, and in this way help build up the cooperative wholesales.

MANAGEMENT OF OIL STATIONS

The stations operated by an association are in the charge of a manager, who is usually paid a salary of from one to two hundred dollars a month, depending on the size of the association and the responsibility assumed. Some associations pay the manager on a commission basis. Tank-truck drivers are paid either by salary or commission. In general, the straight salary is preferred in a cooperative, as it eliminates undesirable sales tactics and the speculative attitude. Also a fixed salary makes possible a more uniform division of wages to all employees. This is a good cooperative policy—the leveling of incomes up or down, so that all employees get a respectable living wage.

CASH BASIS IS CO-OP AIM

A second operating problem of utmost importance to a cooperative is the credit policy. Although credit trading is contrary to Rochdale principles, the oil associations, with a few exceptions, have been driven into it by the current practice of regular oil companies. Credit trading not only is dangerous because of the losses incurred but it ties up a large part of the working capital. Most of the associations can illafford this, especially when they are young and low on surplus. The average "accounts and notes receivable" for 52 typical associations in 1933 was $6,616.22, or 23.42 percent of the total assets. This is potentially a very dangerous position, but by constant effort the drivers, managers, and boards have kept the actual loss very low, estimated as much less than 1 percent.

SUMMARY—RETAIL OIL COOPERATIVES

To sum up the organization of retail cooperative oil distribution in Minnesota, we can say that there are 145 associations, 3 of which are of the regional type as described; 50 branch bulk stations; 24 oil departments of other societies (not connected with a regional); a number of branch service stations; and many pump accounts. In all, probably 450 retail outlets, the exact figures not known.

CENTRAL FEDERATED OIL ORGANIZATIONS

Approximately two-thirds of the oil associations in Minnesota have followed the established Rochdale practice of federating into central organizations for carrying on the cooperative program. Of the 145 associations, 90 are affiliated with cooperative wholesale organizations. Forty-nine buy from sources other than cooperatives and six buy from unknown sources. These 49 (or 55) associations, therefore, are not contributing to the larger purpose of the cooperative movement, which aims to gain control of the distribution system from start to finish, and, wherever possible, take over production also. These 55 unaffiliated cooperatives simply effect a saving to the consumer at the retail end, a practical and worth-while motive but not of as great social and economic significance as the affiliated organizations.

FOUR CENTRAL OIL ASSOCIATIONS

There are four central organizations, or wholesales, handling petroleum and related products in Minnesota. This means that even the 90 oil associations with cooperative wholesale connections are somewhat divided in their efforts. The four wholesales duplicate services in several ways, and even compete with each other. Criticism has been made that the associations are all weakened by the dissension and cooperators who believe in the Rochdale principles hope that the points of difference will be resolved and that eventually Minnesota and neighboring States will be served through one united wholesale. The present situation is understandable in its historic origin.

1. MIDLAND COOPERATIVE WHOLESALE, 739 JOHNSON STREET NE., MINNEAPOLIS

In point of time, the Midland Cooperative Wholesale was first in the field with a brokerage organization in 1926. It was then known as the Minnesota Cooperative Oil Co., a nonstock, nonprofit business, financed by membership fees. Since then it has grown steadily until, in 1935, it did a business of almost $2,500,000 through 135 affiliated oil associations who own and control it. Sixty-five of these are in Minnesota. This leaves 25 associations to the other 3 centrals. In other words, the Midland has two and one-half times as many affiliates in Minnesota as the other three combined.

I have a table summarizing the progress of Midland from its beginning:

Growth of Midland Cooperative Wholesale from beginning

Year	Tank cars	Tota lsales	Percent increase	Tota lassets	Net income	Percent of sales
1935	4,004	$2,423,105.77	38.4	$321,999.81	$61,729.65	2.50
1934	3,209	1,751,006.75	63.1	239,085.40	44,798.98	2.57
1933	2,313	1,073,566.57	21.5	187,341.50	25,465.53	2.37
1932	1,783	883,736.31	43.6	132,699.07	26,905.54	3.05
1931	1,741	615,387.86	2.9	67,731.46	21,162.99	3.44
1930	1,062	598,750.57	33.6	33,646.04	14,803.58	2.47
1929	649	448,012.52	7.2	18,911.33	7,797.95	1.74
1928	638	417,956.19	54.8	9,832.18	3,926.33	.94
1927	580	269,862.78	----------	4,466.66	3,473.07	1.29

The growth is unusual, especially considering that 6 of the 9 years are depression years when other business systems were behaving quite differently.

Over 73 percent of sales were of gasoline, kerosene, and distillate. Lubricating oils came next with over 10 percent of sales, the rest distributed among accessories, tires, and batteries, and so forth.

In 1931 the wholesale acquired its own building and a blending plant for lubricating oils. In 1934 the organization was changed to a capital stock cooperative. As to the financial policy of the Midland, the wholesale has been built up entirely from savings, without capital subscriptions of any kind. The patronage dividends due member associations, after required membership shares of common stock have been earned, are issued as additional common stock or as preferred stock. On these obligations the wholesale pays interest to the associations.

MIDLAND ACTIVE IN ORGANIZATION WORK

Like all cooperative wholesales, Midland is active in the field organizing new cooperatives and promoting cooperation generally. Besides the 65 affiliates in Minnesota, Midland has 70 associations outside the State, mostly in Wisconsin. The wholesale follows a policy of constant expansion into new territory and new lines of activity. Recently, a branch wholesale has been established in Milwaukee. Lately, they have entered into such new lines as coal, paints, steel products, and some farm supplies. They have sponsored automobile insurance, credit unions, and rural electrification. The central organization is vitally interested in education and conducts schools and conferences for this purpose. It also publishes a monthly paper, The Midland Cooperator.

2. FARMERS' UNION CENTRAL EXCHANGE

The wholesale having the second largest number of affiliates in Minnesota is the Farmers' Union Central Exchange, of South St. Paul. It is a larger organization than the one previously discussed with 227 associations in all, but most of its associations are in North Dakota. It has 15 in Minnesota.

As the name suggests, it is a business enterprise carried on in connection with the Farmers' Union, an educational and protective organization. The Farmers' Union Terminal Association of St. Paul started the exchange in 1927, as a subsidiary, capitalized at $1,000. The Midland (1926) and this Central had their small beginnings about the same time. The Farmers' Union, however, did not take on petroleum products until 1929. They both experienced rapid growth, and a natural, though unfortunate, rivalry resulted.

I have a table showing this growth from 1931, in which year the wholesale was reorganized into its present set-up under the Minnesota cooperative law of 1923. Included in the sales are those made at the wholesale's several retail branches. These accounts boost the totals considerably as they are carried at the retail price, which is higher than the wholesale price by about 25 percent.

Growth of Farmers' Union Central Exchange from 1931

Year	Tank cars	Total sales	Percent increase	Total assets	Net income	Percent of sales
1935	5,244	$4,028,086.24	54.0	$582,800.51	$101,309.33	2.51
1934	3,362	2,615,519.03	68.8	335,523.07	55,467.60	2.12
1933	2,403	1,549,223.05	8.3	216,452.99	22,066.41	1.42
1932	2,210	1,678,345.64	85.2	161,915.18	24,013.83	1.43
1931	1,393	906,272.30	----------	99,532.92	4,959.18	.54

The total sales were made up over 60 percent by gasoline, kerosene, distillate; about 15 percent oils and grease; and 11 percent flour and feed; the rest in equipment, tires, twine, and other items.

NEW HOME OF FARMERS UNION CENTRAL EXCHANGE

In 1935 the exchange built a fine modern office, warehouse, and blending plant at South St. Paul, and now compounds its own oils the same as "Midland." The entire business has been built up from its initial $1,000 capital to total assets of $582,800.51 by retaining the savings in the business and crediting the member associations with their respective shares.

The Farmers' Union group of oil associations has been criticized by the more orthodox Rochdale cooperators on the score that it is attached to a politically minded farm class organization. While the charge is of course true—inasmuch as full voting membership is limited to farmers; and bankers, lawyers, and absentee landlords are denied the right of any kind of membership, and a check-off system is used for collecting Farmers' Union dues from patronage dividend accounts—yet it is claimed that these political and class characteristics are being gradually eliminated to comply with the open membership and political neutrality of Rochdale cooperatives. It is an historical process, and when completed the way will be open for more united action among the cooperatives of the Northwest. In other respects its commercial and educational activity is similar to the Midland, described above.

3. CENTRAL COOPERATIVE WHOLESALE

The third cooperative wholesale dealing in petroleum products is the Central Cooperative Wholesale of Superior, Wis. Although it is primarily a grocery wholesale, it took on petroleum in 1935 on a brokerage basis. Its Minnesota accounts are all in the northern part of the State, for the most part associated with the cooperative stores. The Central Cooperative Wholesale has about six associations buying through it.

4. FARM BUREAU SERVICE CO.

The fourth and last organization to take up the wholesale distribution of petroleum products was the Farm Bureau Service Co. This organization already was in the farm supply business in a small way and merely added this in June 1935. It has only two or three accounts in the State.

NATIONAL COOPERATIVES, INC.

Three of these wholesales discussed are members of the National Cooperatives, Inc., a national federation of wholesales. These three are the Midland Cooperative Wholesale, the Farmers' Union Central Exchange, and the Central Cooperative Wholesale. Five or six other wholesales in various sections of the country dealing in petroleum, farm supplies, and other commodities complete the organization.

National Cooperatives, Inc., Chicago, Ill., was established in 1933 to serve as buying agent for its members, thus pooling their bargaining power. Also, it is designed to render other useful services, such as legal and legislative assistance, and to coordinate the work in general. The organization is not perfected as yet, but during the last 3 years it has justified its existence and plans are being made to expand its activity. It did a nineteen-million-dollar business in 1934.

CONCLUSION: COOPERATIVE OIL DISTRIBUTION

This completes the story of cooperative oil distribution in Minnesota up to 1936. The progress has been remarkable, and the prospects are that the cooperatives will go forward to new achievements in the years ahead. Indeed, it may well be that the consumers will eventually dominate the oil-distribution business in the State. And success in this one field will show the possibilities for consumers' cooperation in other lines.

FARM-SUPPLY COOPERATIVES IN MINNESOTA

For my information on farm-supply cooperatives I am indebted particularly to San Morison; also to bulletin no. 1, put out by the Cooperative Division of the Farm Credit Administration, entitled "Cooperative Purchasing of Farm Supplies" by Joseph G. Knapp and John H. Lister.

Before going into the subject of farm-supply cooperatives it may be well to get clearly in mind the distinction between the "ultimate consumer" and the "producer consumer." The distinction is fundamental, although a definite demarcation of the two is not easy. A gradation exists between the two.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN ULTIMATE CONSUMER AND PRODUCER CONSUMER

For brevity we can say that the ultimate consumer procures and uses goods and services for maintaining himself as a person, while the producer consumer procures and uses goods and services for maintaining himself as a producer. Examples of the ultimate-consumer goods are groceries, clothing, housing; and in the case of the farmer, producer's goods are seeds, feeds, fertilizer, machinery, and so forth.

The distinction is quite important, because in the former case the farmer is interested in cooperation as a consumer, and in the second case as a producer—opposite ends of the economic system. The farmer presents a unique case, for he is producer and consumer in one person and has found that cooperation pays in every economic activity of his life—producing, marketing, and consuming. He achieves all three by a similar method, uniting with others of common interests to eliminate all unnecessary steps and expenses in carrying out the three functions.

I have already mentioned store cooperatives. For the most part, excepting those that carry farm supplies as a side line, these co-ops serve the ultimate consumer and are the best example of pure consumers' cooperatives. The oil associations are only consumers' cooperatives, in the ultimate sense, insofar as their products are used for domestic or pleasure purposes. Most of the products sold through them at present are used in the process of production. Exceptions to this are some associations that have recently been set up in the cities. If the farmer were not an individual but a factory, the distinction would be more apparent, and his purchases as a producer and as a consumer would not be confused.

Only when the term consumer is construed in its broad sense, meaning "user", can farm-oil associations and farm-supply cooperatives be considered consumer cooperation. Inasmuch as the cooperative movement in this country is chiefly rural we use the expression "consumer cooperation" in this broad sense, meaning "user." England, Sweden, and other countries make a clearer distinction.

THE ORIGIN OF FARM-SUPPLY COOPERATIVES

The American farmer first, quite naturally, thought of himself as a producer. Almost everyone in this country does. He soon discovered he was being exploited in marketing. So he took up cooperative marketing to stop it. Then it also appeared that the materials he used in line of production were always too high in price and frequently of inferior quality. So he took to buying farm supplies cooperatively. Now this realization is urging the farmer, as well as the town people, on to the logical end, that of pure consumer cooperation, for the purpose of supplying himself as an ultimate consumer.

However, the great bulk of the $365,000,000 worth of goods bought cooperatively in 1934 in this country was farm supplies. The Farm Credit Administration estimates it at $250,000,000, or about 70 percent of the total cooperative purchases in this country.

HISTORY AND ORGANIZATION OF FARM SUPPLY COOPERATIVES

Every farm organization that has sprung up in the United States has in some form or other sponsored cooperatives, purchasing as well as marketing. The Grange shortly after the Civil War and up to the eighties was strong for cooperative purchasing. The Grange left its influence with succeeding organizations, and even today the Grange sponsors cooperation, notably in the Pacific Northwest.

The Farmers' Alliance followed. And in 1902 the Farmers' Union was established. The Farmers' Union has been active in farm supply as well as other phases of cooperation, and is going strong today in this field, with two large central organizations, one at Omaha and one in St. Paul. There are the Farmers' Union State Exchange and the Farmers' Union Central Exchange. Neither, however, is connected with the national organization at present.

The Society of Equity, 1902, did its bit and faded out. In 1917 the Farmers' Equity Union came in with elevators and creameries, carrying farm supplies as side lines in many cases.

In 1911 the most influential farm organization engaged in cooperative purchasing was started, the Farm Bureau. It now has organizations in 45 States, and 17 of these have cooperative service companies sponsored by the bureaus. Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio are especially strong.

INDEPENDENT FARM-SUPPLY ORGANIZATIONS

Besides these farm organizations which have sponsored buying of farm supplies, either through supply companies or as side lines of marketing co-ops, several independent organizations have taken up the work. Notable among these are the Eastern States Farmers Exchange, 1918. Another, the Cooperative Grange League Federation Exchange, 1920, is the largest in the United States, with a $24,000,000 business in 1934.

Four other centrals, independent of farm organizations and which deal principally in petroleum products, are the Midland Cooperative Wholesale, Minneapolis; Consumers' Cooperative Association, North Kansas City; Consumers Cooperatives Associated, Amarillo, Tex.; and the National Cooperatives, Chicago. The last is a superorganization for seven regional wholesales, some of which have been named. Here great things are expected in the future.

At least three large independent marketing organizations have gone in for farm supplies as a side line: The Land O' Lakes, Minneapolis; Fruit Growers Supply Co. (California Fruit Growers Exchange); and the Washington Cooperative Egg and Poultry Association. In all there are estimated to be 6,000 local, primarily marketing cooperatives in the country carrying side lines, many of which buy through the various centrals.

In summary, the farm-supply cooperatives have been developed in the following four ways: (a) Buying co-ops, sponsored by a farm organization; (b) Buying co-ops developed independently; (c) As a side line of marketing co-ops, sponsored by farm organizations; and (d) As a side line of marketing co-ops, developed independently.

HOW FARM-SUPPLY COOPERATIVES ARE ORGANIZED

As to organization, they may be classified as local and regional. The locals restrict their activity to a convenient area, usually a county, or a part of one. Examples are the oil associations, creameries with side lines, and farm-bureau units. The regionals, or centrals, are usually wholesale agencies, serving a federation of independent locals; or they may be centralized set-ups which operate locals as part of a chain; or they may be a combination of the two, having both federated locals and branch locals for outlets.

Some of the supplies are delivered from the car door direct to the farmer, but most farm-supply co-ops have warehouses. Some of the centrals handle their goods by consignment through private dealers, or farmer agents. Some cooperators prefer the locally owned, autonomous, federated cooperative society because they believe it makes for local responsibility and for safety through democratic control.

PRODUCTS HANDLED BY FARM-SUPPLY CO-OPS

The principal products handled are feeds, fertilizers, seeds, machinery, twine, wire, insecticides, paint, package supplies, and such other commodities needed in quantity by the farmer as a producer. Co-ops have led the way in establishing high, dependable quality. Price reductions in the commodities to all users, whether members or not, have been worth while. Patronage dividends to members are substantial.

Several of the farm-supply co-ops have gone in for production, too. Feeds and fertilizers, seed cleaning, oil blending, package material, and other things of a production nature have been undertaken extensively and successfully. The purpose is to continue this expansion into all lines.

GROWTH OF FARM-SUPPLY COOPERATIVES

Since 1929 the amount of farm supplies purchased cooperatively has about doubled. The estimate is now a quarter billion dollars per year. This is approximately 10 percent of the total spent by our farmers for such supplies per average year—1926–33. Figures for 1929, when the dollar volume was half what it is now, showed that Minnesota led all States in the number of farms reporting cooperative purchases. Minnesota was sixth, however, in total dollar volume in 1929. The comparison between the various States for later dates is not available.

SITUATION IN MINNESOTA (FARM SUPPLY CO-OPS)

In 1929, according to the Fifteenth Census, 21.4 percent of Minnesota farms reported cooperative purchases. This was 4 percent higher than the next State, Michigan. In that year the report showed that the cooperative purchases of farm supplies totaled $6,414,232, or $162 per farm. We were sixth from the top in total, and fifth from the bottom in amount per farm, meaning that in our State a great many farmers have cooperative connections, but they buy less per farm than do the farmers in 43 States. This is probably because we are a dairy State, not a vegetable and fruit State, which enterprises require more supplies and equipment not raised on the farm.

These figures do not represent the present status in our State. The total cooperative sales of farm supplies in United States has doubled since 1929, in dollar value, and more than doubled in volume. An estimate would then be that Minnesota bought cooperatively about $15,000,000 worth of farm supplies in 1935. That is a rough figure arrived at by gross calculations.

About seven million of this fifteen million was petroleum products distributed by about 145 associations through 450 outlets.

Some of the rural oil associations carry regular farm supplies as a side line. Twine and paint are favorites, but almost everything used by the farmer such as fertilizer, feed, seeds, steel products, machinery, and salt are carried by one association or another. At present this business is secondary and no figures are available to show the percentage of farm supplies handled. It is planned to expand these lines, using these well-established co-ops as entering wedges for a complete line. The cooperative wholesales operating in this State, have this as a policy and are actively carrying it out.

This continuous expansion is an excellent cooperative principle, especially as far as the oil associations go. It serves to unify cooperative purchasing into one strong association whose primary purpose is buying and distributing at cost.

Most of the cooperative stores carry items which come under the heading of farm supplies, as opposed to consumer supplies. Small tools, feeds, twine, salt, fertilizer, seeds, machinery, and other items are carried. No figures are available to show the extent, but it probably exceeds the purely farm-supply business done by oil associations.

A third group of primary purchasing co-ops are sponsored by the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, through its service company established in 1932. Operations are small as yet, the total sales in 1934 being $216,040. Sales were made through local Farm Bureau service companies, less than 10 of which have warehouses; also through local co-ops such as creameries and elevators, and to a considerable extent through private dealers on consignment or commission basis. Some objection has been made to this last practice on the ground that it is not consistent with good cooperative methods.

MARKETING COOPERATIVES ENTER COOPERATIVE PURCHASING BUSINESS

These three groups (rural oil associations, cooperative stores, and Farm Bureau service companies) are primarily purchasing or consumer cooperatives. In Minnesota, as in other States, however, marketing cooperatives have taken on cooperative purchasing as a side line. Of these the farmers' cooperative elevators do the largest business. Farm supplies fit in with the elevators because of the storage space available during slack seasons, the weighing and loading facilities, trackage, and the natural contact with the farmer as his marketing agent. Many elevators have found that a farm supply line is a stabilizer sufficient to keep them from going bankrupt during bad years.

About 250 farmers' elevators carry side lines. That is, almost all of them in operation. Thirty-five side lines were carried by one or more elevators, in the following order of importance: Coal, feeds, oil meal, flour, tankage, mineral feed, twine, autos, tractors, tires, implements, hardware, and so forth. Feed grinding has become important in recent years also. Between 25 and 30 percent carry implements, usually the prison-made line. Eleven have bulk-oil stations.

Cooperative creameries are second in importance among the essentially marketing cooperatives in farm supplies handled. Due to the sanitary requirements of creameries, they are not so adaptable as elevators for handling supplies. A great many of the several hundred in the State do, however, handle creamery and poultry supplies and also flour and feeds. Six creameries have oil departments also. The total amount sold to farmers through creameries is not known.

Besides the five groups discussed above—oil, store, farm bureau, elevator, and creamery cooperatives—there are several smaller, scattered organizations which pool their buying power.

CENTRAL ORGANIZATIONS DEALING IN FARM SUPPLIES

We have in Minnesota four centrals that deal in farm supplies. Together with the Central Cooperative Wholesale of Superior, Wis., which also operates in our State, these four handle a considerable fraction of the farm supplies retailed through the many local outlets. Just how much is impossible to say; but of the $8,000,000 estimated for the State (exclusive of petroleum) roughly, a million and three-quarters dollars, or less than a fourth, is acquired through a central ccoperative organization.

Although this is a gross calculation, it is a reasonably true picture of the situation. It means that the cooperative farm-supply endeavors in our State are not well coordinated. There are local distributing units which do not buy within the movement and therefore do not contribute fully to cooperative progress. They are merely making a saving at the retail end, passing up the real benefits to be made by entering the wholesaling and manufacturing fields. The real job for the future lies in bringing these retail units together for united effort.

LAND O'LAKES HANDLES FARM SUPPLIES

Leaving petroleum out of the picture for the rest of the discussion, the Land O'Lakes association of creamery cooperatives, with headquarters in Minneapolis, handled more supplies than any of the other four centrals. That organization sold approximately $1,108,140 worth of supplies in Minnesota in 1935. Most of it was machinery and supplies for creameries, but also such supplies as feed and flour were sold to the individual farmer. Net earnings for their supply business in Minnesota was about $68,500. The net earnings are usually returned as patronage dividends or Land O'Lakes securities. Since the beginning about $16,000,000 worth have been distributed in our State, on which the dividend was about $887,000. A decidedly worth-while saving to the farmers of the State.

The Land O'Lakes organization is a federation of local creameries which are autonomous and subject only to local control. Creameries only are members of the central, the individual farmers belonging only through their locals. Although the Land O'Lakes was started with a small sum provided by the Farm Bureau, it is now independent of any farm organization.

FARMERS' UNION AND FARM BUREAU IN FARM-SUPPLY BUSINESS

Next to the Land O'Lakes, the Farm Bureau has the largest sale of farm supplies in the State. In 1934 it amounted to $216,040, on which a $5,101 net earnings was shown. The net was applied on a previous deficit. The Farm Bureau Service Co., St. Paul, is sponsored by the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation. Membership is through local county units. Inasmuch as sales are made directly to the individual and also through member bureaus, the Farm Bureau Service Co. is a combination of the federated and centralized systems of organization. It is essentially a farm organization with cooperatives as a part of its program

Another farm organization, the Farmers' Union, has affiliates which distribute some farm supplies in Minnesota, although the bulk of its business is outside our State. The Farmers' Union Central Exchange, South St. Paul, has 15 oil associations in Minnesota, through which some supplies are sold. It is essentially a federated set-up, but has a few branches as well, and to that extent is centralized.

It is estimated that about a hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of farm supplies are sold in Minnesota by the Central Cooperative Wholesale, Superior, Wis., through its stores. This is a federated, nonfarm organization system operating on a fine cooperative basis. The business policy is the same as for all the lines carried by the C. C. W.

And lastly, the Midland Cooperative Wholesale, Minneapolis, which is also a federated purchasing organization and unaffiliated with any farm organization—the same as the C. C. W.—handles a few lines besides petroleum that go under the heading of farm supplies. Twine, paint, steel fencing, and roofing are the chief items. The total amount is not large as yet, but the Midland plans an ever-expanding program along this line through its affiliated oil associations.

CONCLUSION: FARM SUPPLY COOPERATIVES

After briefly surveying the cooperative farm-supply purchasing set-ups in Minnesota, several facts stand out: the isolation of many units, the uncoordinated state of the business, and the duplication of service by at least three of the centrals. This is the natural result of an evolutionary development such as the movement has experienced. Systems of coordination are now being studied. The future will show much greater progress.

CREDIT UNIONS IN MINNESOTA

Cooperatives are usually thought of as being associations dealing in commodities. That usually is the case. However, almost any service useful to people in business can be, and has been, provided by the cooperative method. One of these services, and a very important one indeed, is credit and savings facilities. In our complicated business world, using a money system, these two services are indispensable. People who wish to avoid exploitation in the field of finance have taken charge of it themselves—that is, provided it cooperatively.

A great deal of information on this subject has been collected in a manuscript on Credit Unions in Minnesota by Clyde Buell and Russel Lewis.

WHAT A CREDIT UNION IS

To this end a type of organization known in this country as a credit union has been developed. A credit union is simply a small people's bank which provides savings and small loans facilities to its members on a cooperative basis. A money pool, operated by and for the people. The credit union is a method for eliminating the human parasites which insert themselves into the people's financial affairs and use the people's own money for swindling the very same people.

ELIMINATE LOAN SHARKS

The usury exacted by loan sharks, up to a thousand percent and more, oppresses thousands who are driven into their clutches. The high legal rates charged by authorized loan companies cut down the living standard of millions. Also, installment buying through sales organizations exacts a high tribute, cutting down the real wages of the people. The extent of this sort of exploitation is amazing. Much of it is under cover because of its illegality, and most of the legal business is concealed by confusing rate schedules and discount schemes that most people are not able to figure out. Credit unions are designed to meet these problems.

In addition they serve other functions. They provide a convenient means for systematic saving, they make credit available at fair rates to people who have no credit at banks, and they educate people to budget their incomes carefully, and how to get their incomes converted into real wages—goods and services—without letting too much of it slip through their fingers.

Although the credit-union movement has only recently come to our country, it is an established institution in many of the older countries. It was officially started just 5 years after the Rochdale pioneers in 1844 got a firm foothold for the store cooperative. The credit unions began in another country, Germany, 1849.

HISTORY OF CREDIT UNIONS IN EUROPE AND UNITED STATES

The idea of people's banks, or, as we call them, credit unions, sprang from the dire need experienced by some farmers in Germany during a drought and famine in the eighteen-forties. Frederick William Raiffeisen met the issue by organizing the rural villages into credit groups, in which those who had a surplus of funds would deposit and from which the rest could borrow against the time when they would again be financially able. Also, as a group, they could obtain funds from outside agencies.

By recommendation of his neighbors, the farmer became a member and shared in the privilege, depositing and borrowing, and of voting—"one-man one-vote." No interest was paid on deposits, the desire being to build an indivisible revenue through earnings—social capital in other words. The sole income was from interest on loans, and the rates were low. Loans were made for productive or provident purposes upon security that the fellow credit unionists thought adequate. The stockholders were liable without limit for all claims, so the organization could borrow from outside sources and reloan to members. The essential features of the Raiffeisen banks, as they came to be called, are the restricted community membership, their democratic control, and the mutual nature of the business. Since 1889, they have had a share-capital structure.

Raiffeisen banks were planned for rural people, but another type of credit society was started at the same time, 1849, by Herman Schultze-Delitsch, in Saxony. It was a mutual organization, like the Raiffeisen banks, but was adapted for towns and cities. The Schultze-Delitsch bank had larger membership, paid offices, sold shares, took deposits, and paid dividends. They had limited liability and were less democratic.

GROWTH OF COOPERATIVE BANKS

With modifications these mutual or cooperative people's banks have grown in numbers throughout the world. Today there are thousands of them, both in the old countries of Europe and the Orient and in the newer countries of the West. The United States has about 4,000. In several countries they are extremely influential factors in the banking structure of the countries, some of them through central banks.

CREDIT UNIONS COME TO AMERICA

The credit unions came to America in 1900, when Alphonse Desjardins started a credit union at Levis, Quebec Province, within a Catholic parish. It was modeled after the Raiffeisen type. Then, in 1909, Desjardins was influential in setting up one among the French millworkers in Manchester, N. H., also within a Catholic parish. That was the first in the United States and is still going strong as the second largest in our country.

At this time, 1909, Edward A. Filene, a Boston merchant, became interested in the idea as a social program for working people. After going over the problem with Desjardins, Filene was instrumental in getting the first credit-union law in the United States through the Massachusetts Legislature in 1909. From then on until 1921 nine more States passed enabling legislation for credit unions. But it was not until 1927 that a systematic drive was begun to credit-unionize the United States; and again E. A. Filene was the godfather—this time as a philanthropist—giving up to 1935, about a million dollars.
